It is most stoutly maintained that if the foregoing Scriptures do not relate to the giving for the support of the gospel, then there is no Scripture obligating Christians to give anything for the support of the Church.

From long continued practice, both the church and the world have been led into a wrong idea with reference to the duty of Christians to pay for the support of the Church and the proclamation of the gospel. The whole practice is wrong. We are not required to give anything for the support of the gospel. Our heavenly Father does not require us to give him anything. He does not lack means with which to carry forward his plans. "The cattle upon a thousand hills are mine." But God does require us to pay into his treasury all the money in our possession belonging to him, and when it is paid in he will see to it that it is properly expended in paying his servants.

The question is asked, how are we to determine how much we owe the Lord? God in his revelation has laid down rules for the government of his children in all matters. By searching we can find out. It is insisted that the preachers can work without pay, and Peter is referred to as proof. It reads, "Feed the flock of God, not for base lucre, but of a ready mind." 1 Peter v. 2.

Paul says, "I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service." 2 Cor. ii. 8.

Again Moses says, "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn." 1 Cor. ix. 9. If the oxen are to be compensated, truly the poor preacher should not be entirely forgotten, and turned out to starve.

"Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." 1 Cor. ix. 14.

Again, "Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of double honor (pay), especially they who labor in Word and doctrine." 1 Tim. v. 17. Is it not true that one-tenth of the entire income of the twelve tribes of Israel went to the tribe of Levi to pay the expense of worship.

In the further consideration of this question, I shall take it for granted, that Christian people are required to pay some amount for the support of the gospel. I do not think that question will be gainsayed. The next question is how much is to be thus paid? Can we find an answer to this question in the Scriptures? I think we can. What question is there, with which the Church has to deal, that is of more importance than the one under consideration? Is it possible that our heavenly Father has left his people without any rule for their guidance in so important a matter as this? We have in this country what is known by lawyers as the common law. We also have the statute law. In the absence of statute law the common law governs, and people are as much bound by its precepts as they are by statute law. The Old Testament Scriptures may be regarded as the common law of the church, while the New Testament may be likened unto the statute law. The Old Testament is just as binding as the New, except where it has been superceded by the New. Reference is constantly had to the common law in giving proper construction to statute law. So in the interpretation of the New Testament we must look to the Old. Did the Lord require more of the Israelites than he requires of his children today? Is it not true that Jesus raised the Christian standard and requires much more of his people now than was required of the Jews. He most certainly did. He said, "a new commandment I give unto you; that ye love one another." He did not require that of the Jews.

Again he says, "Love your enemies, do good to them that despitefully use you." There was no such requirement made upon the Israelites.

Again he says, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, but I say unto you that ye resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite you on the right cheek turn to him the other also." Matt. v. 38.

It is insisted that the church, by its long continued failure to have any system for contributing to the Lord's treasury has thereby established a precedent which is not only binding on the church but the Lord is also bound thereby. This proposition, when thus stated, is ridiculous; but it is the basis of the rule for contributing to the support of the gospel, nevertheless, and has been adopted by all, or nearly all, the churches.

Again I ask, did the Lord require more of the Israelites than he requires of his children at the present time? Are we willing to do less for the Master than the Jews did under the lead of Moses?

My dearly beloved readers, let us look at this matter from another point of view. Listen to our heavenly Father when he says, "All the earth is mine." Ex. xix. 5.

"Behold the heaven and the heaven of heavens is the Lord's thy God, the earth also, with all that therein is." Deut. x. 14.

"Whatsoever is under the whole heavens is mine." Job xli. 11.

"The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." 1 Cor. x. 26.

"If I were hungry I would not tell thee, for the world is mine and the fulness thereof." Psa. l. 10, 12.

Why were the foregoing Scriptures spoken and left on record by our good Father? There is no idle talk in the Bible. It is the most remarkable Book ever printed. It is the only Book God has ever made. We are more interested in it, than we are in any, or all other books ever printed.

My dear reader, please give me your undivided attention for a few moments and let us see if we cannot forever settle this question between you and the Maker of the universe. I will suppose you are a farmer. You do well if you are, farming is an honorable business. You have a large farm, say half a section. It is all paid for. You bought it of the government and have your patents showing your title. There are no liens on it, the taxes have all been paid. You go to your lawyer and say to him, "I am getting along in years and I want to get my matters in shape so that in case of my death, or case Jesus should come and take me away, my family will have no trouble." You say I have never had my title examined by an expert and I want you to make such an examination. You place in his hands your title papers. He examines them carefully and tells you that as between you and any other person, your title is good. You say to me, is that not enough? I say, is there not an outstanding title which you have not bought, or in any manner taken care of. You ask, who holds that title? I open my Bible and read, "All the earth is mine." I say your farm is on the earth, is it not? You say certainly it is. I say did you ever buy in the title of this party who claims the whole earth? You say no, I never did. Then read, "Behold the heaven and the heaven of the heavens is the Lord's thy God, the earth also, with all that therein is." You say hold on, do not read any more. At first the Lord only claimed my farm. I thought I could stand that, because my wife and I have lived economically and have saved up something and now have twenty-five thousand dollars in the saving bank, drawing four per cent interest. This will not help us any for the reason that God now claims everything that is in the earth, as well as the earth itself. What can we do about it? Is there no way in which we can arrange our matters so that we can save at least something. Yes, there is no difficulty whatever in arranging the matter. While it is true that everything belongs to the Lord, it is also true that many years ago our heavenly Father entered into an agreement with the Israelites whereby he agreed that if they would be good children and do what he directed, he would give them ninety per cent of everything, reserving only ten per cent for himself. In other words, he simply required that the Israelites pay into his treasury one-tenth of their income each year, reserving for themselves ninety per cent. You can do the same thing. You say, I am not an Israelite and cannot therefore have benefit of the agreement made by God with Israel. I have been told that they were the favored people of God, and not all people can have the benefit of promises made to them. That is all true, but still there is a way out of the difficulty. Good old Abraham, who lived four hundred years before the giving of the law, paid tithes to Melchisadec who was Priest of the Most High God and king of Salem. Heb. vii. 1; Gen. xiv. 18. He was a type of Christ and acting in his capacity as priest received tithes from Abraham. The promises were made to Abraham. He in paying tithes to Melchisadec represented the whole human family. This certainly opens the way whereby all may have the benefit of God's generosity and be permitted to pay one-tenth into the Lord's treasury and having done so, have the right to retain the remainder. Fortunately you have kept your income in such a manner that you know how much it is. You have deposited it in the savings bank, and have it there now. You can very easily make a settlement with your heavenly Father. He has generously proposed to accept ten per cent and let you retain the balance. You have said you have twenty-five thousand dollars in the bank. One-tenth of that amount is two thousand five hundred dollars. Pay that amount into the Lord's treasury and the whole matter will be disposed of. In the future you should pay the Lord's money first before using any yourself.

Dearly beloved, let us think on these matters, and think seriously.

Hope.

Hail all ye weary souls that grope
Along this vale of tears,
Your minds never filled with buoyant hope,
But with foreboding fears:
Look upward, upward as ye go;
Cease, then, this dull repining;
There's never a cloud, however so dark,
But hath a silver lining.

Hail all ye weary mourners, who
Who wander here on bended knee
Distressed long from calm delights
From cheerful friends long parted:
Look upward, and these words you'll see,
In golden letters shining;
There's never a cloud, however so dark,
But hath a silver lining.

And should misfortune's clouds arise,
And dim the light of day,
Or adverse winds blow cold around
Your tenement of clay,
Look upward, where auspicious Hope
Her heavenly wreath is twining,—
There's never a cloud, however so dark,
But hath a silver lining.

Random Thoughts. No 20.

Dear Restitution:

When will the kingdom of God be set up? Who can tell? In Dan. ii. 44 we read, "In the days of these kings (or kingdoms) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever," etc. This says the kingdom shall be set up in the days of certain kings or kingdoms, but what kings or kingdoms are here referred to? If my readers will read the whole chapter (Dan. ii.) they will see that the king of Babylon, who had grown very great was wondering what would become of his great possessions, even on his bed he could not help thinking about it, what shall be in the latter days, and in this state of mind he fell asleep and began to dream, and in his dream he saw a great image whose brightness was excellent, and its form was terrible. Its head was gold, breast and arms silver, its belly and thighs brass, and its legs of iron, and its feet part of iron and part of clay, etc., etc. In which, as interpreted by Daniel, God revealed to the king the history of the world beginning with himself (the king), and his kingdom of Babylon as the gold in the image, which would be merged into silver (the breast and arms) or Medo Persia, which again would be merged into brass (Greece), and that into iron (legs Rome), the feet iron and clay or Rome divided into ten kingdoms (toes), in which state the kingdom that once was the kingdom Babylon, then Medo Persia, then Greece, then Rome is found today all divided up into other kingdoms! It is in the days of these kings or kingdoms God is to set up his kingdom. How soon he may do it I do not know, as with God a thousand years are no more than a day with us, but it will be in the days of "these kings." It is not yet done, for to set up God's kingdom will be the breaking to pieces and consuming all these kingdoms! Seeing these kingdoms yet in their greatness, therefore shows that the kingdom of God is not yet come—we may still pray "Thy kingdom come." But we are not in darkness that that day should take us unawares, for we know it will come. It is not necessary we should know the time when. We should be ready all the time to meet our Lord!

I once received a little pamphlet, which argued that we must know the time our Lord will come or we would not be looking for him! I reason just the other way, that we should "watch therefore because we know not at what hour our Lord will come. If I knew at what hour the thief would come I would watch and not permit him to break in! But how long would I watch? If I knew he would come at two o'clock A. M. I would get up, say at 1:30 so as to be ready to give him a warm reception. But if I knew he would come some time in the night, but did not know at what hour, I would watch all night! Again if I had no reason to expect him at all, I would not at all be looking for him, but would go to bed and sleep all night long if I could. And so, if our Lord had said I am going to the Father and will not come to earth again for 1900 years, then no one would have expected him till that time and so no one would have been looking for him. See the parable of the ten virgins. [illegible] what hour the Bridegroom would come, they would all have been ready, but as they did not, the wise or prudent prepared for a long time, but the foolish did not, and so were left out. The moral or substance of the teaching of the parable to the disciples, and so to us, is "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh."

Professing Christians have time and again set the time for the Lord's coming, trusting in their interpretation of "times, days, weeks, years, etc., and felt sure they were right, and that the Lord would certainly come on the certain day, only to be disappointed, very much so, and some even have given up the coming of the Lord on that account. For myself I never felt like setting the time. As we read in Mark xiii. 32 of that day and hour knoweth no man, angel, nor even the Son. I think we had better "take heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is."

I know some of our best writers seem pretty sure they can rightly interpret the time, times and a half—the forty-two months, and other prophetic times, etc., and tell us definitely the time our Lord will come and set up the kingdom, but I cannot say I ever had full assurance of faith in their interpretation. One reason for this is that, if Daniel and others had so definitely stated the time, as these writers seem to think, then surely our Lord, if not angels would have known, and then he would not have said what he did in Mark xiii. 32, 33. It seems to me that God has purposely kept such knowledge from his people, that they may be always expecting and looking for the coming of their Lord in his kingdom, being all the time prepared for him, which would not be the case, if they knew he would not come for a thousand, hundred, fifty years, or even one year. If we knew he would not come till next month, we would not look for or expect him this month. Yea, if we knew he would not come till tomorrow we would not look for him today! My readers will then see that I have but little faith in definite time-setting, but that we should be all the time ready and prepared for his coming—if today we will welcome him, if tomorrow or later we will wait for him. And no one can be waiting for him, if not ready or prepared. At the same time we may not know just when our Lord will come, we may read the signs that indicate his coming, and show that it is near—even at the door!

In speaking of the coming of the Lord or the coming of the kingdom I may say the two are associated or joined together. He comes to set up the kingdom—we shall have no kingdom, till he comes and sets it up. Matthew, Mark and Luke all tell us of certain signs or things that will occur, and we may know the coming of the Son of Man is near, and they will see him coming in the clouds with great power and glory; or as Luke words it (Luke xxi. 31), "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." The generation that sees the signs fulfilled will not have passed away till all be fulfilled.

The coming of the Lord and his kingdom are of the greatest importance to us imaginable. If he does not come a second time he may as well have come the first time. All he has said and done so far would be of no account. If he does not come to reign, he had better not have come and suffered. If no crown, better no cross. No cross, no crown; and so no king, no kingdom! And no kingdom without the King. When the King comes he will set up the kingdom. Paul says (2 Tim. iv. 1), "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge (rule, govern) the living and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the Word," etc. Thus the appearing of the Lord and his kingdom are joined together, when we have the one we will get the other, and so we may say the time when the kingdom will be set up will be when the Lord or King comes to do it. The Lord [illegible] himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first (before the living are changed). Then we who are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in clouds, to meet the Lord in the air and so (or then) shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thes. iv. 16, 17. For as Enoch the seventh from Adam prophesied, saying, Behold! The Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints (to do what?) to execute judgment upon all the ungodly," etc. Jude 14. Agreeing with 2 Thes. i. 7-9, where we read that when he gives rest to his saints, he will be in flaming fire, taking vengeance on the wicked, whom he will punish with everlasting destruction, etc. It is all important that we be ready or prepared for him that we may see him with joy and not with grief—be ready today and tomorrow and every day till he come or till we fall asleep in him, and if we fall asleep looking for him we shall awake looking upon him when he shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him. Then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and commence his glorious reign (Matt. xxv.) and proceed to govern the world in righteousness, ridding the world of sin and sinners, and glorifying his saints, and the whole earth shall be full of the glory of God, his will being done on earth as it is in heaven. May it soon be! More anon.

GEO. ELTON.

The Kingdom of God. What is it? No. 2.

In a former article on the above subject I showed God's original plan was to give man dominion over the earth, and that this right to rule came to Christ through the disobedience of the first Adam. In this I wish to speak of this kingdom in the Restitution age. In reading the second chapter of Daniel we learn that there were five kingdoms spoken of. Now why accept the fact that four of these were real kingdoms and became universal, and deny that the fifth will be a literal and universal kingdom. There is no warrant for such a thought. The image was univeral until the dividing of the fourth universal kingdom which was the Roman kingdom. It was first divided into two parts, then into ten (toes) parts. These elements of that kingdom remain and are embraced in the kingdoms of the East. It was in the days of these kings or kingdoms that the kingdom of God was to come on the stage of action, and would grind all these kingdoms to powder. The kingdom of God is the stone that smote the image upon his feet. Dan. ii. 34, 35. Thou sawest till that stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and break them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together and become like the chaff of the summer threshing floors, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the earth.

We are taught here that the image was to be destroyed after it had developed into the ten toed system. This cannot take place until he who has a right to rule comes again to earth to exercise his authority in this respect. He is now through the work of the body (church) of which he is head taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name. After which he will return and build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and will build again the ruins thereof, and set it up. Acts xv. 16. Language could not be plainer than that in Jesus is to be retained in heaven until the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. Then he will return to the earth as the two angels announced to his disciples Acts i. 2. Many good people teach the second coming of the Lord, but fail to teach the [illegible] of his coming. His first coming is spoken of in 1 Thes. iv. 16, 17. The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. The dead and living have been made immortal and are ready for the marriage supper. Read Rev. xix.

The Restitution.

There is an interval of time between the resurrection and Christ's coming to earth with his saints that the nations will be left to themselves. This may be the famine, not for the want of bread and water, but for the Word of God. The Lord will have taken his out of the world. The Word will then no longer be preached. The associate rulers with Christ have been elected and immortalized. The individual judgment for this age has then closed. No more kings and priests will be selected from among the world. Then the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all his holy saints with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them (the nations) one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. Matt. xxv. 31-32. This is a judgment of the nations and not individuals as many preach. They do not rightly divide the Word of God. Thus far we have the King, Christ, his associate rulers, his saints. The earth, his territory and the nations of the earth, his subjects. These make up the important elements in a kingdom. Christ now has and will exercise all powers given him and the redemption of old mother earth has begun. In Isa. ii. we have this event recorded with the addition of the law that shall go forth out of Zion and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established (prepared) in the top of the mountains and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall come forth the law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and he shall judge among the nations and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. The kingdom [illegible] is now established. (Margin prepared). Jesus and his saints are the rulers. The earth is the territory, the nations are the subjects. The capital city is Jerusalem on Mount Zion. Psa. ii. Yet have I set my King (Anointed) upon Zion, the hill of my holiness. I will declare the decree; the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

In Matt. xxv. we read that Christ will separate the sheep nations from the goat nations. One he will save as his subjects, the other he will send into everlasting punishment. Those who have done his bidding will receive life eternal. This separating of the nations must take place after Jesus has returned and been seated on his throne. His brethren spoken of in this chapter must have reference to those whom he raised from the dead and who have aided him in the ruling of the nations. If the disobedient are all cut off there will be left a better class of subjects than nations now have. All shall know him (Christ) from the least unto the greatest. To know God the Father and Jesus the Christ whom he has sent is eternal life.

The accepted teaching of today is that the world will be converted to Christ before he comes again. The Scriptures are very much against this doctrine. Do not the Scriptures teach that the times of the Son of Man shall be as the times were in the days of [illegible] that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be. Matt. xxiv. 38, 39. Again, Paul says, Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. 2 Tim iii. 13. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables. 2 Tim. iv. 3, 4. Is not this enough to prove that we are living in the times herein spoken of? Can it be that the world will be converted to Christ before his coming? These texts teach to the contrary. This being true let us accept it as truth and be willing to search the Scriptures that we may rightly divide the Word. The apostles were promised thrones and the power to rule in the regeneration or restitution times. "In the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. xix. 28. Is this a meaningless promise? We think not, but embraces a grand truth. Jesus taught and his apostles believed that the kingdom of God would again be restored to Israel and they would be the rulers in that kingdom. As the Father hath given unto me a kingdom so give I unto you a kingdom. After he had taught them during forty days of the things concerning the kingdom of God, they asked, Will thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? His answer was, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. These Scriptures are very plain that the kingdom will again be restored to Israel. There is a future for God's people, the Jews, and we think the time not far in the future when they will again return to God. "In that day saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted. And I will make her that halteth a remnant and her that was cast off a strong nation; and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion, from henceforth even forever. Micah iv. 6, 7. That we may reject error and accept the truth is the prayer of your brother in the Anointed.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 25.

1. The Word that occurred to Hieremias in respect to all the laity of Jouda in the fourth year of Jooakeim, son of Joosias, king of Jouda,

2. Which he talked unto all the laity of Jouda and unto all those inhabiting Hierousaleem, saying:

3. In the thirteenth year of Joosias son of Amoos king of Jouda and unto this day for twenty-three years even have I talked unto you, rising early and saying,

4. And I sent unto you my bond-servants the prophets, sending them early, and ye did not hearken and ye did not give heed with your ears,

5. Saying, Turn ye away from your wicked way each one of you and from your wicked devices, and ye shall dwell upon the land which I give unto you and your fathers from animate-age even into animate-age;

6. Do not go your way after other gods to serve them as bond-servants and to worship them, that ye may not provoke me to wrath with the works of your hands as to afflict you;

7. And ye did not hearken to me.

8. Therefore, thus saith the Lord, since ye did not put faith in my words,

9. Lo, I am sending and I shall take a national family from the north, and I shall lead them against this land and against those who inhabit it, and against all the nations round about it and I shall desolate them, and I shall give them to disappearance and to hissing and to age-lasting reproach.

10. And I shall lose from them a voice of joy and a voice of rejoicing, a voice of a bridegroom and a voice of a bride, an odor of myrh and a light of a lamp.

11. And all the land will be in a state of disappearance, and they will serve as bond-servants with the nations for seventy years.

12. And when the seventy years have been fulfilled I shall requite that nation and I shall put them in a state of age-lasting disappearance.

13. And I shall lead upon that land all my words which I have talked against it all the things written in this book; the things that Hieremias hath prophesied in respect to the nations, the things in respect to Ailam.

14. Thus saith the Lord, The bow of Ailam, the headship of their prevailing-power hath been broken;

15. And I shall lead upon Ailam four winds from out the four quarters of the heavens, and I shall scatter them with these winds, and there will not be a nation which will not come there, O ye thrust out of Ailam;

16. And I shall strike them with awe in the presence of their enemies who seek their soul, and I shall lead upon them according to the wrath of my anger, and I shall send after them my sword until it hath lavishly destroyed them.

17. And I shall place my throne in Ailam, and I shall send out from there a king and grast ones;

18. And it will be upon a last of the days, and I shall turn back the captivity of Ailam saith the Lord.

COMMENT.

The reader will observe that this chapter ends with the 18th verse; but in the R. V. it ends with the 38th verse. This illustrates what I said in my preliminary comment on this book of Hieremias, known as "Jeremiah" in the versions. The logical and historical sequence of argument and events from this 25th chapter on to the 51st chapter is muddled and mixed by changing the numbering of chapters and verses, transposing verses and portions of chapters from one chapter to another and even changing the text. These changes are all indexed in the true copies of the Septuagint, but are too technical and numerous to reproduce in the comment I am giving. The reader must note them by comparing the versions with the translation I am giving as this is from the best text.

The reader will observe that the next chapter, the 26th in the 1st verse continues the prophecy in detail concerning Ailam (Elam C. V. and R. V.) mentioned by name, which is entirely omitted in the R. V. thus destroying the argumentative sequence. Lord in the 10th chapter of Genesis and you will see that Ailam or Elam was the oldest of the six sons of Seem and the Algaptoi were descendants of Ailam and therefore originally Semitic by descent as were the Assoulans also. This fact is important to any proper understanding of this prophecy.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 21, 1906.

AN earthquake in the island of Formosa last Saturday killed 8,000 people, destroying an immense amount of property.

WORD was received here telling that Sister Catherine Miller, of Englewood, Kansas, died Feb. 14, 1906. Sister Miller lived for many years near this City, and was a regular attendant at the meeting place of our church. She moved to the west some years ago, where her husband died. We have no particulars, only the bare statement of her death.

THE Morocco conference still drags on. Just when an agreement seemed certain, the French Cabinet resigned over some difference, and Germany thought the time opportune to make further demands. As it now stands there is a deadlock, and it seems next to impossible for the neutral powers to bring the principals to terms. As soon as it is settled Russia wants to arrange a loan of $250,000,000, so that her influence will be toward an early settlement.

"Be Ye Also Ready."

MATT. XXV. 1-31.

The words of our Lord in Matthew XXV. 13, "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh," is the practical lesson of the parable of the ten virgins, immediately preceding. Startling events transpire every day which are signs that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, but we can nowhere learn the day nor the hour. Indeed this is the divine arrangement to induce constant watchfulness and ensure our preparedness. The beaten oil of the sanctuary was to cause the lamps to burn continually. But the sanctuary long ago disappeared, and the seven-branched golden candlestick is no more; but the Lord has said to the disciples, "Ye are the temple of God;" "Ye are the light of the world;" but if we fail to trim our lamps occasionally, our light will go out. Take notice that the text furnishes positive proof of the Lord's coming again. We are not required to watch for a possibly or remotely probable occurrence. The Scriptures are crowded with proofs of the certainty, of the literalness, of the visibility, and of the personality of his return to earth. One of the predictions intending to inform us of the approach of the grand and awful, and yet glorious event, is the general denial that he will ever come again in person, by those who profess to believe and follow him. This morning I rejoice to be identified with a little band who cherish his coming as their

BLESSED HOPE.

We have been begotten to this hope by his resurrection from the dead, because before leaving earth for the court of heaven, he told his disciples that they should live because he lived. And if I know anything about my brethren and sisters,—they never tire of hearing about his coming. And it does us all good to run over the grand assurances that we are not deluded by cunningly devised fables. To prevent any mistake, reiteration comes in to enforce assertion, and emphasis to enforce reiteration. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout." It is plainly seen by these Scriptures that the Spirit anticipated the denials, the clippings, the misconceptions from which this doctrine would suffer, and which the faithful in Christ Jesus in the last days would have to withstand, and provided against it. A bare repetition of these texts furnishes the best possible answer to all the various theories of a figurative advent.

Says one, "The destruction of Jerusalem was the coming of Christ; when Titus descended upon the doomed city, with the shout of his Roman legions, then was the promise fulfilled." "The Lord himself shall descend," repeats the Word of God.

"The occurrence of death is Christ's coming to receive his people," says another. "This same Jesus shall so come," reiterates the Holy Scriptures.

"The diffusion of the gospel, and the gradual transformation which it effects in civilization is the coming of the Redeemer," says another. "The Lord himself shall descend," still resounds the Word.

But alas! they have so diffused him into history, so confounded him with death, and so dissolved him into a vague and shadowy presence that we can almost hear him say to them, as of old he did to his disciples, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I, myself." Jesus has not lost his identity, or so merged it with history, or with Providence, or death, that we must look to these things for his coming. No! "I will come again;" "Behold I come quickly." And this "I" is the seat of his personality,—that by which he will be known through eternal ages. He has never lent or transferred his personality to another, except when he sent his angel to speak to John on Patmos for him, saying, "Surely I come quickly. Amen." It is not simply the same Jesus—no substitute, no commissioned messenger, no typical event; but he "shall so come in like manner" as he went. He went up visibly, from eager eyes that recognized the well-known Lord, and from outstretched hands that had handled him as the Word of life; and as he was parted from them "a cloud received him out of their sight." And so shall he return, visibly, personally, gloriously. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him."

This ought to keep us from the almost universal error of these times—the error of spiritualizing the substance and reality out of Christ's promises. Reason allegorizes the grand realities of Scripture when it touches them; but let me tell you the heart is a rigid literalist. Its affections are never satisfied with shadows, or resemblances, or substitutes. If the Church had remained solid, and kept her bridal love for her absent Lord, she would never have admitted even the suggestion of a figurative or impersonal advent. The loss of

and a growing fondness for this present evil world, accounts for this deplorable state of things. Imagine if you can an expectant bride looking for an impersonal Bridegroom. It is ridiculous! It is natural to dissipate into vagueness and unreality what we dread, or dislike to believe. Of course, to the rejectors of the gospel, the coming of Christ means vengeance. Such would naturally wish to forget it, or put it away off, or explain away its reality. But what about her of whom the Apostle wrote, "I have espoused you unto one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ?" Let me ask if the Bride with the letter from her betrothed husband in her hand, in which he says, "Surely I come quickly," will entertain the suggestion that he will send some mysterious stranger to fetch her to himself, or forward some kindly provisions to make her comfortable and contented with his absence, so that she would be less inclined to love his appearing, and to look for it? "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without a sin offering unto salvation." He is coming to complete the redemption of those who are being saved, and to present them faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy," and usher in the marriage of the Lamb. He comes to right all wrong; to consummate all good, remove the curse from our groaning earth; to wipe away all tears from off all faces; to stop all pain, and to swallow up death in victory. Blessed Jesus. No promise is more constantly repeated, and none is more precious than this!

O WHAT A BLESSED HOPE

it is! And what a startling thing it is when it comes home to us, that the professed friends of Jesus generally, have actually set aside the blessed hope of the gospel and mapped out a new programme for the Lord Jesus Christ! One would think they would come across the Scripture that teaches that those who believe not the record that God has given of his Son make him a liar, and at once look up that record! But no! They are too much befogged by the serpent's lie, to heed the prediction of Paul that before the day of Christ a falling away from the faith and hope of the gospel should come,—and is finding its fulfilment in them! O, how love and gratitude should flow out from us because God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ," and that we poor, weak, frail, short-sighted creatures as we are, are permitted to have this treasure in earthen vessels. What

A PRECIOUS BOON!

What an exalted privilege! Take midst of the moral darkness our environment we are able to join with the apostle and say, although troubled on every side, we are not distressed,—perplexed, often knowing badly which way to steer, we are not in despair; and if perchance persecuted, not forsaken, cast down sometimes but not destroyed; because this is the way we bear about with us the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be manifest in our mortal body. It is indeed a great consolation that when we suffer for Christ we suffer with him. He is always beside us in such circumstances.

Personal coming! Why, if we are not certain of Christ's personal coming, the foundation is swept from under us: for we cannot be certain of seeing him and being made like unto his glorious body. Why, this identity at the advent, with the Man of Nazareth, the Man of Gethsemane, the Man of Olivet, and the Man of Calvary, is the [illegible] day. All reality, recognition, communion, remembrance and fellowship in the resurrection state depend upon whether he who shall come is the same Jesus, or some shadowy substitute, or mysterious manifestation of his presence. His resurrection from the dead is one of the best attested facts of all history,—having more than 500 witnesses at one time. And we see from the testimony of the Spirit in the prophets that the personality that survived the grave will also survive the intervening centuries, and, although radiant with glory, it will be the same benignant face, the same gracious voice, the same pierced hands and feet.

We are sometimes asked, "What is the use of watching for an event of whose precise date we know nothing? Why, that is the very reason why we should watch for it? Do you not read it in my text? "Watch ye, therefore, for, (because) ye know not the day, nor the hour!" There is the same positive uncertainty in regard to the time, as there is positive certainty in regard to the Son of Man's coming. It is because of this ignorance of the precise time of the Lord's appearing that we are so earnestly enjoined to watch for it. The divine lesson is: Constant preparedness. We are never safe unless we are prepared! Did you never notice that the union of a certainty with an uncertainty constitutes the strongest kind of a motive to anxious vigilance? The sight of the firm, rocky shore gives hope and courage to the drifting mariner; but the unknown shoals and the uncertain depths lying between make him in guiding his course, lest he be wrecked. What is known inspires confidence; what is unknown begets circumspection. If the date of Christ's return were as certain as the fact of it, the expectant watchfulness and carefulness which he enjoined upon his disciples, in view of the event, could hardly be maintained. He knew what was in man better, even than we know by bitter experience; hence the words of my text: "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh." Put, with the "Ye know not the day nor the hour" is blended the "Behold, I come quickly;" with the "In such an hour as ye think not," is mingled the "Behold, the Judge standeth at the door." It is here the skeptic starts a theoretical difficulty, by saying these are not true statements; they cannot be inspired, they conflict. "They are contradictory, etc. But let me remind you, that none of them are addressed to skeptics, but to the Lord's Little Flock, who have implicit faith in his Word; and if they cannot now understand all he says, they trust him to make it clear sometime. There are no contradictions, retractions, modifications or emendations in later Scriptures of what was declared earlier. But, taken altogether, the statements on this subject constitute a marvellous blending of incentives and checks—checks upon the presumption that would fix the exact time of

EXCEEDINGLY CAREFUL

THE LORD'S RETURN,

with incentives to an eager looking for it. These admonitions must be considered in their mutual relations, —and received with an unquestioning faith; or as we sometimes say, believe or trust him in the dark,—as we know that he does all things well. I have examined three Greek lexicons to see if any assistance could be gotten from the various meanings of the Greek word rendered quickly. Surely I come quickly, and the following is the result. Quickly, speedily, hastily, soon, shortly, immediately, suddenly, easily, readily." You may, or may not be helped by these definitions. Some translators render tachu by speedily, and one translator rendered it by the word suddenly, which I thought might be better than quickly, but do not know that it is, or certain,—but there was one thing that inclined me toward the word suddenly. It was the words used by our Lord in the message to the church at Sardis. Rev. iii. 3. "If therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." Here we do not rely upon the definition of the word tachu but upon the idea of suddenness, and unexpectedness, the visitation resembling the coming of a thief; and besides that, it is in harmony with my text,—"Ye know neither the day nor the hour;" I am inclined to think that instead of the remoteness or the nearness,—it was the swiftness or suddenness, or unexpectedness [illegible] coming that is meant. I leave the matter. Ask you after one of these more suggestions. Our Lord does not want us to know exactly when he is coming, for reasons given. And we are creatures of a moment,—as it were. Two thousand years is a long time to us. But to him whom the powers of an endless life have taken possession, 2000 years are but a speck on the boundless ocean of eternity. And I will just add that the Lord long agesago came to the Sardis church as a thief and removed its candlestick out of its place. It long since disappeared. Beloved, we know not how soon the little while will be completed; but at every turn in the fulfilling prophecy we can say, "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." The Church generally of the apostolic age and for several hundred years after, kept constantly on the watch,—they lived under the perpetual inspiration of and delay did not discourage them. And it is the same now. Those who implicitly believe and faithfully endeavor to obey the Lord as the days come and go, cannot be really disappointed. It is those who adopt the unfaithful servant's creed, "My Lord delayeth his cometh," who are disappointed.

Our text shows how anxious Jesus is, to find those for whom he died, anxiously awaiting him. I remember reading of a traveller who described a journey on a beautiful lake in Switzerland. He said, as the circling hills seemed to close around them again and again, they seemed almost at the journey's end; but on rounding a point, the mountains would part and another broad expanse of water would stretch out before them, and the landing place seemed to recede from them. He said it was striking to see the effect this had upon the passengers. Not one of them was at the stern looking backward. Every one was on the outlook. All eyes were bent forward in eager expectation till at last the harbor was reached. Now, all the commands and promises of Christ put us on the outlook; every great juncture of fulfilling history sets us on the watch to discern whether the day-dawn is not approaching. The impulse to watch, to expect, to be ready has, however vain it may seem to men, is just the attitude that pleases both the Father and the Son. "Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments" is a warning startling enough to indicate, that, though we know not exactly how near the end of the age may be, yet we are nearing it. Let your loins be girt about with truth, and your lights burning. If there be one present who does not realize the practical effect the Blessed Hope should have on a person, I want to say to such that the Scriptures make the hope of Christ's return the supreme incentive to service and consecration. Are we exhorted to patience? This is the motive, "Be ye also patient,—stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Would we be inspired to diligence, then we hear the Master saying to us, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be." Would we discern the secret of purity? "Every one that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure." Are we encouraged to endure trial? This is the motive, that we may be found unto praise and glory and honor at the appearing of Jesus Christ." Are we exhorted to abide in constant communion with Christ? It is, that when he shall appear we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming." All our service is keyed to this Blessed Hope! We are to occupy till he come, "Do this in remembrance of him till he come; and hold fast till he come." And though we know not the day nor the hour there are unmistakable signs that he is at hand. Prominent among these is the fact that those who profess to belong to him, do not want him to come; for one thing, they do not know what he is coming for; and besides that, they are having their good time now, instead of suffering with him,—and do not want to be disturbed; and have concluded that when at last compelled to give up the pleasures of this life, they will not stay around here,—they will go to him instead. O beloved, the time predicted when they should say, where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation,"—yes; that time has come; it has been with us quite awhile! Let us heed this infallible sign. There are hopes many; but there is one gospel hope,—only [illegible] before us. What Titus ii. 13 tells us exactly what that Blessed Hope is, "Even the appearing of the glory of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ, who gave! Gave what? Gave himself. For what purpose? For us! Brothers and sisters, when we take in the whole scheme of redemption at once, and remember that the Father committed all judgment unto the Son that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father,—I ask if it is any wonder, that his coming to bestow life and incorruptibility, and all the glories of shall be the One-all-embracing-Blessed Hope-of-the-gospel? Would it not be a great wonder if something else was the Blessed Hope? I think so! Let us rejoice together in the fact that as one happy little band, we are looking for Jesus, who said he would come again and receive us to himself. Let us keep on looking—his Word will not fail. If faithful we will surely see him and be made like to his glorious Body.

It is cheering and uplifting to look into faces at this moment, lighted up with a realization of the Blessedness of this Hope. As inducements to stand fast, let us keep the prize in view; and cherish vivid thoughts of who it is that is coming! He gave Himself for us! But let us dismiss all thought of the sins of the Jews, and all thoughts of the sins of Gentiles, generally, and think of that tragedy of sorrow and sacrifice on the cross in connection with my sins and yours. John had a panoramic view that the common version does not at all fully give the sense of; the original gives the idea that it looked as if the Lamb had just been killed. Giving us to know that the memorials of Calvary shine conspicuously and splendidly amidst the glories of the throne. The place of that throne will be the Holy Hill of Zion, and the time still a little way in the future, and that what Jesus did on the cross he carried the reassurance of with him to glory. And that the most wonderful scene amidst splendors of which we can form no conception, the grandest, the noblest, the most glorious of all is the glorified Lamb that was slain for us—slain for me—slain for you.

O, think of it! The lone weeper in Gethsemane throned and crowned, and ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands casting their crowns in showers before the throne, and singing in songs the majesty and magnificence of which, is impossible for us to realize; but described as the voice of many waters, and the voice of many thunders, saying Alleluia, the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth, and Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing! Think of the countless multitudes without a failing heart, without a faltering voice, without a discordant note—each unloading the debt of love and gratitude that lies upon his heart!

What a magnificent roll that will be. In answer to the question, Who are these? It was explained—"These are they which came up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." O, may we all be there, I pray. Amen.

Popular heresy has ever been the most fertile field of truth in all religion, politics and science. Happy is the man who lives so free from prejudice and devotion to mere form, that he can explore this field with an unbiased mind in safety, and come away the richer and safer for his investigation.

At the Breaking of Bread.

REST IN THE LORD.

There might be two kinds of rest referred to in this sentence.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Matt. xi. 28. Unto those who come unto the Lord fully believing in him, and trusting in him in simplicity, believing that they will be cared for, it is rest in this life, but the most important rest is the one that the Lord has in store for those that love him.

"Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of us should seem to come short of it; for unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them; but the Word preached did not profit them not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Heb. iv. 1, 2.

So we see it is not only the hearing of the gospel, but a hearty belief and an acceptance of it. He not only makes provision for those who are alive at his coming, but the dead also. "And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them." Rev. xiv. 13. "But go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." Paul speaking of the Jews who had the Gospel preached unto them said, If Joshua had given them rest then would he not have spoken of another day. "There remaineth therefore a rest for the people of God. Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief."

"It's No Use."

"It's no use." This is the excuse some people offer for idleness. Reader, is it yours? Are you too lazy to try honestly and faithfully to do what you can?

Perhaps you are ambitious to do some great thing—something that will make you world-renowned. Well, my friend, "it's no use." You will wait in vain. Such opportunities do not come in that way. Do you profess to be a Christian—a follower of Jesus Christ? You surely are not following him while you are sitting there in idleness—longing to be great. He went about doing good, and as his follower this is your business. Unless you get up and stir yourself, you will soon be so far behind as to be entirely out of touch with him—if such is not the case already.

You say, you want to do something for him, but do you mean it? Are you willing to do what you can? Then do this—get a package of tracts and begin distributing them. You can do this—unless you are too proud; and if this is true you are not his follower at all, and so will be unwilling to do such humble work. You may think tract work does not amount to much, but it is a thousand times better than doing nothing.

Tract distribution is a work that God is pleased to bless, and it brings great blessing into the lives of others. Give the work a faithful trial and you will be surprised at the results. May God help you.—C. F. Ladd.

The great question is, can God speak to man, and man understand what God says? Away from the Bible the answer is inevitable, but when we search its pages the response is given that God does speak and that man can understand.—A. D. Mink.

The saloon can never be "regulated" into anything safe or decent. You might as well try to regulate rattlesnakes into harmless playthings for your children.—A. A. Phelps.

The defeat of the church, the disgrace of the land, the despair of reform, is the all but universal substitution of partyism for patriotism.—John G. Woolley.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Poetry.

He is at the Door.

Oh! Great Master, are thy footsteps
Even now upon the mountains?
Art thou walking in thy wheatfield?
Are the snowy winged reapers
Gathering, in the silent air?
Are thy signs abroad, the glowing
Of the distant sky blood reddened,
And the near fields trodden, blighted,
Choked by gaudy tares triumphant,
Sure it must be harvest time?
Who shall know the Master's coming?
Whether it be dawn or noon it,
When night down weigh down the wheat ears,
Or while noon rides high in heaven,
Rise, ing lies the yellow field?
Only may thy voice, good Master,
Peal above the reaper's chorus
And dull sound of sheaves slow falling,
"Gather all into my garner,
For it is the harvest time!"

—Miss Mulock.

A Prayer.

Father! Preserver of all those who trust
In thee, without whose succor our human dust
Is neither favor, nor holiness, nor peace,
Mightily thy mercy and increase
That having thee, our ruler and our guide
Through things that only for a time abide,
We may so pass that finally we may
Come to the joys of thy eternal day;
Grant it, O heavenly Father! for the sake
Of Jesus Christ, through whom this prayer we make.

A Retrospect.

At the time of the Miller movement no church as far as I can gather from history in my possession held the doctrine of the pre-millennial advent of our Lord, and no church stood for the mortality and unity of man's nature; unconsciousness in the intermediate state, or the period between death and the resurrection; the destruction of the finally impenitent; the earth the eternal home of the redeemed church, and of the reformed and subject nations, including the two houses of Israel; the promises made unto our fathers, and the oath to David, and I will also add, the gospel embracing the kingdom of God as revealed by the prophets as the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes whether Jew or Greek. The promulgation of these views was not to be tolerated in the so-styled orthodox churches; consequently doors were closed against what was regarded as rank heresy; and unfair measures employed to head off the proclaimers of the new views(?) These were not to be thwarted in their purpose to give to the world truths as old as the Bible, and vital to Christianity. There was room and liberty outside of the old communities of religious belief. The wise course now to pursue was for them to organize churches, the membership of which was educated in the same views. This course prevented trials for heresy, and afforded the advocates of unpopular truth to mass their forces for the battle that that was on.

In point of numbers the opposition had an overwhelming advantage, but the few who had taken their stand on the old foundations were panoplied with truth. There were but few meeting houses in Indiana at the time to which this history relates, but school houses were in every community where there were children enough to form a school, and these were free to all denominations alike. So we were sure of places in which to preach, and there were ears to hear. Some came out of curiosity to hear what the babblers would say, like the Athenian Stoics and Epicurians. Others came with a sincere desire to hear and learn the truth. Some were mad when they started from home, nor were the most of them in a better mood after hearing the arguments. And others came to have a tilt after the meeting closed, thinking themselves amply able to meet the champions of truth with arguments from the Scriptures that would prove quite damaging to the question discussed on the rostrum.

The passages brought forward in proof of the common view were such as are still quoted on that side. Those who did not regard themselves competent to allege an argument from the Scriptures, would call our attention to the fact that vast numbers were on their side, that millions had died in the belief of the soul's immortality and its ascent to heaven at the death of the body, as if the question of man's nature was to be settled by vote or majority. Learning too was arrayed on that side, as if it was a question of mere scholarship. Pious fathers and mothers and grand-parents, affectionate daughters and filial sons, had died happy and gone to glory; and many a dying friend while yet able to talk had told of seeing groups of angels in the chamber of death ready to convey the soul heavenward, and others had seen heaven opened and scenes of beauty transcending any thing earthly, displayed before their expiring gaze. The departed had also come back to living friends as heavenly visitants and stood beside the bed, or walked by their side in the dimness of evening twilight. And last in the line of proof came the revelations of spiritism to help out the delusion introduced by Satan the prince of liars, back in the garden of Eden.

While the churches decried spiritism as a latter day work of the devil, they were quite willing to believe that it furnished proof of the soul's separate existence and immortality. All that I have enumerated here was brought forward against the Bible view of the nature of man. Sufficient in variety and quantity but worthless as proof of the proposition!

I am unable to give the year in which Joseph Marsh, of Rochester, N. Y., published the first volume of the Prophetic Exposition, Bible Advocate, a periodical devoted t. the advocacy of the doctrine of man's entire mortality, life only through the Christ by a resurrection from the dead, the destruction of the finally impenitent, the restoration of Israel and Judah, the saints everlasting inheritance on the earth renewed, the establishment of the kingdom at the epoch of our Lord's second coming, probation for nations in the age to come or millennium, the gospel the power of God unto salvation; reformation of life and baptism of the believer in water in order to the remission of sins. The paper fell into my hands in 1854, the late William T. Guffin supplying me with some numbers of his own. I soon became a subscriber.

The World's Crisis was issued first in the same year that I became a reader of the Expositor. The Crisis from the start was opposed to probation in the age to come, and affirmed that God is done with Israel after the flesh nationally. In opposition to this view Joseph Marsh published a tract entitled Age to Come.

Numerous discussions were held between ministers of the Church of God and ministers of the so-called Orthodox churches, and some that were not so-called, but holding views in common with these on the nature of man, the destiny of the wicked, and the establishment of the kingdom. I think the first debate on the nature of man was between Dr. N. Field, of Jeffersonville, Indiana, and Thomas P. Connelly, of the same state. Both men were equals in scholarly attainments and familiarty with the Scriptures. The speeches were taken down in short hand and afterwards prepared for the press and published in book form. I wish I could give the reader the date of this discussion. It perhaps occurred in the early fifties—not earlier. I never owned a copy but read it.

Our view of the nature of man was called back there "Materialism," by the opposers of the truth, and carried with it perforce of popular usage a measure of contempt, as though our view ranked man on a level with the brute creation, and nothing higher in his mental endowments; whereas it only affirmed on the ground of Scripture statements man's materiality and mortality; that like the beast he was formed of the dust of the ground; that both alike were vitalized by the same breath of life imparted by the Great Creator, the source of all life, and being both alike declared to be living souls, or creatures, and in the event of death dying alike and returning to dust as before their creation; that man's superiority over the beast, so plainly implied in his exaltation to dominion over all animate nature, in his being created in the image of God, and in his being subjected to a positive law and made or held responsible for its infraction, was not made to rest on a difference in the material or substance of which he was composed, but on a higher mental endowment. The opposition seeing that we stuck close to the record touching man's creation and death then endeavored to prove that Gen. ii. 7, was not a complete statement of man's creation as to the parts, or rather entities, of which he was composed, but that he was created a dual being, that the soul was one personality and the body another. The flimsy argument alleged in proof of this proposition was an inference unwarrantably drawn from Gen. i. 26, 27; that these verses brought to view a creation of the material man of Gen. ii. 7. This was only getting out of the mud into the mire. Difficulties multiplied on the hands of these defenders of the popular theory. Nothing in the creation history afforded any support to this view. The weakness of their arguments was so apparent that many non-professors, though lacking the moral courage to obey the gospel, confessed that we had the truth on our side.

The language of Solomon in Eccl. iii. 18-20, so worried our opponents that some of them went so far as to deny the inspiration of this author. This was a short and cheap way of disposing of this passage and some others in the books of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes, but this denial of inspiration to Solomon was damaging to the cause of our Platonic friends.

A half of a century of contention between truth and error has wrought some changes of opinion among the leaders in the churches. They are not near so willing today, to risk a discussion, either oral or written, on the issues between themselves and us, as they were fifty years ago.

JOHN L. WINCH.

Some Thoughts in Relation to Baptism.

In the charge our Savior gave to his disciples when he was about to leave them, and ascend to his Father, baptism is so clearly enjoined that to ignore it entirely is not possible with those claiming to give obedience to the command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth (it) and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned;" but the substitution of sprinkling for immersion and its application to the person of infants as is practiced by the majority of those belonging to what is called Christendom, has robbed this sacred ordinance of its deep, solemn and beautiful significance. The effect of this has been to divest it of that sacred and essential importance with which it was regarded by the early church.

The effect of this disparagement has been contagious; so that even the minds of many of those who practice immersion, and understand the object and purpose of this ordinance; still fail to appreciate its importance in the plan of redemption. I think the retention in our Bibles of the Greek word instead of giving the English equivalent contributes to this disparagement. To the English reader unacquainted with Greek, the word baptize carries with it no suggestion of burial and resurrection.

Some years ago I was present in a Presbyterian church when the pastor was receiving a number of candidates into the church. He had them arranged in a kneeling posture around a low platform. As he was proceeding with the exercise he paused all at once and in a lower voice said, "Oh, I believe some of these have not been baptized." And he then took a small dish of water that was near and proceeded to correct the omission. As I remember I do not think he occupied more than one minute of time in doing so. He came near forgetting the administration of the baptisms altogether, and I think happened to see the dish containing the water and was thereby reminded. Of this though I am not sure. And now let us turn our thoughts to this ordinance and consider how an individual submitting to it intelligently and understandingly is affected thereby.

In doing this we will be aided by bringing to bear upon it, the light derived from the consideration of one of its types. And first we remark, that God's dealings with the children of Israel as a nation stands as a type of his attitude towards an individual, under the Christian dispensation, and he sometimes speaks of Israel in the singular as though he were addressing an individual. "When Israel was a child then I loved him; and called my son out of Egypt." Hosea xi. 1.

In the type Israel was in bondage to the Egyptian. In the Antitype, the individual is in bondage to sin. In both type and antitype God approaches the object of his solicitude through a Mediator. In the type Moses was the mediator; in the antitype it was Christ. In both cases the release is effected by and through baptism. In the type, Israel was baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea. Israel goes down into the sea a bondman, and emerges from that sea freed from that bondage; and Egypt had no more dominion over them (I suppose him would be the proper pronoun). In the antitype the individual having died to sin is buried and he emerges from the baptismal fount, with his past sins all washed away, and he has the blessed assurance that sin will have no more dominion over him, "For ye are not under the law, [illegible] See Romans vi. 1 to [illegible] this all, his relationship to [illegible]ly Father is changed; to [illegible] no more a stranger and foreig[illegible] but a fellowcitizen with the saints [illegible] of the household of God." He is [illegible] in God's family! And if a son, [illegible] an heir, heir of God and joint [illegible] with Christ—wonderful Oh! what [illegible]nduous consequences hang upon [illegible] proper observance of this ordinance. We are aware that the view [illegible] pressed above will be stigmatized [illegible] narrow and illiberal—we do not [illegible] in judgment—and when we reflect [illegible] that there are hosts of good people who [illegible] desire to yield implicit obedience [illegible] to God's commands, and only fail [illegible] because they have been wrongly instructed; we are consoled by the reflection that God is merciful, just and good. But the promise is to him who believeth and is immersed. We also remember that God charged Moses to be careful to make everything according [illegible] the pattern shown him in the Mount. Eternal life is a great, yea, [illegible]kable gift, we need not [illegible] be [illegible]bestowed.

J. T. SMITH.

Evangelizing Trip.

We have closed our Arizona work with our meetings at Tempe. The work was completed yesterday, Mar. 11th. A young man, and young woman expressed a desire to be obedient to the gospel, and we buried them in the likeness of Christ's death, and earnestly hope that they may walk in newness of life. These young people were Ray Saylor, son of Brother and Sister Saylor, who is engaged in educating himself in the Territorial Normal School at Tempe, and Jessie Blake, daughter of our esteemed friend Frank Blake, and Sister Blake. This young Sister has already entered on the busy scenes of life as a school teacher.

We called our second meeting for the day, after the immersion, and organized the little company into a working body. They chose the following officers:—

Elder, Brother C. A. Saylor.

Deacons, Brothers C. A. Corbell and J. W. Miller.

We broke bread together and looked forward with regret to a speedy separation. So our last days work in Arizona ended with two meetings of the brethren with immersion of candidates, the setting of the church in order, and the fellowship of the communion.

We have between twenty and thirty brethren scattered throughout Arizona, the larger part of whom live in a radius of a dozen miles of Phoenix. Whether they all become connected with this society of the Church of God is for their own consideration and action. It will take considerable zeal and interest to bring them together in regular meetings, over so large a district. If they think that the locality is too large to have one place of meeting and choose two places, and combine in two small companies, I would say to them, Brethren, if you wish to keep alive, as a church, and as the body of Christ; if you would maintain or increase your present zeal, do it by "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

This Church of God, at Phoenix may be the nucleus of a great future work.

I leave Arizona for my work in California, today, March 12th, having landed January 5th, at Phoenix. I have given forty-seven discourses, six have responded to the call of obedience. I feel that I have not accomplished half the work that should [illegible] done. But it has been a constant struggle to establish and maintain meetings.

The brethren have taken a great interest in the work. They have gone a number of miles night after night, to attend the meetings; but almost the entire population are serving mammon too intensely to stop, an hour, from their assiduous devotion to mammon, to listen to what God says. A people may be too prosperous to be religious, to care for God, and duty. We may be in the days like the days of Sodom, or as it was in the dayes of Noel. Watch and pray, lest that day take you unawares!

Order of meetings, if unforseen conditions do not change it, in California.

At Tipton, beginning March, 16.

At Oleander as Brother Calder may arrange.

At Santa Rosa, if place of meetings can be secured.

At Wolf, under call and plan of Brother and Sister Cook.

Editor Restitution:

In Mondays and Saturdays I carry tracts and copies of THE RESTITUTION to the depot, and I notice the pocket is empty each time. In the near future I am going to supply another depot. Did you ever notice how eager people are to read while waiting at a station. To the point—How much of our literature is stored away or burned up which might have been the means of saving some one.

I was awakened to ask myself if there is not a work for me to do. When Sister Bowe's article came out to build a memorial home and school facilities to educate the young, it appeared to me this was a grand idea, and one should be in every state

I left my home in Beaver County in January, and bought a store and a dwelling at Stillwater, Okla. The two rooms over the store will be furnished with stove, beds, fuel and water free, for some of the speaking brethren to make their home three or six months, and perhaps the down stairs will suit for a church. This is in Central Oklahoma. Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Norman and Avery, where Brother J. M. Deffenbaugh lives, are only thirty miles from here.

Will be glad to answer all enquiry about Beaver Co., as a number of our people will move this spring.

Hoping for the return of the King.

MRS. G. ROHRBACK.

Notice.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." Mal. iii. 16, 17.

Dear ones of the blessed hope, will we be among his jewels when he comes? This is the most important question of our lives. It is a question that it is high time we were putting to ourselves. Am I ready? How essential it is then, that we be making preparation now, while He tarries, lest he come suddenly and find us sleeping. Will we be zealously doing his work when he comes?

Let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, and so much more as we see that day approaching.

The Central Washington Conference will meet at Cashmere, Washington, March 30 to April 1, 1906. All are earnestly invited to attend and help carry on the Master's work. May he say to us some time "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make you ruler over many things."

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the donors request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

WE wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

The Passenger Department of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway announces that as a means of increasing the efficiency of the "Seeing America First" movement, round trip tickets will be sold over that line to all Pacific Coast points, good on their fast limited trains, at the rate of $75.00 from Chicago, daily June 1st to Sept. 15th. Every facility is being provided for in the way of stopovers and other conveniences, and the tourist movement to the Pacific Coast, for the coming season promises to show an increase of many thousand people over that of any season ever known.

We need what is due us on subscriptions and trust . h who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor

Russian Jewish Troubles.

The Chicago Tribune publishes dispatches from Berlin and St. Petersburg, under date of March 12, as follows:—Dr. Paul Nathan, the well known publicist, who has just returned from a tour of Russia undertaken in behalf of American, British, German, and Jewish philanthropists to arrange for the distribution of funds for the relief of Russian Jews, declares the position of the Jews in Russia is horrible. Massacres exceeding those that have occurred in the past may be renewed at any hour, notwithstanding the personal assurances of Premier de Witte and minister of the Interior Durnovo that the Jews would be protected and that further out-breaks were not to be feared.

Dr. Nathan is convinced that the government's policy for solving the Jewish question is systematic extermination. He says he found indisputable evidence that the October massacres were organized. They occurred in 400 cities and towns simultaneously, and were of an identical character. In every case the Jewish quarters were raided and plundered and women and children outraged by armed roughs, while the police looked on. When the Jews forcibly resisted they were shot down by the soldiers as rioters.

Dr. Nathan procured at Odessa a copy of a circular issued to the garrison last week, urging the soldiers to rise and crush the traitors who are plotting to overthrow the government and substitute a Jewish regime. The circular was printed at the office of the imperial general staff and was passed by the censor.

Dr. Nathan earnestly appeals to Jewish financiers to arrest Russia's borrowing power. She is about to seek another loan, he says, and everybody who helps her obtain it will be an accomplice to the carnival of robbery and murder. There also are other practical reasons against aiding Russia financially, for, he adds, her bankruptcy is an established fact.

The anti-Jewish proclamation alleged to have been issued by the bureaucracy consists of a program of twenty-two articles, including a demand for the expulsion of the Jews from all the cities of European Russia and Siberia into the pale, the prohibition of higher education for Jews, the prohibition of the stoppage of work on Jewish holidays, the levying of a lump sum of money from the Jewish population in lieu of military service, the reassumption of Jewish names where they have been changed, the prohibition to the Jews of certain professions, like the stage, and that none but the grandchildren of Jews who have accepted Christianity shall enjoy full legal rights.

Obituary.

R. F. Shirley was born in Fayette Co. Ind., Aug. 21, 1820, and died at his home in Rock Falls, Ill. March 13, 1906, aged nearly 86 years.

In 1830 he moved with his father's family to this (Marshall) County, and had an active part in the early development of the wilderness into prosperous farm lands. In 1842 he was married to Jane Thompson, and they reared a family of five children. His wife died some five years ago. He had a large circle of relatives and friends in this locality, he having lived near what is now Culver, in Union Township until 1865, when he moved to Illinois.

Brother Shirley and his wife were among the early members of the Church in this County, he having united between 50 and 60 years ago. He was ever a stanch defender of the faith. He had lived to a ripe age, and was active until a few days before he died.

A letter written by him was received at this office the latter part of February, in which he stated it to be his intention to visit this County the coming summer. He was always a supporter of THE RESTITUTION, and we will miss his name from our list.

A good man, respected by all who knew him. His memory will live in the hearts of his children and kinsfolk. An old resident of the "40's" in speaking of him said "Did I know Frank Shirley? Yes, and he was a noble man."

The funeral was held March 15, and he rests—awaiting the call that will be sounded by the angel of the Lord, we hope ere long.

A Letter to Boys.

Dear Boys:

I have been thinking about you for a long time. I have wondered how many little boys there were in the homes where THE RESTITUTION comes as a weekly visitor. Don't you think it would be nice to find out and to know some of them by name? I would like to have the name of all the boys, their age, where they live, and how many little sisters they have. We have had a little talk about what we thought would be nice for the boys. I am not going to tell you now. I have a little boy, his name is Milford C. Boice, age 8 years. He said to me, Mamma, you write a letter to the boys and I will do your dusting for you, so we agreed. He thinks it is nice to be like boys in books he reads about. He thought it would be nice to be like "Buster Brown," and so played a joke on his mamma, but since it turned out with disaster to himself, and he has been real sick since, he thinks it is better to follow good examples, instead of the foolish and bad. So he keeps me thinking about boys most of the time. He likes to read about brave men in history, too, and likes to do hard things like big men, and talks very much about what he is going to do when he is a farmer. I expect some of you are talking about what you are going to do when you live in the city. Boys are like men, and men are boys grown older. In just a little while you will be the men whose names are in papers and books.

Life is very much like climbing a ladder. How do you begin to climb, from the top or bottom? Step by step, day by day, you must climb. You may climb very high and be like Lincoln, but as you climb there is always danger of falling, like the man who took Lincoln's life. I am going to tell you how to be brave, great and good. Learn to do the little things, and do them well. Learn to obey and do it cheerfully. This is a great thing to do, and you can do it now. This will help you to be truly great all your lives. Do the little things at home, in the house, on the farm, and at school. If you will do the little, and sometimes unpleasant, things to be done every day, you will grow strong and brave. It takes a brave boy to do things he doesn't like to do, and it takes a hero to keep from doing things he ought not to do. It is temptation you will have to battle with every day, and must learn to win in the fight to do right. I never saw a boy who, if told not to do a thing, was not tempted to do it any way. Sometimes we are told to do things we ought not to do. You must learn what is right and what is wrong. This you will learn little by little every day.

Jesus was tempted just as you when he was a little boy. He knows how to help little boys. We would like to read more about Jesus' boyhood days. We know his young life was full of activity, because no boy can grow and be healthy without being active.

The Bible says, "The child (Jesus) grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him." Luke ii. 40. You would understand this better if I should say, Boys, you are growing, your minds are getting stronger, you are getting wiser each day, and if you do right, God's favor will be upon you. Grace means favor. Jesus always did right and God said of him, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." I know you would like to have your father say to you, Beloved son, I am well pleased with you. How much better to know that God is pleased because you do right. God loves you and this is the reason he sent his Son into the world to be an example for you to follow.

You must first obey your parents for the Bible says, "Children obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right." Eph. vi. 1. If your parents are in the Lord, that is, Christians, they will not ask you do any thing wrong. Now boys, Jesus is our example or pattern. If we follow or pattern after men, we may be led into bad habits. Men often have bad habits, and you must be careful and not follow them, you must learn the wisdom that is from above. This you will learn from the Bible. Boys ought to know Jesus, and you can read about him and can follow him by doing little things you know he would like to have you do. Just a cup of cold water for Grandma, she is getting old and your little feet can run fast for it. Your hands and face may get dirty, but keep your minds clean, always clean and pure, then your words will be pleasant to hear and your deeds will be like those of good men in books you like so well to have read to you. You like to read about boys too. Did you ever read, "The Widow O'Callaghan's Boys"? I think you would like this book. There are many things boys ought to know so that they can protect themselves from wicked men who are planning to ruin them. Bad men very often are not those that look bad and dirty, but they wear good clothes and have very nice ways and treat the boys to candy, lemonade and then to cigarettes and beer. If you are not old enough to read this letter and understand it ask your mother to explain it to you, and then ask your father if he can't do something to protect you.

At a meeting of the Liquor Dealers of Ohio, at Wirthwein's Hall, Columbus, Ohio, one of the delegates, in the course of a speech on, "How to build up the Saloon Business," gave the following suggestions. The success of our business is dependent largely upon the creation of appetite for drink. Men who drink liquor, like others will die, and if there is no new appetite created our counters will be empty as well as our coffers. The open field for the creation of appetite is among the boys. After men have grown and their habits are formed, they rarely ever change in this regard. It will be needful, therefore, that missionary work be done among the boys, and I make this suggestion, gentlemen, that nickels expended in treats to the boys now, will return in dollars to your tills after the appetite has been formed. Above all create an appetite."

Boys be careful where you get your candy and lemonade, never forget when cold, hungry and tired 't would be better to suffer in body than to enter these dens of vice to be fed and warmed in these places prepared as traps to catch and kill you. Dear little boys, your mothers would protect you if they could, so keep close to mother, and follow Jesus. Be brave and good and keep clean in your thoughts and words. Learn to do little things well, be cheerful, kind and obedient, and God will bless you and protect you. Wicked men are doing just what I have said you should look out for. They are putting lemonade where boys can help themselves, and they put liquor in it too. They put liquor in candy too. Sometimes they put liquor in drink for big folks. They put liquor in a glass of milk for me once, it was in a resturant where I went to get a lunch, and I said things. It is hard to tell sometimes whether you are in a saloon or a resturant. Remember what I have told and be careful you are not caught in some of these traps that are set for boys and girls too.

To mothers: Do not neglect to warn your boys and girls of these things. You may be at ease and think your home is not in danger, and these things will never come to your homes and boys. The time has come when we must meet the enemy at our own thresholds, and we must do something more than talk. If we are Christians we will do something to protect our homes and care for our children as they go from our homes to the public schools.

Your friend,
HARRIET E. BOICE.

Dear Restitution:

It may be presumption in me, a poor, old, forlorn creature to write for THE RESTITUTION, and it is so good in you to keep sending the paper. There is a power, a beauty, a simplicity, a grandeur, a glory about the gospel of the kingdom of Christ in your paper and in the Bible that is not found elsewhere. My conception of the Deity, the Elohim that he dwells in eternity and is from everlasting to everlasting. He is the embodiment of power, wisdom, intelligence, mercy, light, life and love, so that his power and resources are inexhaustible, and he is fully able to fulfill all the sacred and precious promises that he has made to us, and more, his love is imperishable, not susceptible of being weighed.

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform,
He plants his feet upon the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

The above Lord is the one I worship.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring effort along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, as we believe, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

One Year $1.50. Six Months 75 Cents. Three Months 40 Cents.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisite of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

"I Will Deliver."

"Call upon me," when trouble s oppress
And the burden and worry cause deepest distress
And "I will deliver," my love show to thee,
And the burden and worry and trouble shall flee.

Not a doubt shall be thine, myself I will prove
To be to thee ever, all mercy and love.
Not for thy sake, all this will I do,
And my covenant keep [illegible]
But for sake of my name, that people may praise
When thy songs of thanksgiving to me thou shalt raise.

The rockers may shout in the day of my wrath
And Sing's mingled hosts may swarm in thy path,

Yet in day of thy trouble, my promise is sure;
The Word I have spoken, for age shall endure,
For they, nothing shall be who against thee contend,
When thou, O my servant, the seed of my friend,

Shall call upon me, and I hold thy right hand,
And bid thee "Fear not" and make thee to stand,
And help and redeem, while the mountains go down,
And the hills become chaff in the place of renown

MRS. S. ROXANA WEST.

The Kingdom of God. What is it? No. 3.

The history of the human family proves that human government has proven a failure. Laws are enacted and they are ignored, no government is strong enough to suppress crime. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in the day of slaughter, ye have condemned, and killed the just; and he doth not resist. James v. 4-6. This picture is a very vivid one and is representive of our times. Our cities are unable to close Saloons and brothels As these increase so does crime. Our ablest statesmen are unable to cope with these evils. We must look to a higher power for relief. Such scenes as are passing before us today have never been witnessed. Men are crying peace, peace, when there is no peace. Nations are building greater war vessels, and in every way strengthening their coast defences. Men's hearts are failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth. For the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Luke Luke xxi. 26. Man's arm is too weak to accomplish God's work. The Father has given all power into the hands of the Son that he may accomplish what God has purposed. The kingdom of God when fully established will bring about a universal peace over the entire earth. This is the promise that God made to Abraham and David. Abraham's seed is to bless all nations by introducing a peaceful rule. Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. The kingdom under the whole heaven is to be given to the saints of the Most High. This kingdom is to be everlasting and will not pass to other people. The promise to David was thine house, and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee and thy throne shall be established forever. 2Sam. vii. 16. The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne. Psa. cxxxii. 11.

Again in Acts ii. 30 we read, Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God hath sworn with an oath to him (David), that of the fruits of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on David's throne. These texts are ignored by the churches of today. They have no use for the doctrine of the restitution or re-establishment of the kingdom of God on this earth.

Every thing points to the fact that the cup of iniquity is about full. The Psalmist says, "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty." Could anything be more expressive of our times than this. When Jesus shall come with all his holy saints with him then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. Mark what follows this event. Is it not a ruling of the nations then existing on the earth? At the end of this chapter we see a portion of the nations are saved and a part are destroyed. This brings about a better condition of affairs. Then will begin the righteous reign of Jesus and his saints over the left of the nations as subjects. The kingdom has been prepared or set up and the laws of the kingdom have been published. This is not the work of an instant or a day, but of an age. Out of Zion shall go the law and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. He shall judge among many nations and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. A very different condition to what we have today. An event long wished and prayed for by prophets and all lovers of God's Word. Who among God's adopted sons and daughters do not love to read the 72nd Psalm? We are here introduced into the glorious reign of Christ and his saints. Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the King's Son. He shall judge thy people with righteousness and thy poor with judgment. The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness. He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. They shall fear thee as long as the sun and the moon endureth, through all generations. He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth. In his day shall the righteous flourish; and an abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth; he shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. He shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also and him that hath no helper. He shall spare the poor and needy and shall save the souls of the needy.

The above psalm paints a very beautiful picture. In the age spoken of here nothing shall harm in all my holy mountain, thus saith the Lord. The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of Lord as the waters cover the sea. Is it not a great honor to be one of the rulers in the times of the restitution spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began? This is the age in which the rulers are being elected (or taken) out of the Gentiles a people for his name. If you desire to be one of these rulers you must believe the gospel of the kingdom of God, repent of your sins and take upon yourself the name of Christ in baptism. After which you must walk in the new life. You have been created anew in Christ Jesus. We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them. Eph. ii. 10. We are no longer strangers and foreigners, but fellowcitizens with the saints and of the household of God. An honor much greater than is now conferred upon the rulers among the nations of the earth. Let us rejoice that the night is far spent, the day is at hand, let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. In this life meet with disappointments and trouble. Jesus said of his followers, I have given them thy Word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. His prayer was that the Father would not take them out of the world but that he would keep them from the evil. Let us as God's adopted children so live that when Christ shall appear we shall appear with him in glory. Let us remember that we have been made kings and priests unto our God and that the promise to us is that we shall reign on the earth. Also to him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne. Rev. iii. 21

I wish to close this article by quoting from Rev. xxi. "And I John saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them and they shall be his people and God himself shall be with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all all things new. And he said unto me, write; for these words are true and faithful (full of faith). And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountains of the water of life freely. He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God and he shall be my Son. This is the closing scene and brings about the times when nothing shall harm in all my holy mountain, and when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. Let us pray as did the apostle when he who testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Even so come Lord Jesus.

D. C. ROBISON.

"Come Out of Babylon."

Evidently this prophecy refers to spiritual Babylon, signifying babel or confusion so characteristic of our times. Rev. xviii. 2, 3, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and cage of every unclean and hateful bird. For all nations have drunk of the wrath of her fornication, etc. And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. God in his love has sent his children the warning cry, "Come out." He will have a peculiar people zealous of good works, a people for his name, a people that care more to please God than the world or a worldly church. Bro. Woodward, are you sure this is the application to make of this Scripture? Just as sure as Paul was when he says, "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Conditions—Come out from the world and stay out. 2 Cor. vi. 14. The greatest effort is required to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Israel's sin and final rejection by God was because they were all the time desiring, and doing the things God had forbidden, not content with angel's food, they lusted after the leaks and meat of Egypt. The wrought miracles of God for their benefit counted nothing to them when they thought of Egypt's attractions. Similar conditions exist today—God's love is the same—patiently has he been waiting all these centuries for his church to manifest his willingness to be obedient to his wishes and separate herself from Egypt or Babylon—confusion. But O, the world's attractions—excursions wherein the day of rest is spent with the multitude of pleasure-seekers, gamblers, intemperate, fornicators, every kind of people minus the few patient, prayerful toilers for God and eternity. And worse than this even, the popular church amusements by the professed Christian churches—pedro, progressive euchre, church fairs, church concerts, where everything in costume, music and decoration is used to attract the world and get their money.

The apostle says, For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries. 1 Peter iv. 3. Revellings mean dancing, drinking and drinking with the drunkard. They that do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. I am always sorry to see in a Christian home a pack of cards or a checker board. These are all things of the world or by gamblers and the world, can we not use our time—God's time—to better advantage? I have kept house more than fifty years and never saw any necessity for such things, but witnessed at one time while boarding with a very intelligent family—the card table drawn out every evening—the husband and wife and others who were boarding there, gathered in earnest competition with the cards. Each evening I noticed as I sat alone reading, the husband and wife becoming more angry, for each knew the other was cheating. It did not take many weeks to finish the sad story of a broken family—each going their way out into the world—for what! Just a "pack of cards." I said then if I ever had a home of my own, these devises of Satan should never enter its sacred portals—I have kept my word. Suppose, my dear ones, you should come to Dutton and find a pack of cards on the center table, a checker board in the corner, what would you say? I think you would go home with strange thoughts. But if it is wrong for us, it is just as wrong for you. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Begin at the cradle to teach a child veneration, love to God, why to love, why to live righteous, holy, temperate lives, temperance is one of the most important lessons to be learned. Teach the Bible to the children, get their characters well formed for good in early life, and you will not have to resort to all sorts of indoor and outdoor games to entertain them. And then when the child starts away to school, O parents, know if possible where they are going. Our higher institutions of learning are fast becoming hot beds of infidelity. The human mind is much easier led to believe in Huxley, Darwin, Spencer and a score of higher critics, when some trusted human voice tells the story of why you should believe them, than the mute and silent life page of the homeless Christ and his matchless offer of salvation. O may God help the parents to save their children from this untoward generation, from this Babel of confusions. The simple gospel with God's promises for the future is a sufficient incentive to do right. Paul never said a more truthful thing than for the truly converted person, "The things we once loved we now hate." Such have no time to waste in useless sports or games. In spite of all we may say or think, God has said he would have a clean church and he will, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. Who will be able to stand when the judgment shall sit and the book is opened, or who "will cry for the rocks and mountains to fall upon them to hide them, from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath has come, and who shall be able to stand?" "Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that you may be able to withstand in the evil days, and having done all (overcome all) to stand."

The Bereans Column.

Dear Bereans:

It is some time since our society at Omro, Wis., has sent in a report, so I will try to tell you what the Bereans here are doing and how they are progressing in the work.

Our meetings are still held each Sunday evening at the home of the President. Although the attendance is not quite so large as formerly there has been a considerable increase in interest and enthusiasm. All of our members seem to have progressed greatly in aggressive Christian service during the past year. It is very evident there has been much increase in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The year just passed has seemingly offered to us greater opportunity in the fellowship and service of God than ever before, and I am pleased to report that many of these opportunities have not been neglected. Several members of our society are conducting and assisting in conducting Sunday Schools in neighboring districts where for some time previous no Sunday School has been held. In one of these Sunday Schools conducted by Brothers Irving and George Daggett, a Berean Society is now being organized. God grant that it may be the means of leading many into the glorious light of the gospel.

At a recent meeting our society decided to send regularly at least one article each month for publication in the Berean Column of THE RESTITUTION. I will enclose with this letter two or three articles, written by members of our society, which they have read from time to time at our meetings. The one by Sister Ethel Loper being read at our first meeting of the year.

Greetings and best wishes from our society to all the Bereans and to all those of like precious faith.

May God be with us and prosper our work, helping us to do his will and to show ourselves approved unto him, workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth.

Your Sister in the Blessed Hope of the soon coming of Christ.

EVA S. BRADLEY.

Dear Bereans:

Let each Society follow this example—send an article each month to our column

COMMITTEE.

Dear Bereans:

Not long ago a gentleman in addressing the members of a High School took for his subject, "Go On." He made three points in his discourse, namely:—(1) Go on, (2) Go on diligently and pleasantly, (3) Keep going on, on which he expanded by various means. His talk tended to encourage the pupils in educational advancement.

Why not follow out these thoughts in our study of the Bible? We as Bereans especially should "Search the Scriptures," moreover, we should study, not from a sense of duty, but for the pleasure and profit resulting from it, and lastly, we should never cease to study the Scriptures, for there will always be something to learn by further examination.

A boy, who graduated from a school at the head of his class and with high honors, never gained a higher position than that of janitor, while the young man, who graduated at the foot of the same class, finally became President of the United States. The cause was this, the former after graduation had no inclination toward more learning, but the latter's thirst for knowledge was never quenched, consequently he was unceasing in his study.

"The fear of wisdom and the knowledge of the Lord is understanding." Prov. ix. 10. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom and that getteth understanding." Prov. iii. 13. "Hear instruction and be wise and refuse it not." Prov. viii. 33. For whoso findeth me, findeth life, and shall obtain favor with God." Prov. xiii. 35.

Let us ever be seekers after a knowledge of the truth as revealed in God's Holy Word.

OLIVE DREW.

Dear Bereans:

How much there is to encourage us as daily searchers of the Scriptures in the Word itself. The Bible is to us the great Mother of truth, and to it we can go for instruction and guidance. There we find the plan of salvation which God in his goodness has revealed through his inspired prophets, and upon [illegible] the Savior, who said, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life."

A blessing is promised to those who love the Word, and follow it's teachings. "Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted Word which is able to save your souls."

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deeds." James i. 21-25.

Surely if we accept the leading of the Scripture we shall be able to say, as did the Psalmist:—"Great peace have they which love thy law; and nothing shall offend them. (R. V.) They have none occasion of stumbling."

ADA A. DREW.

Dear Bereans:

We as a body of workers have a great opportunity for doing good. We are living in the last days, where we are told in 2 Tim. iii. 4, that men shall be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. How plainly we see the vast number seeking worldly pleasures, some of them having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

May God help us to sow the seed of truth, and be worthy of eternal life when Jesus comes.

JESSIE CLAYPOOL.

WHY DOES THE LORD DELIGHT IN THE MEEK?

To possess meekness there must be absolute control of the passions, and when the passions have been controlled most of the dangers of life can be avoided. The meek are not nearly as ready to disobey or follow their own inclination. Moses, the example of meekness for all ages, followed his commands without complaint, even though his tasks seemed almost hopeless at times, he never disobeyed but once. There can be no arrogant pride in the meek. Meekness also means endurance. It takes more strength of character to endure an injury than to retort, anyone can do that. The meek have always been down-trodden and God is a God of the oppressed. Perhaps this is another reason why he delights in them for he must do so very much or he would not give them the earth for an inheritance. We might take as an example of meekness the Christ, whose whole life taught that lesson, and especially in that great lesson which he taught as he hung upon the cross, when instead of rebuking his persecutors he prayed the Father for their forgiveness. How very few there are who are willing to follow another's way instead of their own.

GERTRUDE ELLIS.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

We need what is due us on subscriptions and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor,

The Restitution.

Plymouth, Indiana, March 28, 1906.

To show what a farce the Russian Douma, or Parliament, really is, and how the people of the country regard it, we give extracts from dispatches of March 21:

The primary elections for members of the douma now in progress are growing more farcical every day. In one St. Petersburg factory today the workmen formally chose as their delegate a pet dog called Rosa, declaring that the selection was made in a spirit of economy, as if she should be elected it would cost the government only 7 cents a day to maintain this delegate instead of the allowance of $5, and at the same time the dog would be quite as useful as a representative of the workmen's interests as any of their candidates, who have a chance of election. The workmen of another factory designated as their delegate the factory chimney, on the ground that it would not suffer from machine gun fire.

There is much reason for the distrust with which the people regard the elections. The government allows no man who favors the people to be a candidate. If such a man is nominated, or even talked of, he is immediately thrown into prison on a trumped up charge or is compelled to leave the district. The employes of the Siemens & Halske electrical works, for instance, urged the nomination of one of their own number. He immediately disappeared from the works, and eventually was obliged to quite the locality.

An elector chosen by the peasants of Simferpol was a school teacher. He was imprisoned on a political charge immediately he was elected. The peasants refused to elect another delegate.

In the Obouchoff ordance foundry, near St. Petersburg, where 12,000 hands are employed under direction of the ministry of war, the men refused to choose electors.

The workmen in the government's principal cartridge factory at Tula refused to choose any of the five delegates allowed under the electoral law. Workmen in the imperial railroad workshops at Wanovo and Vosnessensk also refused to participate in the election. The employes of several leading independent industrial enterprises adopted the same attitude.

An insignificant minority of peasants participated in the elections in the provinces. In the Utstujna district of Nijni Novgorod only 1,000 received election notices, although 8,000 were entitled to vote.

The provisions for a national assembly in Russia, promised in the Czar's manifesto last fall, are disappointing in many respects. They constitute neither a constitution nor a "bill of rights" for the Russian people. They do create a popular assembly, but the promises granted to it are so hedged about with restrictions and conditions that it will be rather a parliament in name than in fact.

Nevertheless, by the terms of the manifesto the emperor himself is powerless to revoke what he has now given. This constitutes the great victory which the people have won. They at least have an authoritative medium through which they can make their voice heard, and it is in this assembly probably that the great historical struggle against prerogative and privilege will be fought out.

The Intermediate State.

Brother A. Robinson, of Belleville, Ontario, has seen fit to write a letter for his home paper, criticising certain views set forth by a minister at his place of residence, and we are pleased to reproduce it here, that others may be stimulated to thus speak up when truth is assailed.

Editor Ontario:

There appeared in two issues of the Intelligencer recently reports of two sermons delivered by Mr. Blagrave, on the intermediate state, and since publication of these there have appeared also some letters from correspondents criticising Mr. Blagrave's statements in reference to the subject mentioned. These productions having created considerable interest in certain circles, and as it seems to the writer that the widest possible circulation should be given to the discussion of matters affecting our future destiny, and especially as to what the Word of God teaches relating thereto, I crave space in your valuable journal for some remarks bearing on the view set forth by the gentleman.

Mr. Blagrave, in his first sermon, said, "The theory that, in the intermediate state, the soul was dead, or asleep, as some believed, could not be accepted by Christians. The soul was immortal, and could not cease to exist." Now it seems to the writer it would have been more satisfactory if the preacher had supported this statement with a few plain Scripture quotations, for if such an important doctrine as this is, be true, one would naturally expect it to be sustained on nearly every page of the Bible, and we should be careful to give Scripture reasons for the hope that is within us —1 Pet. iii. 15.

The writer of this has searched the Scriptures from the first of Genesis to the last of Revelations and has not been able to find as much as one passage which states that the soul is immortal and cannot cease to exist, as Mr. B. declares. The nearest statement I can find to this effect was made by the tempter of Eve in the Garden of Eden. God had said, "Ye shall surely die," but the serpent contradicted God by saying unto the woman "Ye shall not surely die;" and it seems to me that the great majority of church-goers give greater credence to the declaration of the deceiver, than to the dictum of the Creator.

In verification of God's pronouncement Adam did die and returned unto the ground from whence he was taken. In this connection it seems to be very important that we should note the fact that after Adam had partaken of the forbidden fruit God said "Lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life and eat, and live forever, (become immortal), therefore the Lord sent him forth from the garden. From this it is evident that the man did not possess immortality, and also that allowing sinners to attain to this was not in accordance with the Creator's plan.

Now considering that the writer is only an unassuming layman, and a humble student of the Bible, therefore seeking for truth, he will submit a few other passages bearing on the subject of the nature of man, trusting that Mr. Blagrave will be kind enough to harmonize them with his view of the subject.

"Shall mortal man be more just than God?" Job iv. 17. "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 19. "I also am formed out of clay." Job. xxxiii. 6. "And Abraham . . . said, Behold now I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord which am but dust and ashes." Gen. xviii. 27. We find here first a plain assumption in Job that man is mortal, and second that dust and ashes constitutes our composition.

But possibly you may say this language has reference to the body only and does not affect the immortality of the soul. In answer to this it will be seen that the language applies to the ego or "I"—the individuality; the man or person. As to the soul, we have this statement made in Ezekiel: "The soul that sinneth it shall die." xviii. 4 and 20. "He spared not their soul from death." Psa. lxxviii. 50. "None can keep alive his own soul." Psa. xxii. 29. "Let him know that he that converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death." James v. 20. "He that doeth that which is lawful is right, he shall save his soul alive." Ezek. xviii. 27. We also gather from the Scriptures that the soul can be destroyed —"And it shall come to pass that every soul that will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed." Acts iii. 23. "God is able to destroy both body and soul." Matt. x. 28. "But those that seek my soul to destroy it shall go into the lower parts of the earth." Psa. lxiii. 9. Many more passages could be quoted showing that the soul of man is subject to death and destruction, therefore it cannot, in my humble opinion, be either mortal or indestructible. In fact we are told by Paul that "the King of kings and Lord of lords only hath immortality." Tim. vi. 16. God also is spoken of as being immortal in 1 Tim. i. 17, but it is never stated that man (body, soul, or spirit) is immortal, if it were so declared we would have God's Word contradicting itself, considering what we have just quoted. But, on the contrary as we have already seen, man is spoken of as being "mortal" and in harmony with this we read that immortality is something to be sought for "by patient continuance in well-doing." Rom. ii. 7.

Immortality is something "this mortal must put on" at the resurrection, not something that every man, woman and child possesses inherently. Why seek for immortality if we already possess it? Perhaps Mr. Blagrave will be kind enough to answer this question, and at the same time harmonize the several passages quoted with his theory.

With your permission, Mr. Editor, I shall through your journal devote a letter to Mr. Blagrave's second sermon on the intermediate state, and therein will bring forward some passages which I feel do not agree with the ideas he is said to have promulgated.

Talking and Doing.

In sermon and in song we hear it discoursed frequently upon the subject of hearing and doing. While hearing the truth is good, it brings obligation for doing. There is also a relation between saying and doing not to be disregarded. Preaching never excuses any one from practicing; indeed, the fact that one has exhorted others gives them a right to expect that he will, so far as possible, give the world a practical illustration of the meaning of his exhortation. Some one found fault with a writer upon domestic science, because no one had ever seen any demonstrations of what she herself could do in the line of culinary art. The woman excused herself on the ground that, with her lecturing and writing, she had no time for cooking and baking. "Then do less talking," was the reply. When you have so much preaching to do that practice must be neglected, it is time to cut down the preaching.

The fact is that those who are worth most in moving the hearts of men are those who are urging others to do what they themselves feel impelled to do. The difference between D. L. Moody and many others who were far better equipped than he, lay in the fact that speaking was not a profession with him. His talking grew out of his doing. He was often erroneous in his conclusions and at fault in his logic as he was in his grammar, but he believed that his sermons were quite as good for D. L. Moody as they were for other men.

It was said of Jesus that never man so spake, but we are also told that he went about doing good. When he came down from the mountain after having given that matchless sermon, he cleansed the leper and healed the centurion's servant.

The minister who preached till only one was left, and said it was a pity to stop preaching as long as there was any one anxious to hear the gospel, succeeded far better in scattering his congregation than he did in scattering the good seed of the kingdom. Too much wind blows the soil away. What earnest words are these of J. M. Buckley: "The whole art of making a good speech is to have something pertinent and moving to say; to say something all the time, to say it vivaciously; and, if it is a religious speech, to say it with religious feeling, and to stop when every one wishes you to go on.

Many of the darkest days in history have borne the choicest fruit to the glory of God and the good of man. It was a dark day when Israel groaned in the bitterness of the Egyptian bondage. But if the bondage had been less bitter, Israel would have rested content in Egypt; out of the bondage came the exodus, the Messiah. It was a dark day when the ardent, brave, eloquent Stephen, hope of the early church was stoned; but out of that day came Paul. It was a dark day when the persecution that arose about Stephen ravaged the disciples; but out of it came the world-wide preaching of the gospel. It was a dark day when the Puritans, finding no rest for the sole of their feet, sailed from the Old World; but out of it came America. Darkest of all days was that on which the sun hid his face from the Divine Man expiring on Calvary; yet all our hopes and all our happiness comes from that day.

Love is a flame that burns even in the midst of the great deep. "Many waters cannot quench his love, neither can floods drown it." It triumphs over all. It never faileth either in time or in eternity.

Hope paves the golden way to bliss, and cheerfulness is the lamp that lights the beauteous walk.

Innocence is like polished armor, it adorns and it defends.

"Lovest Thou Me More Than These?"

The question of Lord to Peter comes home to our hearts when meditating on the tender ties that bind us to those of like precious faith, "Lovest thou me more than these?" We love the disciples of Jesus, we love our friends, but do we love Jesus more? Can we leave them for him: give up their dear companionship to do his work? We have many plans in mind for their pleasure, there are pretty books that we want to give them, happy entertainments in which we want them to share, can we put these all behind us when some great need of the Master's cause comes in sudden appeal to our hearts? That is the test of our love. Loving Jesus "more than these." We will set him before them and will give to save the perishing lambs and sheep what we intended to give to them. Will we, though discouraged by the waywardness of some, and the coldness of others, still feed the little outcast lambs that are looking to us for the bread of life? Will we, though others hang back, send the precious loaves of truth to feed the hungry, wandering, perishing sheep of Jesus? "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee," and that "I will do this for thee," is the devout answer of every true Christian heart. The path that he would have us tread, may grow more and more narrow; closer and closer may press the walls on either hand, the enemy may taunt us, and shoot at us from the heights; they may close round us in ambuscade; the fearful ones may desert; the weak ones may falter, yet we will hold the pass, and the banner that we have lifted on behalf of the Truth, shall not be snatched from our hands and trailed in the dust, but shall be carried on and on, to enlist others of the Savior's sheep. It is the Banner of the Living One, that we are marching under and it must never be taken. O the Bible, the precious Bible, what would we do without it? We must uphold it, we must stand for its truths, though all fall out of the ranks, but a small Gideon band.

The days are evil, and there are still darker ones ahead, but the morning comes on apace, and with that morning victory, eternal and glorious. Few believe, but Jesus will reward all who hold fast to their faith, and toil on to the end, others may hinder, but he upholds, he blesses the givers. He pours the oil of gladness into the hearts of those who put the needful "ammunition" into the hands of his evangelists. There are piteous calls for help; who will answer them? There are battles to be fought on the outposts where the lone sentinels are standing. These fields can be captured if we but rally to the support of our leaders, will we? Let us all give something and raise a fund for missionary work in isolated places. What a strength and blessing it would be to the Household to have others gathered in. We love the lambs, we love the sheep with a depth and tenderness that words cannot tell, but we love Jesus more, and because we love him we would fain feed them and lead them to fountains of living water, where their feverish thirst may be quenched and their pain be taken away forever. O the lost lambs! O the lost sheep! Who will deny himself and take up his cross, and come after Jesus, that these may be saved? They are the Savior's lambs, and the Savior's sheep and he has left it to us to seek and to save them.

Never Rose from the Dead.

It has fallen to two English clergymen to provide the latest religious sensation. One is Forbes Phillips, vicar of Gorleston, who has dramatized Guy Thorne's book "When It Was Dark," and who in reference thereto has declared emphatically that he does not believe Christ ever rose from the dead.

The other is the Rev. S. W. Thackeray of Harlow, who has become a publican and declared it is not breaking the sabbath to go fishing on Sunday.

Phillips in a talk with a newspaper representative, said that he does not believe even if Christ's body were discovered it would create the ridiculous sensation throughout the world that Thorne predicts it would.

"For my own part, I declare plainly, as a high church clergyman, who, indeed, wears vestments and lights candles on the altar, that I do not consider it an article of Christian faith that Christ's body did rise from the tomb," declared Phillips. "On the contrary, I believe it did not.

"I believe that if we were to make a careful exploration in Palestine today we might actually come across the sacred tomb and discover within it the precious body of our Lord, or, at all events, dim remains of it, as it was hidden away by Joseph of Arimathea for fear of the Jews and of the great disappointment to the disciples had the body been found in the tomb on resurrection morning.

"Christ," continued Phillips, "rose in spirit. It was his spirit that appeared to the disciples so constantly after the crucifixion. It was his spirit that ascended into heaven."

And still the work of the Higher Critics goes on. This Mr. Phillips believes it was only Christ's spirit that rose from the dead—only his Spirit that ascended into heaven. Did he never read Christ's own words. Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have. Ah! Mr. Phillips well may the Christian wield say of you and your ilk as the blessed personal Christ said to the doubting Thomas, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless but believing." How little it matters what I or you or the so called great men believe, unless we have a "Thus saith the Lord," to prove it.

Editor Restitution:

I will write a few lines for the encouragement of those that are contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and when I read of the work of Bro. Wilson and his report of the isolated brethren that have not the means to secure speakers. It reminds me of the call of Paul to come over to Macedonia to help us. Acts xvi. 9 to 13. And a certain woman named Lydia was baptized; she besought Paul. If he had judged her faithful, to come into her house and abide. How many brethren that need and are hungry for the hearing of the gospel are willing to furnish shelter and food to those that are delaring the gospel, but have not the means to pay traveling expenses, to say nothing of pay for services of those that are willing to leave home and family and devote their time in the Master's vineyard? And at the same time there are brethren that have their thousands, and hold on to it as close as the worldly minded that make no profession. And when it is known that brethren that gave their time and money out in the Master's cause died penniless, this should not be as stewards in the household of faith. And as Paul says in Romans x. 14, How shall they call on him whom they never believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher; and how shall they preach except they be sent? Cannot we see that those that preach must be sent, and some one must assist in sending those that preach? I leave this with those that are amply able of our brethren to furnish means to send men that can preach and take care of them that preach. Read the lesson given by the Master, Matt. xxv. 31-40, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

I have just returned from a visit where I lived forty years, and at Lette and Fredonia, Iowa. I was invited to deliver a few discourses at each place, and will return and speak last of this week. I spoke in the Methodist church at Fredonia where I attended church when I was a Methodist. There was a large audience all the time, they were hungry for the bread of life, and many wept during my discourses on the Prince of peace. Isa. ix. 6-7. I have been called to Hopgood, North Carolina, where I preached seven and eight years ago, and expect to leave by the first of April and expect to preach in the South during the summer, and longer if my health permits, as I cannot remain in this climate on account of my health.

Yours in hope of the soon coming of the Master.

D. M. Hudler.

Dear Restitution:

Please allow me to thank the brothers and sisters of like precious faith who have so liberally ordered the discussion on the Restoration of Israel, between my husband, Dr. T. J. Daniel, and Elder John A. Cargile. I would like to write each of them a personal letter and thank them, but it is not possible. I do hope that all other readers of The Restitution, who have not ordered the discussion will do so, and by that means help us a little, and at the same time get value received. The profits are very small, but every little helps. I do hope the time will come when some of our preaching brethren can come this way and hold a meeting. Thank God we have a house of worship in this town in which we can hold meetings. It is a house of which we are not ashamed. Of course the weight fell heavily upon me and my husband, but we do not regret it, and we freely donate it to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. Again thanking those who have ordered the debate, and hoping others will order, I beg to remain your Sister in the faith.

Mrs. Dr. Daniels.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed money for the dear, old paper for another year, as I could not think of doing without it. My Father took it a great many years and I have taken it ever since his death, and intend taking it as long as I live. Its weekly visits have been a great comfort to me in my lonely hours, as I live alone. It is a great pleasure to read the letters of all the dear ones of like precious faith. When I read of the good meetings in different places how I long to be there. I had the pleasure of hearing Brother Austin at Niagara Falls, last fall when I was visiting there. It was a great pleasure to hear a gospel sermon once more. I often think of the grand sermons we had when Brother Zilmer was here, and long to hear him again. I pray that he may long be spared to preach the dear old gospel we love so well, and pray that we may all so live that we may meet in that world where parting will be unknown.

I long to see that happy time. May it be our happy lot is my prayer.

Your sister in the one Faith.

Maggie C. Farewell.

Dear Restitution.

The Restitution is very dear to me. It has been the friend and counsellor of youth, and is the comforter of declining days, and I look for it weekly as we look for the face of a dear friend. It keeps us in touch with the church in Michigan, and the words of cheer given in its pages strengthen and gladden our hearts. My father took it away back in the sixties when it was in pamphlet form, and we were children, and it seems the nearest to the old home of anything we have, and I hope I may be able to take it as long as I live. May the Lord bless all concerned in making it what it is, and grant that means may be furnished to keep it published till the Lord comes, is my prayer.

Mrs. Emma L. Cronk.

Don't Worry—Try it this Week.

Let no day pass without personal, secret communication with God. Begin the day by taking counsel from the Word of God, if but one verse while you are dressing. Put away all bitter feeling and brooding over slights or wrongs, no matter from whom received. Have on your heart some person or cause for which you are pleading God's blessings each day. Let no opportunity pass without owning your Savior before others, and modestly urging all to accept his service. Let no opportunity pass to say a kind word, do some kind deed, or at least smile upon those you meet. Do this, not affectedly but sincerely, "as unto the Lord." Guard well the door of your lips that no unchaste word, jest, or story, no slander or cutting remarks, no irreverent or untruthful statement shall pass out. Remember each day that Christ will surely come, suddenly come, quickly come; and it may be that this day will determine how his coming will find us, as it must to thousands.—Selected by Sarah Armitage.

If you can manage yourself well you will not likely have much trouble with the rest of the world.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

Poetry.

Working Silently.

Silently, silently comes the light
Edging the clouds with gold;
Clearing the pages of nature's book
Over which darkness rolled;
Making no boast of the work it does,
Chasing the mist away;
Opening millions of eyes to read—
Turning the night to day.

Silently, silently weaves the cold
Beautiful flakes of snow,
Noiselessly throwing the perfect robe
Over the seed below;
Making no boast of the work it does,
Guarding from frosty blast
Coat'lest seeds for the harvest days
Husbandmen freely cast.

Silently, silently falls the dew.
Bathing the evening flowers;
Making no boast of the work it does
During the silent hours.
Beautiful pearls with their rainbow hues
Shine in the rising sun,
Quietly telling of kindly deeds
Ever in darkness done.

Silently, silently flows the stream,
Onward through wood and glen;
Bearing its boon of life and joy
Down to the homes of men;
Symbol of quiet and useful life,
Noiseless its waters glide;
Ever it gracefully spreads the trees,
Branches on either side.

Silently, silently breathe the flowers
Fragrance through morning air,
Speaking to men of the Father's love,
Proving His tender care;
Modestly asking us, "Where's your faith
Since he has said to you,
He who cares for the lilies fair
Cares for his children too?"

Silently, silently angels come,
Tending us through the day;
Noiseless watching around the couch
Where we have knelt to pray;
Sent by the Lord of Seraphim,
Down from the golden street,
Moving unsullied through sinful world
Swiftly with noiseless feet.

Silently, silently let us work,
Even if we be unseen;
Glad if the joy of the house shall prove Faithful our work has been.
Pleased in the Lord when his greatest works
Noiselessly do his will;
Quietly working, a lowly child
Pleases him better still.

A Retrospect. No. 2.

The lifetime of the writer, or that part of it already past falls within a remarkable period of church history. From near the date when Daniel Whitby gave to the professed Christian world his New Hypothesis down to the time of the "Millerite Movement," beginning about 1833, the popular view, that the world would be converted before our Lord's return to reign on the earth, was scarcely called in question.

The preaching of William Miller, of Low Hampton, N. Y., and his co-laborers, Himes and Bates and many others, roused the attention of the Protestant denominations to the fact that there was another side to the question of the Advent. The preaching of these enthusiastic men produced more than a mere ripple on the Theological waters, to be followed by a dead calm.

What was started back there has not subsided but gone on increasing in volume and power until today; and now the once unpopular view numbers its adherents by thousands, and among its advocates in pulpit and press, men of unquestioned piety and scholarly attainments. The bulk of literature issued and issuing from the press advocating this phase of Bible truth, is enormous. Today it is not confined by denominational lines but finds many earnest defenders in the different so-called Evangelical churches. I will not set up the claim that the adherents of the doctrine are in the majority. They are far from this.

Mr. Miller made a mistake in setting the date of the Advent. This he did, not on the claim of a prophetic gift of his own, but on the ground of what he thought was a fair application of the prophetic periods as measures of time terminating at the Advent. Though this was all, he got the name of a false prophet, in some quarters, and the theory he put before the world was styled "a craze" and "a delusion."

The date fixed for the event was a certain day in 1844. This passed without witnessing the descent of the Son of Man. This gave a back-set to faith in definite time; though little groups of believers since have settled on different dates only to meet with disappointment. The '44 date passed without any very serious unsettlement of faith in the coming of the Lord as a pre-millennial event and possibly very near. Around the advent and associated events the hope of the true church continues to cling. Though the great majority of the so-called Christian churches continue to hold the doctrine of a post-millennial advent, very few would stand for this in a public oral discussion. A few men have written books on this side of the question only to meet reviews from the other or pre-millennial side so damaging as to stop further discussion.

Honesty must be accorded Mr. Miller: that he was a fanatic must in truth be denied. Let any one place himself, by a mental operation in Miller's stead with the advent of the Great Judge impending, and to take place on a certain day, which day would fix the doom of countless millions, dead and alive, and that doom of the overwhelming majority eternal torture, indescribable anguish—he will conclude that Miller and his followers conducted themselves in perfect accord with the nature of the scenes which to them seemed so terribly real. Lands and homes and money were worth nothing except so far as they would meet present needs and further the cause of the advent message. Some no doubt afterwards regretted their prodigal liberality.

There were some things they did not do. They did not put on ascension robes and go out on high hills to meet their descending Lord. The writer was old enough to appreciate in a measure the situation. I well remember the solemn emotions that at times agitated my mind in view of what I was told was impending, which I could not dispute, but concerning which I could share the doubts of older persons. This, and the excitement of play kept me from brooding too seriously on what was regarded by most every person about me as a dire calamity in case it should come to pass. I remember too that nearly every issue of our weekly paper had something to say about the Millerites, and about prodigies in heaven and on earth, occurrences marvelous if not miraculous. Though men doubted and scoffed they could not shake off all fear. World-burning it was believed was in the Bible and no one in that day even thought of trying to prove that the fire would be less extensive than Noah's flood; so all chance of escape for the wicked would be cut off. Miller lived several years this side the day he set for the Lord's coming, but I do not think he ever gave up the theory of a universal conflagration at the epoch of the Lord's coming. From 1844 to the end of his life was a period in which other important Bible questions came up for investigation and settlement, and many who shared with him the labors of giving the advent message to the world, and meeting the disappointment on the passing of the day, embraced several vital points not found in the creeds of the churches; he lived and died orthodox except in his view of the advent. Himes, who was for a while a staunch advocate of the views held by Miller, later embraced the doctrine of life only through Christ; man's entire mortality, unconsciousness in death, and the destruction the wicked, and became proprietor and editor of a paper promulgating these views.

The spirit of investigation was awakened in the minds of many. Ministers and laymen alike set themselves to the task of re-reading, and re-studying the Bible. The motto was, "God said what he meant, and meant what he said." "A thus saith the Lord" was insisted on as the end of all controversy. I can call to mind by name a score or more of ministers in our state (Indiana) who had occupied orthodox (?) pulpits, but abandoned these and their churches for the truth's sake. They were honest and brave, and self-sacrificing.

The time for independent thought had come. Theories hoary with age and backed by learning and numbers, were fearlessly assailed and demolished, if the Scriptures were to be understood in accordance with the laws of language. This the opposition denied, claiming that the Bible was a spiritual Book and that its truths must be spiritually discerned. I remember that more than one opponent, when unable to meet the plain statements of the Scriptures, would quote a passage in which there was a figure of speech, in proof of his contention that the Scriptures were to be understood spiritually. Such passages as this would be cited: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him, shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John iv. 14. Now to construe this literally would be very foolish. A passage like this, in the estimation of our opponents settled the question in favor of the spiritual interpretation. A man with whom I was one day discussing stepped up to me and shook his finger under my nose, and said, "You are a natural man and cannot discern the things of the spirit." This he affirmed on the ground that I claimed man had no immortal soul.

JOHN L. WISER.

Notes by the Way.

On the last day I was at Quinlan, Oklahoma, about noon time, two gentlemen drove up to the door, and requested Sister Gates to furnish them with dinner. During the conversation which ensued, it was soon manifest that one of them was a Sabbatarian. He ignored being a Seventh Day Adventist of the Battle Creek stripe. His peculiar cult had its headquarters at Stanberry, Missouri. He said that he could not have any more fellowship with an Adventist, than he could a Methodist. I found him to be an intelligent gentleman, who was well informed on many Biblical topics, but weak on a topic wherein he thought he was strong, viz: the Sabbath. After dinner he opened an argument with myself and Sister Gates on that question, but he felt his weakness, before he got through with us.

They certainly have the advantage in argument with those who observe Sunday as the Sabbath, and transfer the seventh day Sabbath law from the seventh to the first day of the week.

We took the position with him that the Sabbath law was nothing more than a civil statute made for the government of the nation of Israel alone; and had no more binding effect upon nations outside of that commonwealth, than a statute law of the United States had over those subject to the German Commonwealth. Demand Bible proof of a Sabbatarian that it has binding effect, and you have them bound hand and foot, as it were. This gentleman felt the force of this at once.

They in effect, make Sabbath keeping a substitute for the gospel message. Salvation depends upon accepting the theory of Sabbath observance. I told him I never yet saw a person who accepted the Sabbath theory that ever kept the Sabbath, according to the law given for its observance, and consequently every one of them were under the sentence of death, for Sabbath breaking.

Q. What constitutes a breach of the Sabbath?

A. "Any manner of work." Doing chores, feeding stock, building fires, etc. This is all work. No "manner of work," was allowed. No cooking was allowed, "seething" (boiling) or "baking." If your wife asks you to bring in an armful of wood on the Sabbath day, and you comply with her request, you are a condemned man under the Sabbath law. See a case of that kind in Num. xv. 32: "They found a man that gathered sticks on the Sabbath day."

Q. What did they do with him?

A. "All the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones until he died." Now, I said to my friend there is not a man living but what does some "manner of work" on the Sabbath, and if the Sabbath law, and the penalty for breaking the Sabbath were now in force, every professed Sabbath-keeper would have to be taken outside and stoned to death. I asked the man if a law without a penalty was any account? He said it was not. If Sabbatarians are so zealous in wanting to preserve the Sabbath law, why are they not as zealous in trying to preserve the Sabbath penalty? Answer. It comes home a little too close. It pinches the flesh, too tight. You don't hear them arguing for the preservation of the Sabbath penalty. Every one of them are conscious that they all do some "manner of work" on the Sabbath day.

I asked my friend if he could account for the fact that the New Testament did not enjoin Sabbath observance, nor condemn sabbath-breaking?

A. He could not. Now, sir, I said, listen to this: "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." Gal. v. 4. Is it a safe thing to do to observe the law, and thus make "Christ of no effect," "are fallen from grace?"

"Ye observe (Sabbath) days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." Gal. iv. 10, 11.

The man began to look serious as these testimonies were quoted to him. He then made an effort to separate the commandments written on tables of stone from the balance of the law. Now, as far as the tables of stone are concerned, listen to this: "If the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious so that the children of Israel could not stedfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which was to be done away." 2 Cor. iii. 7.

Now my friend, I said, what in the world do you want to hold on to a "ministration of death" for, which "ministration of death," was that which was "written and engraven in stones." "The children of Israel could not look steadfastly to the end of that which was abolished," neither do Sabbatarians.

Q. What was abolished?

A. "The ministration of death, written and engraven in stones."

Q. Was the Sabbath a "ministration of death?"

A. It certainly was, the whole ekklesia (church congregation) had to take a man who picked up even a few sticks on the Sabbath day, and stone him till he was dead. As my friend felt the foundation of his Sabbath faith slipping from under him, he said he still had one more fortress and he would like to see if I could take that. Well I said, What is it? He then quoted Matt. xxiv. 20: "Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day."

Well, says I, what do you see in that? Why not on the Sabbath?

He said this was forty-six years after the opening up of the Christian era, and the reason they should pray that their flight from Jerusalem should not occur on the Sabbath, was because they would break the Sabbath in fleeing.

I asked him if it said so. He answered no. He then asked me what reason I gave that it should not occur on the Sabbath day?

I answer, just what the context said, the next verse, the 21st, shows that. "Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day; for (or because) then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world." It would be a time of severe suffering, and if it should occur during the cold of winter, it would add to their sufferings, and if it should occur on the Sabbath day it would augment their suffering, because the gates of a Jerusalem were closed and locked all day on the Sabbath, and therefore they could not flee on the Sabbath if they wished to, which would still increase their suffering. Is not that a good and sufficient reason as to why they should pray that their flight should not occur on the Sabbath day? After this my friend had no more spirit in him, he had nothing more to say, and soon left for his home.

The next day I departed for Boise, Oklahoma, where my next appointment was. I took two days and one night to make the trip of about two hundred miles, on account of bad railroad connections, I had to remain over night in a hotel, at Geary. The next day we had one of those dreadful sand storms. Sand swept down the streets in clouds, like snow does some times in a blizzard in the north.

Had to change cars again at Anadarko. At this place I struck the home of the red man. Indian men, women and children swarmed around the depot. They wrapped themselves in bright colored blankets. They paint the parting of the hair red, they also paint the cheeks and near their ears a bright red. Some wear ornaments about three inches long.

Arriving at Carnegie Mr. Chandler met me at the depot. After a trip of about seven miles I arrived at the Chandler home, and was so pleased to meet once more our dear Sister Chandler and family.

This is a new field. I find the people hungry for true gospel food. Meeting opened up on Saturday night with good attendance. On Sunday the house was simply packed. More than one told me that no preacher ever drew such a crowd before. Many of these were young men. Splendid order was maintained and attention to the Word spoken could not be better. The prospects here are simply fine.

After arriving home, I took sick. Sister Chandler sent for a doctor. I had a severe spell of liver trouble. In travelling, an Evangelist has to experience so many changes of water and food, that it is hard for him to preserve his health. In about ten days, under the careful nursing of Sister Chandler, I was placed on my feet again. The weather turned bad, so that it was impossible for me to go out. On the last Sunday night, however, Sister Chandler sent for her near neighbors to come to her home, so that I could talk to them once more, before I left. They filled the place full to hear my parting discourse. The people are hungry for the Word of God. I am going to keep on carrying the gospel of the kingdom to isolated fields, where none of our Evangelists go, as long as volunteer contributions are received to enable me to do so.

On Monday morning I left for another new field, namely Buffalo, Texas. Meetings at this date (March 22) are in progress at Buffalo, Texas. Things here are also favorable. I am really gratified, that attendance and interest is following my ministry of the gospel in "the regions beyond."

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

What is the Matter with This Text?

"Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land not theirs, and shall serve them, and they shall afflict them four hundred years." Gen. xv. 13. Compare Acts vii. 6, which is substantially the same.

Instead of being enslaved in Egypt for four hundred years, the children of Israel dwelt in Egypt altogether only two hundred and fifteen years. And during the administration of Joseph the children of Israel lived upon "the fat of the land." The best of the land of Goshen. Gen. xlv. 18; xlvii. 6.

Joseph was thirty when he interpreted the king's dreams, and thirty-nine when Jacob and families moved into Egypt. Jacob when introduced to Pharaoh was 130, the second year of the famine. Gen. xli. 46; xlv. 6; xlvii. 9.

Joseph died aged 110 Gen. l. 22; Ex. i. 6. A new king ascended the throne of Egypt who did not recognize the late governor, nor his methods of Government. Ex. i. 8. The new king introduced a reign of oppression, and made the Israelites serve with rigor, and made their lives bitter. Verses 13, 14.

From Joseph's age when he died, subtract his age when Jacob and his family moved into Egypt—110 less 39 equals 71, the number of years which the children of Israel lived prosperously. From the death of Joseph to the birth of Moses was 64. From the birth of Moses to the Exodus was 80 years. Add the 71 prosperous years, and we have the whole number of years in Egypt 215 Subtract the years of prosperity, 71, and the whole number of years of servitude is 144.

Sojourning in Canaan commenced with Abraham's 75th year—Isaac is born, 25 years. Isaac's age when Jacob was born 60 years. Jacob's age when he moved into Egypt 130 years. 215 plus 144 plus 71, equals 430, the years of sojourning in Egypt and in Canaan. Exactly, to the very day. Ex. xii. 40, 41; Heb. xi. 9, 13: Acts vii. 6.

Next where does the 400 years come in? Not 400 years of servitude, as demonstrated; but note the reading: "That thy seed," etc. Commence to count, not with Abram's 75th year, but with his seed, as recorded in Gen. xxi. 5, 8, 12,—emphasize verse 12, "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." This oracular announcement made at the time of the christening festival when Isaac was five years old. Isaac was born when Abraham was 100. Twenty-five years after entering Canaan. Add the five as in the margin chronology—1802 from 1807 leaves 5—then 25 plus 5 makes 30, which add to the 400, and we get exactly the number of years of the sojourning altogether in Egypt and in Canaan—430.

A slight transposition in the reading of the text will remove the difficulty referred to.

"Know of a surety, that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land not theirs, four hundred years."—and they shall serve and afflict them 144 years, and shall live on the fat of the land 71 years. Dwelt in Egypt altogether 215 years.

Evangelizing Trip.

I am at Brother C. E. Hatch's Tustin, Cal. This brother is a son of our dear deceased brother, Elder Hatch, with whom the writer met and worked thirty-three years ago. A generation has passed with its changing events, its sorrows and joys, its bitters and sweets; frequently more of the bitter than the sweet with many of us. God grant that the time that may yet be allotted us may be prolific of good and peace only!

I was detained in Arizona a little beyond my plans in an effort to get a place in Mesa, a Mormon town to give a series of discourses. We would have succeeded in getting the Mormon Synagogue if it had not been under repair, as a prominent Mormon said they would furnish it and a good congregation if it had been in condition. Brother Corbell tried to secure a church and failed. So two or three days were spent in visiting brethren and saying our good byes, with the mutual hope that we might meet again in a year. Mingled with the regret of parting was the satisfaction of starting homeward, but on account of the week before, the satisfaction would have lost much of its pleasure if not seasoned by the hope that some good may be done in the weeks of labor that still intervene in our California and Oregon work. Boarded the evening train March 14th. We reached the Gila River; the train stopped and waited at the bridge while the conductor and crew walked across it to see if we could safely cross the raging, muddy torrent of melting snow that came rushing down from the mountains of central and northern Arizona. The conductor reported that the bridge was swaying and creaking under the pressure and not safe. A few of the passengers walked across and met transportation, but the greater part of us returned on the train to Phoenix. Started again on the 16th with some misgivings. We crossed the bridge without accident. In this life we often find ourselves crossing the bridge before we reach it; but discretion is the better part of valor, and life though it be mortal is our most valuable possession.

Without accident or event worth recording I reached Pomona, Cal., Saturday March 17, and immediately hunted up Brother Steffa and soon felt that I had formed his and Sister Steffa's acquaintance. It does not take long to become acquainted when we are "of the same mind and speak the same things."

On Sunday Brother Steffa and I took the train and ran 34 miles into Los Angeles to see if we could locate any work and find any brethren also to meet and consult with Bro. Hatch concerning prospective work. Our prospect of work in the city was discouraging. It would take much patience, time and money to get a footing even for a few meetings in a city like Los Angeles.

During the day Brother and Sister Hatch met us. We heard of a tent meeting being conducted in the heart of the city. A Brother, who was holding a series in a well-appointed and roomy tent constructed and erected by his own efforts. We learned that he was an earnest worker entertaining Christadelphian views but too liberal in sentiment to be bound to or by them. In fact he seems to be a cross between the Christadelphians and Restitution people. He wanted me to speak on Monday evening in the tent, but after consultation with our Brethren Steffa and Hatch, I decided to come south 34 miles to Tustin, and see what the prospect would be for work here. So far I have no reason to regret my decision, as on Tuesday evening we were able to gather a pretty good hearing in the A. C. Church. Our congregation is largely Advent Christians. I have already told them of some of the Scripture that causes us to believe that the same Israel that was scattered will be gathered and "planted in their own land and never be pulled up out of their land."

I regret that the amount of work ahead and limited time debarred me from getting off the train at Ontario, and visiting and forming the acquaintance of Brother and Sister Driggins.

My next work after finishing this is at Tipton, Cal.

W. L. SKEELS.

Some tell us that "man cannot live without sin." Then sin must be essential to life; and salvation from all sin would be sure to kill him! A Calvanist preacher, holding this view, once accosted "Billy Hibbard"—an early Methodist preacher who was an ardent advocate of holiness—with the incredulous inquiry, "Mr. Hibbard, can you live without sin?" The laconic reply came: "Quite comfortably, my brother, very comfortably."

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 26.

1. In the rule of Sedekias reigning as king, this word concerning Ailam occurred,

2. Namely to Aiguptos, unto the host of Pharaoo Nechaoo, king of Aiguptos, that was by the river Euphrates in Charmeis which Nabouchodonosor king of Babuloon smote in the fourth year of Jooakeim, king of Jouda.

3. Take offensive weapons and shields and lead together for war;

4. And saddle the horses; mount ye horsemen, put on your helmets, set your spears for an assault, put on your breastplates.

5. Why are they awe-struck and why do they draw back? It is because their strong men will grow weary; they have fled, and surrounded they have not rallied, saith the Lord.

6. Let not the light-of-foot flee and let not the strong man attempt to save himself toward the north; the places along the Euphrates have grown weak and have fallen.

7. Who is this one who will go up like a river and wave as rivers do with water?

8. Waters of Aiguptos will go up like a river; and they have said, I shall go up and cover the land and destroy those who inhabit it.

9. Mount upon your horses, make ready your chariots; go out ye warriors of Aithiopians, and ye Libuans arm yourselves with offensive weapons, and go up ye Ludoi; (Lydians) stretch your bow;

10. And that day is a day of requital for the Lord our God, to requite his enemies; and the Lord's sword will devour and will have been sated and made drunk with their blood, because there is a sacrifice unto the Lord from a land at the north by the river Euphrates.

11. Go up, O Galaad and take resinee (a resinous gum) for the virgin daughter of Aiguptos. In vain hast thou supplied thy healing-remedies; there is no profit in thee.

12. Nations have heard thy voice and the earth hath been filled with thy crying, because warrior against warrior they have become weak, together they both have fallen.

13. Words which the Lord talked with the hand of Hieremias when the king of Babuloon went to smite the land of Aiguptos.

14. Tell it in Magdoolon and announce it in Memphis; Say, be fully aware and make ready, because a sword will devour thy smilax;

15. Why hath Apis (the bull) fled from thee? Thy chosen yearling-bullock hath not remained, because the Lord hath dismissed him;

16. And thy multitude hath grown weak and fallen, and each one hath said to his neighbor, Let us arise and return to our laity to our own fatherland away from the face of the Greek sword;

17. Call the name Pharaoo Nechaoo king of Aiguptos Saoon Esbeie Mooeso.

18. As I live, saith the Lord God, as Itaburion among the mountains and as the Kamelos (camel) that cometh unto the sea will he come:

19. Make ready for thyself utensils for removal, thou inhabiting daughter of Aiguptos, because Memphis will be in a state of disappearance and will have been called Alas, because there are no people dwelling in it.

20. Aiguptos is a beautifully adorned heifer, a dragging-away from the north hath come upon her;

21. And her hirelings within her are even as fatted yearlings that have been fostered therein; wherefore these also have turned and fled with one accord; they have not stood their ground, because a day of loss hath come upon them and a due-time for their requital.

22. Their sound is as that of a hissing serpent, because they go their way in sand; with axes will they come upon her;

23. As those who cut trees will they cut off her forest, saith the Lord, because they cannot be estimated; in number they are more than a locust-flight, and there is no numbering of them.

24. The daughter of Aiguptos hath been put to shame; she hath been given up into the hands of a laity from the north.

25. Lo, I am requitting Anamoon her son upon Pharaoo and upon those who trust in him.

No 26th verse here.

27. But be not thou afraid, my bond-servant Jakoob, nor be awe-struck thou Israeel, because I, lo I am saving thee from afar, and thy seed from their captivity; and Jacoob will return and be in quietude and he will sleep, and there will be no one who will annoy him.

28. Fear not my child Jakoob, saith the Lord, because with thee am I; the undismayed and refined hath been given up, because I shall bring about a consummation for a nation in every nation in among whom I have thrust thee out; and I shall not make thee to leave off; and I shall chasten thee to the extent of a judgment rendered, and I shall not hold thee guiltless.

COMMENT.

This 26th chapter as here given the reader will see is in historical and prophetic sequence with what has gone before, and is the continuation of the "Ailam" prophecy begun in the 25th chapter. The rabinical revisers of the second century of the Christian era made this chapter the 46th in their Hebrew text and made the 33rd chapter in the Greek the 26th in the Hebrew which text the C. V. and the R. V. and all the Latin-English translations have followed. A critical analysis of each verse as I have been giving of late will be impracticable for the general reader to follow and look up. So I shall from here on confine my remarks to more general issues.

The name of this last Pharaoo of a long line of the same name like the Roman Cesears (or Kaisars) was not "Pharo-necho" as in the R. V. even, but Pharaoo-Nechaoo and means Ploughman-Spinner, and the first name was assumed and glorified in for the reason that the early material prosperity of Aiguptos was due to the great irrigation system of canals from the river Neilos (Nile) which made the Nile Delta the grain garden and market of the then world. This trade prosperity later became supplemented with the spinning and weaving of the flax raised, and manufactures of papyrus or the paper of that day; and of course there were very many cognate and collateral industries fed by these first two most important ones, making Aiguptos the commercial emporium of that day for centuries. Therefore these generic titles assumed, and gloried in.

In the Semitic colonization after the flood Seem's oldest son Ailam settled Aiguptos. Therefore the prophecy of its downfall here is addressed to "Ailam (or "Elam" C. V. and R. V.) Aithiopeia and all the genetic roots and branches are thus included in this prophecy, as the reader will see who carefully follows the later portions of this prophecy as given in their proper order in this book.

This chapter begins with same two words as the book of Genesis "en archee" and cannot be rendered "in the beginning" as in C. V. and R. V. if for no other reason than that it would not be true. For it did not occur in the beginning of this king's rule as can be easily shown from the records. For specific and important differences of reading and thought, the reader will please compare the 46th chapter R. V. with this 26th as herein given.

Notice.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." Mal. iii. 16, 17.

Dear ones of the blessed hope, will we be among his jewels when he comes? This is the most important question of our lives. It is a question that it is high time we were putting to ourselves. Am I ready? How essential it is then, that we be making preparation now, while He tarries, lest he come suddenly and find us sleeping. Will we be zealously doing his work when he comes?

Let us not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, and so much more as we see that day approaching.

The Central Washington Conference will meet at Cashmere, Washington, March 30 to April 1, 1906. All are earnestly invited to attend and help carry on the Master's work. May he say to us some time "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make you ruler over many things."

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring effort along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

T. J. DANIEL.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Courage.

Courage, brother, do not stumble,
Though thy path be dark as night.
There's a star to guide the humble.
Trust in God, and do the right.

Let the road be rough and dreary,
And its end far out of sight;
Foot it bravely—strong or weary,
Trust in God, and do the right.

Perish policy and cunning,
Perish all that fears the light!
Whether losing, whether winning,
Trust in God, and do the right.

Some will hate you, some will love you,
Some will flatter, some will slight;
Come what may, what'er above you
Trust in God, and do the right.

Bush on Gen. ii. 17.

"In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Heb. "dying thou shalt die." Gr. "thou shalt die the death." Implying by the utmost emphasis of expression the absolute certainty of the penalty denounced. The threatening we suppose to have embraced all the evils spiritual, temporal, and eternal, which we learn elsewhere to be included in the term death as a punishment for sin. The meaning is not that temporal death should be inflicted the same literal day on which the offense was committed, but on the day of his eating he was to become dead in trespasses and sins; the seeds of decay and dissolution were to become sown in his body, which should thenceforth become mortal and finally be brought down to the grave; and he should be made liable to what is usually understood by the pains of eternal death in another world.

With the record in Genesis before him he only supposed that the threatened penalty "embraced all the evils spiritual, temporal and eternal," and elsewhere learned that this supposition is true." We may safely affirm in opposition to Mr. Bush that if the record in Genesis does not bring to view such a death as he described as the penalty or punishment for sin then it is in vain that we look elsewhere to find the supposition a fact. If the death threatened Adam was "death spiritual, death temporal and death eternal" we would expect to find it so described here. This first transgressor of divine law was surely concerned to know what was embraced in the term death, what would be incurred in case he should offend the Lawgiver. We cannot for a moment think that Jehovah took advantage of him, either in giving him a law he could not keep or in wording the penalty in such a way that he could not know what would be inflicted if he should break the law. Mr. Bush and all who hold with him reflect Jehovah in the light of the Roman tyrant who posted his laws so high that his subjects could not read them, then punished them for violations of these same laws. To make good the charge I will quote further from this scholarly commentator.

He says: "Adam, indeed, might not at the time have understood the full import of this dreadful sentence, having had no experience of any thing which would enable him to do so." In the light of this language God did not fully inform our first parents as to the full import of the penalty. The pains of eternal death (eternal torture is meant) is what they did not understand, for there was no intimation of such a doom. It is in point to quote a little further. "But we are taught by the actual result what sense to affix to the terms." By the result no one can logically fix the sense of eternal torture to the terms for the result was death and returning to dust of these offenders. "Adam might at the time," etc. I do not think he has found yet that such a doom awaited him. Mr. Bush crowds into these few seemingly plain words a fearful destiny, the contemplation of which makes the human mind shudder. What is the premise of so awful a conclusion? The assumed doctrine of the immortality of the soul. This must bear the weight of the dogma of eternal torture, of indescribable woe, with no ray of hope to serve to mitigate the intensity of suffering. Paul was a better commentator than Bush and he says "The first man is of the earth earthy," and such are all his descendants today. To return to dust the common doom which Adam entailed upon his children. The second Adam brought life and immortality to light by the gospel.

JOHN L. WIRE.

Israelism and the Covenants.

The nation of Israel rooted in Abram. Abram developed into Abraham, destined to become a father of many nations. Gen. xvii. 4-6. A foundation for arranging an everlasting covenant with a view to an everlasting possession of the Promised Land. (verses 7 and 8). "Seeing that Abraham shall become a great and mighty nation, and that all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him." xviii. 18, saith the Lord. Everlasting possession means possession in the age, permanent-age-enduring. In Acts vii. 5 and Heb. xi. 8 it is asserted that Abraham never possessed a foot breadth of the land. He obeyed the divine call, was justified (Gen. xv. 6) by faith in what the Lord told him. Rom. iv. 3, 9. After that, the supernatural birth of Isaac, with whom this everlasting covenant was to be established; chap. xvii. 19, 21 and xviii. 14. Fulfilled chapter xxi. 1, 2, 7, 12. The choosing of Jacob in preference to Esau. The career and official exaltation of Joseph in Egypt for a purpose. The sojourning of the Children of Israel in Egypt, the mission of Moses. The providential deliverance of the children of Israel from Egypt, their arrival in the wilderness of Sinai. All these manifestations of Divine Providence attest the gradual unfolding of the plan of the ages concerning the organization and development of the Israelitish nation from Horeb the Mount of God (Ex. iii. 1 and Deut. i. 6) on and on through the centuries. Its fortunes and misfortunes; as noted in the Scriptures, and finally consummated "in the dispensation of the fulness of times." Destined, however, to cut an important figure in the affairs of the world, before and during the millennium. In the fortieth year after the children of Israel departed from Egypt, the house of bondage, the children of Israel of the second generation out, came into the Land of Moab. Deut. i. 35. And the word to them was: That they should enter into covenant with the Lord. And into his oath according as he had sworn to their fathers. Deut. xxix. 12, 13. "Not with you all do I make this covenant and this oath; who standeth here with us this day; but also with him that is not here with us this day." Verses 14, 15. And compare verse 1. This, besides the covenant which he made with them in Horeb, which covenant was the ten commandments, written on two tables of stone. Deut. iv. 13, 14 and v. 2, and ix. 15 and x. 4 and numerous references. The Lord a covenant keeping God (Ex. vii. 9) "Not a man that he should lie nor a Son of Man that he should change his purpose" (Num. xxiii. 19) and references.

Moses wrote the law (Deut. xxxi. 9, 10) and when finished (24) he commanded the Levites to put the book of the law into the ark, called the "ark of the covenant," together with the two stone tablets on which was written the ten commandments. Compare Ex. xxv. 16-21 and xl. 20 and Num. xvii. 10 and Deut. x. 5 and Heb. ix. 4 and Neh. viii. 2. Ezra read the law to the people according to the commandment of Moses. Deut. xxxi. 10-13. To be read every seventh year; in the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, 15th of the 7th month.

The Word of the Lord to the children of Israel through Moses, was this: "Now therefore if you will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then you shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all (other) people. For all the earth is mine (Ex. xix. 5 and Psa. xxiv. 1 and Lev. xxv. 23). And you shall be unto me a priestly kingdom, a sanctified nation." Verse 6. This covenant was national as well as individual and racial. Was strictly conditional. It was also reasonable and consistent with a view to the attitude to be assumed by Israel as a nation towards the favored nations which will be admitted into the national life of the age to come.

Moses presented the conditions of the covenant to the people, and they with one voice replied: "All that the Lord hath spoken we will do; and he obedient." Ex. xix. 7, 8 and xxiv. 7, 8. They agreed to the terms, and the compact was ratified by the sprinkling of blood according to the law in the case. Compare Heb. ix. 19, 20-22. They were not commanded to offer sacrifices and burnt offerings when they came forth from Egypt—"But this thing I commanded them: Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and you shall be my people." Jer. vii. 22, 23, and xi. 4, and references.

Strict obedience insured possession of the land in perpetuity, according to the covenant entered into. As they were on probation they acquired only tenant's rights according to the will of the landlord. They were merely sojourners and strangers for the time being. Lev. xxv. 23. They were placed under law with various offerings and cleansing ceremonial "imposed upon them" for the time then present—gifts, and sacrificial offerings which never could remove sin permanently. A shadow or pattern of the heavenly things themselves, a restraining or check to, or on transgressions for a period and a purpose. The story of Israel's apostasy as foretold by Moses (Lev. ii. and Deut. xxviii.) has been literally fulfilled, and now only waiting the completion of the times of the Gentiles; so that the restoration of Israel may become an accomplished fact, according to the numerous prophetic utterances relating thereto. Israel's apostasy did not directly affect the men and women of faith all through the centuries, from righteous Abel all along to the epoch of the resurrection. Those referred to in the Hebrews xi. The saints of all ages, candidates for the royal honors of the Melchizedek priesthood. "Justified freely by his grace through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus." This explanation here injected is for the purpose of avoiding a confounding of things which must be kept, each on its own base.] The discipline of the nation of Israel is with a view to the development of subjects, but yet outranking all other subjects, both politically and sacerdotally—destined to occupy and possess the rights, titles and estates of first-borns, and national first-fruits; and, as such, become an indispensible factor in the establishment and perpetuity of the divine government on the earth. But before this, the children of Israel shall abide many days without a King, without a prince, without a priest, without sacrifices and without an altar, and without manifestations." Afterwards they shall return, and serve the Lord and David their king, etc. Hos. iii. 4, 5.

Records of Israel's apostasy from Moses to the prophecy of Jesus tell a sad tale. Jer. xv. 4. What they said when admonished, xliv. 16, 17-19 and compare vii. 16-20 and Ezek. v. 8; and xx. to verse 32, and numerous references.

Again, the oracular word of the Lord to Israel was this: "For all the earth is mine," and therefore he has an inherent right to dispose of it according to his purpose. See Deut. xxxii. 8, 9, and Acts xvii. 26. During the working days of the Creator, when arranging and filling the earth with an endless variety of material, he anticipated a teeming population upon the earth's surface, and he stored away within it untold wealth for the numerous utilities to be developed. Israel is my Son, my first-born. Ex. iv. 22, 23. Therefore in the epoch of the regeneration they will be entitled to the rights of first-borns (nationally). First in rank and a double portion, with all the appurtenances thereunto belonging. The reference to Deut. xxxii. 8 asserts that the territorial boundaries of the nations depend upon the number of the children of Israel and the distribution of allotments will be assigned accordingly. See Jos. xiii. 7 and Jer. ii. 3. Leave out the supplied words and read: "Israel was holiness unto the Lord; the first-fruits of his increase." The first-fruits, a mere handful belonging to the Lord in a special sense, Israel will be the first-fruits. Then what will the great harvest be? The antitypical ingathering and Feast of Tabernacles, the holy Aaronic priesthood, co-ordinate, co-operate and synchronize with the nation of Israel. We trace the priesthood from Levi, Aaron. Ex. xl. 15; Num. xxv. 11-13; Phinehas and 1 Sam. ii. 35. This fulfilled 1 Kings ii. 27, 35, in Zadok. Compare chapter i. 32-39. To be continued in the age, Ezek. xl. 46, and xliii. 19, xliv. 15, 16. In accordance with the age-covenant aforesaid.

This line of individual priests does not meet the requirements of the covenant which refers to the nation of Israel. Ex. xix. 6. It is affirmed, "You shall be unto me a priestly kingdom; a sanctified nation." A priestly kingdom would stand related as a kingdom to other kingdoms in a mediatorial relation; as the Levites stood related to the congregation of Israel, in the tabernacle and temple service. And the nation as such, distinguished from all other nations (verse 5) as the first-fruits are from the harvest and vintage.

The Day of Atonement, set apart for national expiation once a year, a figurative representation of the permanent removal of sin under and according to the new covenant of Jer. xxxi. 31-34, when the promises made to the children of Israel in the wilderness will be fulfilled. And which could not be fulfilled under the old covenant, because they broke that. In order, therefore, for God to fulfil his covenant with them; he consummates a new one which meets all the requirements of the case.

If any one would know the significance of the ceremonial of the Day of Atonement, this one would be the high priest of Israel, concerning whom it is recorded, that, a council being convened with a view to making away with Jesus without the knowledge of the people; Caiaphas, president of the council, being high priest that year; said, that it is necessary that one man should die in behalf of the people, so that the whole nation perish not. This he said, not from himself, but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die in behalf of the nation; and not only for the nation, but also for to gather into one (body) the children of God scattered far and wide." Jno. xi. 47-52, and therefore we look in vain for any reference to any ceremonial in the department of worship of the age to come to the annual day of atonement. Because the one offering of the Christ meets the requirements of the lasting national expiation. And since the reading of the new covenant. None other may claim the privileges and immunities vouchsafed to the two houses mentioned. The plan being that only through the nation of Israel, that the favored nations will be blest, according to the Abrahamic promise. The restoration of the nation carries with it the restoration of the kingdom and throne of David, and the holy priesthood according to the order of Aaron. See Jer. xxxiii. 18 and preceding and succeeding context.

We consult the prophetic Scriptures as to the final restoration of the nation and kingdom of Israel; when it is said, "A new covenant," the former is rendered obsolete, and that which is becoming obsolete is about to disappear. Consult Isa. ii. 2, 3, 4, and iv., all of it, and xi. 11-13; xlv. 1-3 and xix. 23-25 and xxvii. 12, 13. Compare Matt. xxiv. 31. Read Matthew xxiv. 31. Read Matthew from an Israelitish point of view. Isa. lxvi. 8. "A nation born at once." Missionaries to the nations far away, who have not heard of the glory of the one living and true God. Verses 19-21 and the perpetuity of the nation, 22. Jer. xxiii. 5-8 and xxiv. 5-8 and xxx. 9, 20, 21, and xxxi. 8-12, 31-34, xxxv. 37-40-42, and xxxiii. 7, 14-18, 20-22, 25. Although Israel broke the covenant in the days of her youth and despised the oath (Ezek. xvi 59) yet God remembers the covenant on his part, and will establish with them an everlasting covenant—one pertaining to the age. Verses 60-62. See xx. 33-38 emphasize 40. All the house of Israel serve the Lord, after the rebellious have been separated from the approved, verse 38. A new heart, xxxvi. 24-28; Ezek. xxxii. 22, 24-26, emphasize verse 27 and compare verse 11 so as to identify the party. "These bones are the whole house of Israel." A long period of tribulation awaited them Hosea iii. 4, "many days" from the fall of Jerusalem A. D. 70 to the completion of Gentile times. That is, the period allotted for the domination of the Gentile powers over Israel, "scattered and peled." During this period of expatriation, the gospel message takes out from the masses a people separated for a purpose.

The providential preservation and supervision of, and over Israel during all these years of affliction is the great standing miracle during Gentile domination, and a guarantee, that the Lord their God will fulfil his promises. The nation and kingdom which will not serve Israel shall be cut off. The cup of the Lord's fury to be put into the hands of those nations which afflicted Israel, and beforced to drink it to the very dregs. Is. li. 22, 23. Compare verse 17. Is. xli. 15, 16 and Micah iv. 13; and Dan. ii. 35; Jer. li. 19, 20. Instrumental for the Lord's work. And Zech. ix. 12-17. Judah the "bow" and Ephraim the "arrow to go forth like the lightning." Jerusalem, a burdensome stone to the powers (that be) chap. xii. 3, 4. Will save the tents of Judah first. Zech. xii. 7. A panic in the invading army. Chapter xiv. 13, 14.

Among the instrumentalities to be utilized in the work of subjugation during the "hour of judgment" the 144,000 picked men out of the 12 tribes of Israel's sons will be conspicuously in the lead. These are not to be thought of as an unorganized horde, but thoroughly organized, disciplined and equipped for the work before them. An impending judgment is being held back for a short time in order to make this selection from the tribes for a purpose. Rev. vii. 2, 3. "A messenger comes up from the sunrising, having the seal of the living God;" who orders other messengers "not to hurt the earth, the sea nor the trees till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads (3). Compare with verse 9, so as not to confound them; and notice the multitude are "out of all nations," for another purpose than those out of the 12 tribes. The latter are seen (chapter xiv. 1) standing with the Lamb upon the Mount Zion. They sing, as it were, a new song before the throne, in the presence of the four living ones and the crowned elders, and none others could sing the song, or learn it. The singers of chapter v. 9, must not be confounded with the singers of chapter xiv. 3. The former are redeemed out of every nation and destined to "reign over the earth;" while the latter are out of the twelve tribes of Israel, and destined to serve in some capacity.

Again: The innumbered multitude of chapter ix. are out of or from all nations, and destined to serve (not to reign (chapter vii. 15.

The 144,000 were redeemed, or purchased from the earth. Redeemed, or purchased from among the men. Namely, the men of the tribes out of which they were taken. "A first-fruit unto God and to the Lamb." First-fruit, certainly of the nation of Israel. And as such (as already referred to) belong to God and the Lamb in a special sense—they follow the Lamb wherever he goes—conquering and to conquer, and in relation to the work to be done they are "faultless." As compared with the mass they are a mere handful devoted to God and the Lamb, as a first-fruit offering of the nation. They do not belong to the earth, because purchased from it, and above it, in rank a body of men belonging to the government represented by the Lamb, commander in chief of the heavenly army, such as government troops, over whom the civil officials may not interfere authority. They do not belong to the heavens—they do not reign, their work under the heavens. An illustration may be found, Isa. lxvi. 22. Note the particles of comparison as to perpetuity. The nation of Israel not of the new heavens, not of the new earth, but a mid-way relation, and to continue as long as they continue. Because if the first-fruits be sanctified to the Lord, so also the nation, as a nation; and so meeting the requirements of the new covenant.

This mid-heaven relation of this priestly kingdom accords with that which the tribe of Levi occupied in the tabernacle service. The names of the 12 tribes of Israel's sons written upon the twelve apocalyptic gates of the New Jerusalem, are suggestive of entrance-ways into the holy city or corporation—the governing power of the world to come. Whose light illuminates the saved nations, with a view to the spreading the knowledge of the glory of God to earth's remotest bound. Rev. xxi. 12. The Seer goes on: I saw no temple in it; for the Lord, the All-powerful one, the temple of it and the Lamb." Verse 22.

The Changeless Lord.

Everything earthly changes. Men change, women change, times change, and circumstances change. There are changes from health to disease, from strength to weakness, from beauty to deformity, from intelligence to idiocy. There are those who were once the fairest of the fair, whose faces are now care-furrowed and tear-stained. There are those whose eyes flashed with brightness, but whose countenances are now dulled with a vacuum of stupidity and imbecility. There are those once full of strength and vigor who are now feeble, weak and helpless.

Men change in disposition and temper; friends become enemies; sometimes we know not how or why, but to our surprise we find that those who seemed to love us have grown cold and have turned away from us. They offer no explanations, they bring no accusations. They are simply gone, and they never return. A tale-bearer separateth chief friends; and if they have been misled by evil reports, or have wronged us by suspicions, they may have too much will to recall their act or too much pride to confess it.

What a comfort it is in a changing world to read the Word of him who says: "I, the Lord change not." Years may come and go, kingdom may rise and fall, dynasties may exalt themselves and be tumbled into dust and ashes, wealth may disappear, applause may change to reproach, friendship's fire may grow dim, yet the Lord changeth not—ever faithful, ever watchful, ever loving, ever long-suffering, tender, gracious, compassionate, almighty. We who know him and trust him have a never-changing friend. Happy are they who in the midst of earth's changing scenes learn to put their trust in that unchanging God, casting all their care upon him, because he careth for them.—Common People.

The Restitution advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Sunday Morning Address.

Brethren and sisters, I trust you have all come prepared to receive a message from the Spirit. I mean by that you are anxious to receive a message from God,—and have endeavored to divest your minds of business cares, and other distracting thoughts. Dear brothers and sisters, I trust we can in some measure express ourselves as the Psalmist did, when he said, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O Lord;" if that be the frame of our minds we shall every one carry home a blessing. The words of the Spirit to which your attention is invited may be found in Luke xiv. 26, 27, John xiv. 6; and scores of other places, any of which would be suitable for the subject in mind. I will read the first mentioned. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters,—yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple. And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Luke xiv. 26, 27.

These look like pretty steep stepping stones to the door of the kingdom, do they not? But it is somewhat of a relief to read the next passage, because our Lord in it epitomises in himself every means of attainment. "I am the way, the truth and the life, no man cometh to the Father but by me." It would seem impossible to regard him as a mere flesh-begotten man without divesting him of all those striking elements of character which tower far above the ordinary instructor. But ignorant and presumptuous men do it. If we only take him at his Word, that his words and works were his Father's, and that the Father was in him, and he in the Father; and that the Father was manifesting his divine attributes to us through the flesh of Jesus,—it lets us into the sunlight of truth. This, by the way of introduction to the subject proper, some practical conditions of discipleship. When, therefore, Jesus says to men that no one can come to him unless he hates father and mother and brother and sister, if it meant that love to God requires the sacrifice of all other loves, that would clash with many another Scripture,—especially would it conflict with the command to the brethren to love one another, and to love our enemies,—and with those which deprecate the want of natural affection. It is not possible for the Spirit to stultify himself in that way. It must, therefore, mean something different from that. It truly is one of the most exacting precepts he ever uttered. I mean by that, that he enforces the necessity of loving God with the heart and soul and strength,—by showing the closest and dearest ties of nature must not be allowed to come in the way. In coming to God we have to come to Jesus; no one can come to the Father but through the Son. And in attempting to follow Jesus, we are attempting to follow the representative of supreme goodness, supreme wisdom, and supreme moral truth. We are to love that which is right and just, and true, and beneficient, that we shall sacrifice everything rather than give up this supreme excellence. This is rather staggering to the flesh, and it is intended to, the flesh needs to be staggered; but the right-minded,—those whose minds have been renewed, those who like Paul have counted all things as loss for Christ, and the excellency of the his Lord; and for whom he says he suffered the loss of all things, and we do count them as vile refuse that I may win Christ,—and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith, that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death"—I know, or at least feel convinced, that all would rather suffer the loss of the power of Christ's resurrection; but how about the fellowship of his suffering? Are we not in danger of leaving that out of our reckoning? We must not lose sight of the fact that a part of what he suffered the loss of all things for, was to get a share of the sufferings of Christ; be entitled to, or allowed to suffer in this life, with Christ. And permit me to say this is not the privilege of all who take upon them the name of Jesus. Do these things come home to us as they should? It is no small honor to suffer with Christ, I assure you. You have frequently heard me quote from Rev. ii. 1 where it shows that the great Head of the Church walks among the churches, and is thoroughly acquainted with all that is going on, both individually and collectively. And what I am about to show you now, is, that he observes the conduct of those who claim to be new men in Christ, and decides as to their worthiness to suffer with him. This should not surprise us, when we remember that suffering with him is a condition of reigning with him, and involves the joint-heirship now,—and joint-possession by and by. But now for the proof of what I have said. In Acts iv. and v. we have the account of Peter and John's arrest on account of the healing of a lame man and attributing the power to the name of Jesus whom God had raised from the dead and constituted the Prince of Life. They locked them up for the night, and on the morrow they were brought up for a hearing, when Peter with much boldness told them it was by the name of Jesus of Nazareth the miracle had been wrought—and declared his name to be the name of salvation, but as the man stood there before them, they could do nothing but let them go, after threatening what they would do if they did the like again—Both Peter and John answered, that they must judge whether it were right they should hearken to them or unto God—they made no promise; and went back to the same work, and soon got into trouble again. They were thrust into the common prison, but they were liberated by an angel during the night,—the next day they were arrested in the temple, and again brought before the rulers—this gave Peter another opportunity to preach Christ to them—finally they were beaten and let go. And they departed from the presence of the counsel, rejoicing, notwithstanding their smarting backs,—rejoicing! What about? Why they were rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name; and daily in the temple and in every house they ceased not to teach and notwithstanding the flogging and the threats. They were counted worthy to suffer. There is many a lesson along here—I think you will agree that I did not overstate it. I think, in view of the all-seeing eye of the Lord it should cause us to set a double watch upon ourselves. And I would not be surprised if we have all been losing sight of the worthiness to suffer. I would not wonder if we all, at times, at least, look upon suffering as a hardship,—something to be evaded, if possible,—(and this in regard to suffering in general, may not be amiss;) but not so in regard to the suffering with Christ. There is glory and honor and blessedness connected with that, and you see from the statements of Paul that these were the things he was reaching out after. It was to his advantage to suffer. But it is not pleasant to have a painful experience, either mental or physical; and so pain was pain to Paul as well as to every one else, for we find him saying, "No affliction for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous, but afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them who are exercised thereby." Again we find him saying that these light afflictions which are but for a moment are not worthy to be compared with the glory to be revealed in us;" that will roll on through endless ages. This, together with the fact that the

ALL THINGS ELSE THAN TO MISS

PREACH JESUS CHRIST

CAPTAIN OF OUR SALVATION

was made perfect through suffering, and the fact that we have to be made perfect by the same process,—and that the suffering is a condition of reigning with him, will bring the whole matter before us in its true light. And when in addition to this we add a faith that works by love,—under these circumstances the yoke of Christ is easy indeed.....So I apprehend that not all believers who suffer,—suffer with Christ. I think it quite possible, and very probable, that for want of strict adherence to the divine rules of conduct they often bring,—not only suffering to themselves, but disgrace to the cause of God and truth. If they do not fairly and truly represent the religion of Jesus, they misrepresent, yes, misrepresent it; and it is not likely that the sample they exhibit will be more acceptable than the original,—but rather less so, in the adulterated state. In that case they would be despised for duplicity and hypocrisy as well as for their adherence to a religious Body. Not The words, "If when ye do well and suffer for it ye take it patiently, this is acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Peter ii. 20: and the same lesson taught in v. 15 where it says, "It is the will of God that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: and still again in verse 18, "Servants, be subject to masters with all fear, not only to the good (masters) and gentle, but also to the froward: for this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience sake toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully; for what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? "Hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth,—who when reviled, reviled not again, when he suffered, threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." Here are

SEPTIMES OF CROSSES

we have to take up, as followers of Christ. And I trust we all want to land in the kingdom, and realize after all that God and Christ have done for us that they are determined to save us if they can,—and that every injunction, and every cross is with a view to that end; if we keep this in mind, we will understand that Paul was putting his own shoulder to the wheel and co-operating with God, when he suffered the loss of all things in order to win Christ,—and know the power of his resurrection. In other words, when he came to a cross he took it up, and showed us how to do the same, if we want to reap the same result. This is what he is talking about in Phil. xii. when he tells them to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling. Not single-handed, as the next verse says, "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure;" and the next verse tells in what frame of mind we must do it,—not to grumble and fret and chafe over these crosses, it is furthering and, if I did not believe that all force, and all justice, and all pain-producing elements,—and all that is rigorous and exacting is but the outworking of the love of God with a view to our benefit, I am not sure but I would be an atheist. Recently I was speaking to you from the words of Jesus, "not my will, but thine be done;" and, if we have come to accept God's advances towards us as the outgrowth of love, and can say with the Lord Jesus, "Thy will be done;" come sickness or health, come storm or calm, come plenty or want, come peace or war,—with perfect confidence in his wisdom, love, mercy and goodness, it will make no difference what means he employs to work goodness in us, we will wait, and suffer, and take on pain, that by and by we may stand, and see all the enigmas of time, and all the drama of sorrow and joy open out into an endless summer. And permit me to say that the nearer we live to God the less we shall think of suffering for the sake of suffering, or pain for the sake of pain, or sorrow for the sake of sorrow; but instrumental suffering we should hail.

THE WORK OF GOD,—

But I have only just quoted the other text, John xiv. 6, "Jesus saith unto him (Thomas) I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." What volumes seem to be contained in these words. "I am the way," he has provided the way,—opened the way, and led the way,—was the first to attain to life. He demonstrated practically by living again that he could teach men how to obtain life after death; he was dead but is alive forevermore; and has announced to his disciples that they shall live because he lives. But no one can come to the Father but through him. He also says he is the Truth. He not only taught the truth by word of mouth, but lived it; was the very EMBODIMENT OF IT.

He demonstrated the truth and its power; and also that he was the central figure of Jehovah's scheme of redemption, and in whom all promised blessings are vested. The Word of Truth the gospel of salvation is the truth as it is in Jesus. This is what sanctifies, or sets men apart for God,—separates them from sinners. The truth concerning Jesus in all his offices and work, past, present and future go to make up the gospel, which, Paul says, is the power God uses to save people. And I apprehend that when Jesus says, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me," he means that not only through him can man come to the Father for pardon, peace and adoption; but must also come to the Father for strength to maintain that justified standing through him, till we obtain the Father's gift,—eternal life. Of ourselves we cannot approach the Father. Only our relationship to the Son enables us to do so. From this point of view we can realize something of our helplessness. How utterly undone were we without the Savior which the love of the Father provided for us, who is able to save to the uttermost all who will by him. As I was writing these lines I bethought me of those who are saying the perversest things imaginable, and which if embraced, would rob us of our Christ of God, and I felt something like Jeremiah when he said, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears that I might weep day and night." But weeping will not mend matters. We have to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. We have to buckle on the armor; we have to be witnesses for God and Truth as it is in Jesus, the Son of God. And like Peter, James and John who all along the rugged, narrow way gained deeper and deeper spiritual insight, so, too, we of these last days have only slowly and gradually had our eyes opened to behold the glory of God, as it shines in the face of Christ Jesus, our Lord. Beloved the spiritual insight is as real as the physical. It comes as the result of the touch of Jesus. And his gift of this spiritual discernment, which we may all experience, is as truly wonderful as the incident recorded in the gospels. Is not this plainly indicated in John vii. 17,—"If any one wish to perform his (the Father's) will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it is from God, or I am speaking from myself." A curiosity hunter will have spiritual insight—but one who has squarely handed himself over to the Lord Jesus,—and his supreme wish to know, is in order to perform God's will,—he is enrapport with the Spirit; his spiritual illumination is certain; he will not only be impressed with the power and the righteousness of Jesus when brought face to face with him,—there is something above all this,—it is a realization of his love. I trust we can all understand Mary sitting at the feet of Jesus, and have a craving to get there ourselves; I trust we have all felt the magnetic influence which attracted the weak, the helpless, the sufferers, and the outcasts. And if we crave his presence, his sympathies and love, it is a verification of the pictures drawn in Judea and Galilee.

COME TO GOD

It remains now, for one and all of us to ask One what he or she thinks of Christ. Is he still the fairest among ten thousand and altogether lovely? Does his yoke set heavily or easily upon us? Every one knows what was agreed to,—what the Lord expected of us. One and all enlisted to suffer. One and all understood that they assumed to be the light of the world; and that this necessitated a life of godliness; and a walk in wisdom toward them who are without. Is that the way we all feel today,—or has any change come over any of us since the day we boldly buckled on the harness. Have we one and all something tangible to show as the fruit of earnest effort to lead others to the Lamb of God? This is extremely doubtful. But there is evidence that every one of us could have, if every one chose. What is that? A clear conscience that we have done what we could in that direction, and leave the result with God! Whatever our conduct may have been our Lord is just the same precious Jesus. He has not changed a particle. After asking the apostles, "Whom do men say that I am?" This was followed by another question: Whom say YE that I am? This is the question for us, if we are his disciples. We must each ask what is my estimate of his title and claims, and then ask whether this be simply an intellectual estimate, or a conviction to which our whole life bears testimony? Thou art the Christ—he that should come—Abraham's seed in whom all the families of the earth shall be blessed. I trust you will all unite with me in saying: Blessed Lord thou wast a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. Thou hadst not where to lay thine head. But thine invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden" reached our ear, and we gladly listened, and accepted, and now thy loving assurances come from the throne of the eternal One,—thy voice has lost none of its sweetness and sympathy for those thou didst seek and save. And we are just longing and waiting to see thee as thou art—longing for thy return from the far country to set up that

KINGDOM OF PROMISE.

Thou glorious Son of God, thou didst share all our temptations, our sorrows, our griefs, our thirst, our loneliness, our death agony, and our tomb, but we are far, far from thee,—born of a daughter of humanity but not of the will of the flesh. O bright ray of Divine light in a world of darkness and sin, thou wast a gift from on high, a beam from the eternal sun, a bright morning star to draw our thoughts and affections heavenward, and herald a day of brightness for our race. Blessed Jesus, glorious Anointed One, our Lord, and life, our All,—we cannot comprehend thee as thou art in all thy fulness of the Godhead, but we praise thee,—we adore thee, that thou art still our blessed Lord and Savior, who hast made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption—O yes; thou art the Son of God,—the way, the Truth and the life,—thou alone hast the words of eternal life. But thou blessed friend of sinners, we remember thy words; it is not enough to say Lord, Lord, our lives are to be the test of our sincerity in the Truth, and testify to all around, that we have been with thee. And O, thou who ever liveth to make intercession for us,—and who, through endless ages will be to the redeemed hosts, the Lamb that was slain, and redeemed them to God by thy blood, may we in these days of abounding iniquity manifest some traces of thy holiness, thy love, thy humility, thy perfect trust in the Father, and make it manifest that thou art all in all to us. "Come Lord Jesus, quickly come," amen and amen.

Another One.

One more was added to the Household of Faith on Sunday, March 18, at Cleveland, Ohio, when Brother Patterson become a candidate for eternal life in the kingdom of God's dear Son. We were not able to attend the services, but are assured that it was a time of rejoicing, and of encouragement to toil on, seeing the gospel is still powerful to save all who believe and obey it.

We rejoice with our Brother in his decision to forsake all theisms of men and the pleasures of sin at the age of sixty-two, and follow Christ; a marvelous change at that time of life; but he had read and read, and fraternized somewhat with the Latter Day delusions, till he discovered how baseless and unsatisfying they are, and then turned away from them. If we understand it, he had severed his connection with every man-made system when our dear Brother, Geo. Francis, recommended him to attend the "Church of the Blessed Hope—the Church of God," when he should get back to Cleveland. We expect that brother will exclaim "Bless the Lord, O my soul," when he sees that his friend took his advice of two years ago, and has been caught in "the gospel net." "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Prov. xxv. 11. Speak thus again, dear brother, and secure other crowns of rejoicing.

We trust that our new-born brother will show his gratitude to God for being called out of darkness at the 11th hour, by striving to reflect the light which has shined into his heart to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus the Christ. As he knows right well that he has not been called for his own sake alone, but also as a witness for God and truth, we hope he will persistently strive to lead others into the ark of safety. He has begun to do well. May he not be weary, and in due season he will reap if he faint not.

How to Detect a Counterfeit.

We recently read in a city paper that the President of a bank was asked by a young clerk how he could distinguish the bad bills from the good ones. The answer given was this:—

"Get acquainted with the good bills, and you will recognize the bad ones at sight."

Here is a vast amount of wisdom summed up into a simple sentence.

This homely, pointed advice applies not only to the detection of counterfeit money, but with equal force to the detection of the counterfeit and false in all departments of life.

The man who is accustomed to handling only good corn, good wheat, good potatoes, has no difficulty in detecting the faulty. He detects it instinctively. Even without conscious reasoning, he fixes precisely upon the faulty.

The skilful egg-handler passes good eggs before the light with a rhythmic rapidity that is amazing; but an imperfect egg breaks his complacency and interrupts his process.

The trained musician, accustomed to doing and knowing high grade work, a false note comes like a stab of pain.

The boy or girl careful of his or her thought and speech and manner, will soon learn to know and despise the loose and vulgar.

There is but one way to know the bad, the imperfect, and that is by knowing the good, the perfect.

This explains why so many honest appearing are induced to accept theories of men made to appear reasonable from a natural point of view, while really they are as baseless as the fabric of a vision,—their knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus is extremely superficial. They know certain promises and facts, of course, but they do not see how all the truths of God dovetail together and form an arch which spans the ages, or else they would not try to supplement it with fancies subversive of his eternal purpose.

Those well acquainted with the revealed truths of God easily detect the attempt to supplement them. *

We do not care to advertize John Alexander Dowie too extensively, as our thought has been along that this was what pleased him most, and we have never been impressed that it was our duty to tickle him. However, he has reached a stage now when mention of him will not be out of place. The daily papers have given to the world the story of his downfall. On last Sunday a long dispatch of 800 words was received from him. He has gone from Jamaica to Mexico. In his communication he deposed one of his bishops, and attempted to restrict the powers of Deputy Voliva. After the reading of the dispatch in hearing of the whole population of Zion City, a vote was taken as between Dowie and the ruinous course he had outlined, and a continuance of the reform policy that had been inaugurated since Voliva assumed control. It has resulted in the deposing of Dowie. He has been removed as head of the church, all the property in his name has been taken over for the benefit of the city. All signs bearing his name have been removed—from the banking institutions even to the water carts. His wife and son join in this matter, signing papers relinquishing all their claims. Dowie has been asked to submit quietly and gracefully. Failing to do so, he will be met with charges regarding his character that will include dishonest practices, misrepresentations, immoral practices, and even reveal leanings toward polygamy in his private teachings. All of this is supported by statements of his wife and son. Thus we chronicle the sensational downfall of another false one.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Poetry.

A Wish to Live Useful.

If I can live to make some sad heart lighter,
If I can live to make some pale face brighter;
Then having lived, will be a joy to me,
Not only for all time, but for eternity.

If I can live to speak some words of kindness,
If I can teach some heathen to his blindness,
If I can give some weary heart repose;
Then life will be all sunshine at its close.

If I can but some burden make it light,
If I can help some pilgrim up the height
Of life's rough pathway, he will not be vain,
And I can say with Paul "To die is gain."

If I can live and do my Master's will,
If I can all his blessed words fulfill,
Then with what pleasure when my Lord shall come to me,
Shall I look up and say "Well done,

In reply to the above heading Brother A. Robinson reviews the second sermon of Mr. Blagrave, of Belleville, Ont.

Editor Ontario:

As reported Mr. Blagrave in his 2nd sermon on "The Intermediate State" stated that Sheol had nothing to do with hell or Gehenna. He also said (as reported), "The name of the intermediate state was variously known as Hades and Sheol. They were identical, and signified an intermediate state to which the grave was the entrance. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were now living in Sheol, as was proven by portions of Scripture. The Savior said to the dying thief, "this day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." The word paradise was a Persian word meaning garden, and the Savior when he used those words meant a garden in Sheol, a portion of that place where the righteous are assembled together." The preacher brought forward as proof that there are two divisions in sheol or hades the case of Dives and Lazarus. "Lazarus was in the garden and Dives in torment."

Now, Mr. Editor, there are three positions taken in the above structure with which the writer heartily agrees, viz.: (1) That sheol is not identical with Gehenna; (2) That Hades in the New Testament is identical with sheol in the Old Testament, and (3) that paradise means, literally, garden. But when Mr. Blagrave says that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are now living in sheol or elsewhere I beg to differ with him on Scriptural grounds and I shall now proceed to produce the evidence. "There is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in sheol whither thou goest." Eccl. ix. 10. This to my mind, shows conclusively that we not only go to sheol, but that it is a place or condition of inactivity—no work, no device, no knowledge there. Now, how are we to account for those in sheol or hades being in this condition, simply by the fact that they are dead, and here are the proofs: "Death and hades delivered up the dead which were in them." Rev. xx. 13. "Like sheep they are laid in sheol; death shall feed on them." Psa. xlix. 14. How could hades deliver up dead people if the occupants are living and are immortal souls? And how could they be laid in sheol and death feed on them if they were living, indestructible beings, such as a "departed" soul is represented to be? Again, Jacob said, "If mischief befall him (Benjamin) * * * then shall ye bring down my grey hairs with sorrow to sheol." Gen. xliii. 38. If I understand Mr. Blagrave correctly the sheol of his construction is not the place for beings with hair on their heads, especially the division of Sheol where Dives was located. Once more—"They shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to sheol with their weapons of war; and they have laid their swords under their heads" (referring to the ancient custom of burying warriors with their swords under their heads). Ezekiel xxxii 27. Mr. Editor, I cannot resist asking Mr. Blagrave at this juncture how he harmonizes such passages as I have quoted with this theory that never dying souls go to sheol and are there in a condition of activity. If this contention of his be correct it involves the absurd idea that those old warriors are alive in sheol and have their weapons of war there with them. The portions of Scripture quoted are not ambiguous, but are quite intelligible, and therefore easily understood. And what do we learn from them? Simply that those in the intermediate state (or in sheol) are literally dead. And "the dead praise not the Lord neither any that go down into silence." Psa. cxv. 17. They could not praise the Lord for "the dead know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5. And how could they know anything when there is neither "knowledge nor wisdom in sheol, whither thou goest" at death? We must conclude then, as all go to sheol, that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are there, and that they are literally dead "and know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5.

I shall now give some attention to the rector's support for the theory he advances. He first brings forward the answer Christ gave to the thief's petition on the cross and has our Lord making a promise quite inconsistent with the thief's request—"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Luke xxiii. 42. The thief evidently did not desire to be remembered on the day of the crucifixion, but at a future time, namely, at the time when Jesus comes into his kingdom or paradise. And the answer was in strict harmony with the request—Verily I say unto thee today, thou shalt be with me in paradise, or in my kingdom. It is only a matter of changing the punctuation and transposing two words, all of which is allowable, seeing that there was no punctuation originally; and translators are supposed to arrange the words and punctuate in the order that makes the best sense of the text; and to verify this I now quote from Rotherham's Emphasized New Testament—"And he went on to say—Jesus! remember me whensoever thou shalt come into thy kingdom. And he said unto him—Verily I say unto thee this day: With me shalt thou be in paradise." When the kingdom of Christ (or God) is established on the earth, paradise will be restored and the thief will then be remembered. See Matt. xxv. 31; Luke i. 32, 33; Zech. xiv. 9; Rev. xi. 15; Ezek. xxxvi. 35; Isa. iv. 10, 13. So it will be seen that there is nothing here for Mr. Blagrave's theory. Now as to the narrative of the rich man and Lazarus, this is acknowledged by the best commentators to be a parable, and as such cannot be understood or applied in the literal sense. For instance, in the parable of the sower (Luke viii. 4) Jesus explains the "seed" to be "the Word of God," etc. The individuals in the former parable all died (Luke xvi.) and the dead, as we have already seen, "know not anything," for their "breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." cxlvi. 4. If he cannot think after death how can he converse? In allegory Jesus men are made to exercise the power of speech for a specific purpose. In Isaiah xiv. the "dead" in their "graves" are represented as talking, and even the trees are said to "rejoice." If, as Mr. Blagrave claims, Jesus went and preached to departed spirits in sheol the result would be that we would have universal salvation finally, for me thinks those in torment would embrace the first opportunity offered of salvation. But the fact is the spirits or persons who were preached to were the antedeluvians, and the time they were preached was when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah." Christ did not personally do this but it was done by the spirit that was in Christ, through Noah. These spirits were dead and in prison (the death state, or grave) when Peter wrote and corporeal beings are often termed spirits. If Mr. Blagrave will discard the pagan doctrine of the immortality of the soul he will have less difficulty in expounding the Bible.

Light Wines.

It has been a favorite idea with some that the use of light wines and lager beers and ales, as a beverage, would promote temperance by leading people to drink these instead of stronger liquors. Great Britain tried the "beer" remedy by encouraging its sale and use, and the result is that the "beers" have largely increased the consumption of stronger liquors, and greatly increased intemperance among the English people. More recently California has tried the experiment of encouraging the manufacture and use of light wines. "The result is," according to the San Francisco correspondent of the Boston Journal, "that the Californians not only drink more rum and beer, but also more spiritous liquors than any other portion of our population." The same correspondent says that "some of the California hotels have provided drunk rooms for those customers who have become so intoxicated as to become helpless." "A snifter of bourbon," adds the writer, "is preferred to champagne," showing that the use of wine and beer causes an appetite which calls for something stronger. The use of opium in California is alarmingly on the increase. We should as soon think of training a child to be virtuous, by inviting him to enter the outer circles of vice, as to train him to be temperate by giving him cider, beer and wine.—H. L. Hastings.

Consider the Poor.

"Blessed is the man that considereth the poor." It does not say, Blessed is the man that feeds the poor, or helps the poor—for there are many persons who might not be able to do this—but the blessing is for the man who remembers the poor, and wonders how they are, and is anxious to know how they get along, who enquires what they need, and considers what is best for them, who studies into the secrets of their condition, learns how they became poor, and enquires how they are to be relieved from their poverty. The man who considers the poor casts about to see if there is some way by which they may be made independent. He investigates the source from which poverty comes, and the means by which it may be removed.

There is very much need at the present time of men who will consider the poor, and instead of giving indiscriminately will take pains to counsel, advise, direct, and help them. Thousands of persons are poor through lack of judgment and wisdom; thousands are poor because they have never been taught the lessons of thrift and industry and frugality and sobriety. The man who considers the poor takes these things into account, and though he may have little wealth and small opportunity, yet in considering the poor he may be a truer benefactor than one who with abundant wealth gives lavishly, but in such a way that his gifts do little good, and sometimes no little evil. Let Christian men consider the poor, and, while the priest and the Levite may pass by on the other side, let them look into the cases of those who are in need and distress, and endeavor to consider and help them according as their necessities may require.—Christian.

Speed the Plow.

There is no successful sowing unless it is preceded by plowing. It is useless to scatter seeds among thorns, and the call of God to His people is "Break up your fallow ground." Plowing causes commotion. Under the greenest sward there are abundance of living creatures which, when they are disturbed, run in every direction. The snakes, toads, worms, grubs, crickets and all sorts of creeping things start when the plow overturns the sod and the stones, cuts through the roots, turns up the turf, and reveals the hidden things that have been burrowing beneath. When the turf is dense and strong it requires a heavy plow, and strong team, a skillful plowman, and an energetic driver, to tear through and revolutionize the soil.

One of the great instrumentalities for the breaking up fallow ground is the press, and often the printed page cuts its way as few other instrumentalities will; but this breaking up plowing, is only effective when it has a strong team to pull it through. The writer and the editor may direct the course, sharpen the plow and give it edge, but the drawing power comes through the subscribers and readers. They must carry the load, and if they pull long and strong a good plow is likely to cut its way through.

There are thousands of people who need to be enlightened by the word of truth, many of whom are not likely to be reached except by the printed page. Let Christians be zealous to make use of the press and every other means within their reach, and let those who have the interest in the Word of God speed every plow which cuts through turf and turns up soil, no matter if it disturbs bugs and crickets, worms and snakes.

Men need to be awakened, aroused, quickened, and turned from sin to see God. Let those who labor to do this work have the earnest aid of all who love the Lord, and love his truth, and they will accomplish great work for God and for the cause of humanity.—Common People.

Earth is full of the sad children of sin and sorrow, over whom Jesus yearns with unutterable love. Let us pray him to baptize us with the same yearning to save them, that we may have trophies to bring him when he comes, the purchase of his blood.

Humility.

I believe the first test of a truly great man is his humility. I do not mean by humility doubt of his own power, or hesitation of speaking his opinions; but a right understanding of the relation between what he can do and say, and the rest of the world's sayings and doings.

All great men not only know their business, but usually know that they know it; and are not only right in their main opinions, but they usually know that they are right in them, only they do not think much of themselves on that account.

Arnolfo knows he can build a good dome at Florence; Albert Durer writes calmly to one who has found fault with his work, "It cannot be better done;" Sir Isaac Newton knows that he has worked out a problem or two that would have puzzled anybody else; only they do not expect their fellow-men, therefore, to fall down and worship them. They have a curious under-sense of powerlessness, feeling that the greatness is not in them, but through them, that they could not do or be anything else than God made them—and they see something divine and God-made in every other man they meet, and are endlessly, foolishly, incredibly merciful.—John Ruskin.

Dear Restitution.

I see in THE RESTITUTION of March 7, 1906, "Notes by the Way" by Bro. W. H. Wilson, and I would love to re-write. I like his articles. He gives us an outline of his way of preaching. I have practiced the same methods for over 35 years—to illustrate by chart and blackboard. His experience is similar to my own.

But this is not what I wanted most to talk about. It was what he said regarding the need of earnest men and women who are able to rightly divide the Word of truth, who can and will devote their lives to the work; and also the obligation laid on those who have the means of joining hands with the evangelist and seeing he has a decent support. Please re-read Brother Wilson's article, as it is too long to give over again. As he says let us be sensible, practical and earnest in our efforts to herald forth the Word of Life to a dying world.

It makes me feel bad to see where we are drifting, and I ask myself if we are going to drift away after the world as other reformers have done. I can see danger ahead, and we better call a halt, and take our bearings carefully, so as not to repeat the sad experiences of the past.

However I rejoice at the thought that the King of Peace is so near at hand. When he has taken out his full number he will close the door and then it will be too late for this call. Then with the King so near, and sinners so hungry for the Word of Life, we ought to do our utmost.

I will give you my way of studying the Bible: First, Who the speaker is. Second, Who is spoken to. Third, What the subject is the speaker is talking about. Fourth, What age the speaker and spoken to refer to. This is the sort of education we need, and with such an equipment I fear no one who teaches that man has an immortal soul, or that the church is the kingdom, or that the kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost, or that men go to heaven when they die.

I received a letter from a good Sister who wishes to know what we will do when the old preachers wear out. I think God will raise up men. We have at Bluch, Mo., a young man, S. A. Cooper, who is already quite a speaker, and another one named Elijah Satterfield, at Elvin, Mo. He was baptized March 11, at the Church dedication meeting at Bluch, and wants to go right into the work. He started to study some time ago, and I think both of these brethren will be qualified by our Conference this fall to go into the ministry.

I am a painter by trade, but my usefulness in that line, and as an evangelist is about done. However, I am determined to do all I can as far as my ability will permit.

Now dear ones, you who have the means, see that Brother Wilson's Pine Woods Bible Class is issued. It only costs $1.25, and will be all right. It will make you lots of good reading. And here is the dear old RESTITUTION, Subscribe for it, and don't neglect the Editor.

Yours as ever in hope of life.

We need what is due us on subscriptions and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor

Obituary.

It is with a sad heart that we chronicle the death of Brother Perry Finn, which occurred at his home in Carthage, Mo., Friday morning, March 9, 1906, after a brief illness of pneumonia. He had been ailing for a couple of weeks, and about a week before he took a severe cold which developed at once into pneumonia.

His case was a severe one from the start, and when the day before his death both lungs became involved, it was known the end was near.

Brother Finn had been a resident of this city and county for many long years, and won the respect and friendship of all who knew him. He was an enterprising and reliable business man and made a success of his chosen line. From a small beginning he built up one of the largest and most up-to-date greenhouse businesses in the west.

Brother Finn was born in Elk Hill, Pa., Nov. 29, 1838. At the age of 22 he married his wife who was Ella B. Leonard. To them were born three children, the two oldest dying a number of years ago. The youngest son Frank, is still living, is married, and lives close by his father and worked with him in the greenhouse. He came to Dade County in Jan. 1970, and lived in Dade and Lawrence Counties until 1873, when he moved into Carthage, where he lived most of the time since.

Funeral services held at the residence Sunday afternoon, after which we laid him to rest in the Carthage Cemetery to await the Master's call. He was a faithful and consistent member of the Church, and for years devoted a portion of his time to preaching the gospel.

His work is now done and he sleeps but we trust that there is a crown of righteousness laid up for him, which the righteous Judge will give him with all the righteous at that day when he appears. This should remind us that we too are mortal, and ere long must fall under the enemy death, and the only hope of life eternal is in Jesus our Savior through obedience, to be given at his appearing.

Then I would say to the sorrowing ones, put your trust in him who has the keys of hell and of death, and look forward to that time when there will be no more death.

S. C. OLIVER.

Died of heart disease at his home in Buchanan, Mich., Samuel Weaver, at the age of 80 years, 11 months and 26 days. The deceased was a lifelong Christian, and was a reader of THE RESTITUTION from away back. He died firm in the hope of a glorious resurrection from the dead.

Yes, dear father sleeps sweetly in Jesus, and such will Christ bring with him when he comes. The funeral text was the last five verses of the fourth chapter of Paul's epistle to the Thessalonians.

Do pray for us, dear brothers and sisters, that we may be faithful till he comes to make up his jewels.

Your sorrowing Sister in Christ.

MRS. L. PEARSON.

Albert J Howard was born Dec. 25, 1832, at Frankfort, Herkimer County N. Y. and died on March 24, 1906, at Morrill, Kan. aged 73 years 3 months and 29 days.

At the age of 17 he moved with his parents from New York to Wisconsin. Removed to Iowa in 1867, and in 1879 located near Morrill, where he resided till death.

At the age of 22 he was married to Sarah Ann Crouch of Center, Wisconsin. To their union were born two daughters and three sons, all of who, with his wife, survive him.

Brother Howard united with the Baptist Church in 1864, at Jefferson, Iowa, holding his membership with that church until about 1867, then dropping the belief of the natural immortality, and accepting the doctrine of the mortality of man, and life only in Christ through a resurrection from the dead when Jesus comes. In this faith he died a firm believer, and hoped in the soon coming of the Master to establish his kingdom and reign over the nations of earth.

Till he come. Oh let the words
Linger in the trembling chords;
Let the little while between
In their golden light be seen:
Let us think how rest and home
Lie beyond that—Till he come.

When the weary ones we love
To the silent grave remove,
When their work of love and cheer
Fall no longer on our ear,
Hush, be every murmur dumb,
It is only—Till he come.

About eleven years ago Bro. Howard was afflicted with paralysis which with other difficulties rendered him entirely helpless for a number of years, and caused him great suffering. Through all these years of trial he was the care of his loving wife, whose hands were ever ready to soothe the aching brow, and though they were hardened by the toil of life none other was so gentle and soft.

The funeral discourse was preached in the Dunkard Church by the writer to a large congregation of old friends. The large number at the funeral was the best evidence of the esteem in which he was held by his neighbors.

A. W. DARBY.

One after another, in quick succession, the older members of the Church of God at Rensselaer, Indiana, are falling by the rude hand of the enemy death, while those remaining are left to mourn, and realize their want of ability to turn the tide. Now grief-stricken by the death of our dear sister Paris, but with the consolation that they mourn not as those without hope.

Mrs. Sarah J. Paris, daughter of Daniel and Mary Dwiggins, and sister of Robert S. Dwiggins, was born in Clinton Co., Ohio, Dec. 18, 1832, and died in Oxford, Ind., March 26, 1906, aged 73 years 3 mo. and 8 days.

She was married to Berry Paris in Marion, Ind. Dec. 31, 1851, came to Jasper County in 1858, and to Rensselaer in 1881.

She was the mother of eight children six of whom survive her, namely, Mrs. Louisa M. Imes of Rensselaer, Mrs. Lydia Kimball and Robert Paris of Brooklyn, N.Y. John W. Paris of New York City, Mrs. Amanda Lewis of Langdon, Alberta Provinces, Canada, and Mrs. Rose Ladd of Oxford, Ind. at whose home she sickened and died, while returning to Rensselaer, from a winter's visit with her children in New York.

Sister Paris united with the Church of God at Rensselaer in 1861, and was "faithful unto death." Ever devoted and active in the service of the Master, "not forsaking the assembling together—inciting to love and good works." She truly loved the cause, and association with the faithful was to her a joy, and doing the will of God was meat indeed.

She was highly esteemed of "them which are without," which was attested by the community where she had lived so long, by the large attendance at the funeral service on March 29, when she was laid away in Weston Cemetery, Rensselaer, to remain in quiet slumber until the call of the Master.

While her immediate family, relatives, and the church deeply deplore her death, still they have left to them the consolation of the inscription, registered in fond memory, of her well-ordered Christian life.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

"The Baptism with the Holy Spirit" a 19-page booklet with cover, printed in large type on fine paper. This pamphlet is a reproduction of a series of articles which appeared several years ago. Price 5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen. Send orders to the author, A. H. Zilmer, at Plymouth, Indiana.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the donors request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

CHAPTER 27.

1. The Lord's Word which he talked in respect to Babuloon,

2. Declare it to the nations and make it heard and do not conceal it; say Babuloon hath been taken; Beelos the undismayed hath been put to shame, the delicately nurtured hath been given up a Maisoodach, (a very-sad-sparkler).

3: Because a nation from the north hath gone up against her; this one will put her land in desolation, and there will be no one dwelling in it from man even to domestic animal.

4. In those days and in that period the sons of Israeel, they and the sons of Jouda will come to the same place going on foot and lamenting will they go their way seeking the Lord their God.

5. Unto Sioon will they inquire the way; for here will they give their face and flee for refuge unto the Lord God; for an age-lasting covenant will not have been ignored.

6. Lost sheep have my laity become; their shepherds thrust them out; upon the mountains did they lead them astray; from mountain to hill they went; they ignored their fold:

7. All those who found them lavishly wasted them; their enemies said, Let us not remit unto them because they have been sinning against the Lord; a pasture of righteousness had he who gathered together their fathers.

8. Alienate yourselves and come out of Babuloon and from a land of Chaldaioi; and become eron as dragons against the face of sheep.

9. Because lo, I am stirring up against Babuloon assemblies of nations from out a land at the north; and they will array themselves against her. From there will she be taken. Like a weapon of an understanding fighter it will not return void.

10. And Chaldaia will be for foray, and all those who ravage it will have been filled.

11. Because ye rejoiced and boasted when plundering mine inheritance, because ye skipped like calves in green herbage, and ye hooked like bulls with your horns.

12. Your mother hath been put to shame exceedingly; your mother who bore you for good things a desolate one, a last of nations hath been confounded;

13. By reason of the wrath of the Lord she will not have been inhabited; and she will be wholly in desolation; and every one who maketh his way through Babuloon will look gloomy and hiss at all her affliction.

14. Array yourselves against Babuloon all ye round about who stretch a bow; shoot at her; spare not your arrows;

15. And get control of her; her hands have become paralyzed; her battlements have fallen, and her wall hath been dug down; because it is a requital from God; requite on her; even as she did do ye to her.

16. Utterly destroy seed from out Babuloon, destroy him who holdeth a sickle in the time of summer-harvest; from the face of a Greek sword each one will turn away unto his laity and each one will flee into his own land.

17. A sheep that hath been led astray is Israeel; lions thrust him out; the first devoured him, a king Assour namely, and this one later his bones a king of Babuloon namely.

18. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Lo, I am requiting upon the king of Babuloon and upon his land even as I requited upon king Assour.

19. And I shall restore Israeel to his pasture and he will pasture on the Karmulon and on Mount Ephraim, and on the Galaad and his soul will have been filled.

20. In those days and in that period they will seek for the iniquity of Israeel and it will not exist and for the sins of Jonda and they shall not be found, because I shall be favorable to those who have been left upon the land, saith the Lord. Go up bitterly against her (Babuloon) and against those inhabit it; requite, O sword, and desolate, saith the Lord, and do according to all the things that I am commanding thee;

22. A sound of war and a great crushing-blow in a land of Chaldaioi!

23. How hath the hammer of all the earth been broken and crushed? How hath Babuloon become a desolation among nations?

24. They will go up against thee, and like Babuloon thou (Israeel) wilt not know and thou wilt be taken; thou hast been found and taken because thou hast withstood the Lord.

25. The Lord hath opened his treasure-house and brought out the instrumentalities of his wrath, because a work for the Lord God is there in a land of Chaldaioi;

26. Because her appointed times have been fulfilled. Open her storehouses; search her like a den and utterly destroy her; Let there not become a remnant of her;

27. Dry up all her fruits, and let them go down to slaughter; woe unto them because their day hath come and a due-time for their requital.

28. A sound of those who flee and who are saving themselves from out a land of Babuloon that they may tell in Sioon the news of the requital from the Lord our God.

29. Enjoin on many in respect to Babuloon, on every one who stretcheth a bow; encamp ye against her on every side; let no one of hers save himself; repay to her according to her deeds; according to all that she hath done, do unto her, because she hath withstood the Lord the sacred God of Israeel.

30. Therefore her young men will fall in her public-squares and all her men of war will be cast down, hath the Lord said.

31. Lo, I am against thee thou haughty one, saith the Lord, because thy day hath come and the due-time for thy requital;

32. And thy haughty pride will grow weak and fall and there will be no one stand it up; and I shall kindle a fire in her forest, and it will devour all her places round about it.

33. Thus saith the Lord, The sons of Israeel and the sons of Jouda were oppressed, together they all who had taken them captive oppressed them, because they were not willing to send them out;

34. And the one who is redeeming them is strong, an all controlling Lord is his name. He will preside in judgment against his opponents of right to take away their land and provoke those who inhabit Babuloon;

35. A sword against the Chaldaioi and those who inhabit Babuloon and against her great men and against her understanding men;

36. A sword against her fighting men and they will have been paralyzed; a sword against their horses and their chariots;

37. A sword against their fighting men and against the mixed multitude in the midst of her and they will be like women; a sword against the treasures and they will have been scattered

38. Upon her waters; and they will have been put to shame, because a land of idols is it and in the islands where they boast themselves.

39. Therefore imaginary things will take up their abode in the islands; and daughters of siren-owls will dwell in it; it shall not be dwelt in any more unto an animate age.

40. Even as God overthrew (or "turned down") Sodoma and Gomorra and the cities adjacent to them, hath the Lord said, mankind shall not dwell there, and a son of man shall not sojourn there.

41. Lo, a laity is coming from the north, and a great nation and many kings will have been stirred up from a farthest of the earth;

42. Having bow and javelin; fierce is it, and it will not show mercy; the sound of them will echo like a sea; upon horses will they ride made ready fire to war against thee, O thou daughter of Babuloon.

43. Babuloon's king hath heard the report of them, and his hands have become relaxed; tribulation hath laid controling-hold of him, woes as of a woman bringing forth;

44. Lo, even as a lion will go up from the Jordanos into Gaithan, will it be, because I shall requite them therefrom; and every young man therefrom shall I withstand; Because who is even as I? And who will withstand me? And who is this shepherd who will withstand me to my face?

45. Therefore may ye have hearkened to the counsel of the Lord which he hath counseled in respect to Babuloon, and his reasonings which he hath reasoned in respect to the Chaldaioi who inhabit it, and see if the lambs of their flocks be not destroyed, if their pasture do not vanish away from them.

46. Because with the sound of the taking of Babuloon the earth will have been shaken, and a clamor will have been heard among nations.

COMMENT.

What claims to be this 27th chapter in the Greek as here rendered is given in the C. V. & R. V. as the 50th chapter; but it is so different in its readings of very many passages that the reader will do well to compare verse by verse with the above translation as there is neither time nor space for me to give a critical analysis as I have been doing. The 27th chapter in the C. V. and R. V. is supposed to correspond to the 84th in the Greek. We will see how nearly it really does when we come to it. Remember this "Allam" prophecy begun in the 25th chapter starting with Aiguptos and Assour next takes in Babuloon with the downfall of Hesau or the kingdom of Edoom as well as the leading events of the captivity of Israeel in Babuloon; in short follows a strictly historical sequence which has been entirely muddled in the versions: and secular history has in these later years largely followed this meddled sequence of events.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Industries Wanted.

The Chicago & North-Western Railway is receiving information from desirable points on its lines that industries of various kinds are desired. The opening up of the Spring season, with good prospects for a continuance of the large business of the past year, is causing many communities to make strong efforts to locate new industries. Among the establishments desired are iron and woodworking concerns, cereal mills, canning works, cold storage plants and mills of various kinds, as well as mercantile establishments. Requests for particulars addressed to the Industrial Department of the C. & N. W. Ry., Chicago, will be promptly attended to.

We need what is due us on subscriptions and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor.

Ever Stedfast.

Through the yesterdays of ages,
Jesus, thou hast been the same;
Through our own life's checkered pages,
Still the one dear, changeless name.
Well may we in thee confide,
Faithful Savior, proved and tried.

Joyfully we stand and witness
Thou art still today the same;
In thy perfect glorious fitness,
Meeting every need and claim.
Chiefest of ten thousand, thou!
Savior, O most precious now!

Valid Baptism.

It is absolutely safe to preach what inspired apostles preached, and to practice what they practiced under the commission, as given by Jesus just prior to his ascension. I will quote it in the language as recorded by Matthew xxviii. 18, 19. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, 'All power (authority) is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Mark says, "Preach the gospel to every creature." And Luke, "Repentance and remission of sins to be preached." The apostles entered on their work of preaching the gospel at the next pentecost after the passover at which he was crucified. After his resurrection he showed himself alive to his apostles that they might be well qualified to bear testimony to the fact. He continued with them for the space of forty days, during which time the burden of his teaching was the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. Acts i. 3. Ten days after the ascension the Holy Spirit was given to the apostles in fulfilment of the promise Jesus made prior to his death. Thus endued or empowered by the Spirit, they entered on their mission, beginning at Jerusalem, preaching to the Jew first. This was the divine order. Their message was addressed to men and women who were sinners in need of pardon and life, and a permanent and happy home. They preached the gospel which embraced not less than what had been preached before by John the baptizer, by Jesus and his apostles during the former's brief ministry, and which was the subject matter of his talks with his disciples in the interval of forty days between his resurrection and ascension. By reference to Matt. iii. 2; iv. 17; x. 7; Acts i. 3 it is learned that this gospel related to the kingdom of heaven, of God. Whoever preaches less than this to the sinner does not follow inspired precedent; and to put it in still graver form of language, disobeys the command of Jesus, to preach the gospel of the kingdom, or things pertaining to the kingdom; and whoever is baptized believing less than this has failed to come up to the divine requirement as to the subject matter of faith. To believe the gospel is to believe it as preached by the apostles under the commission, and under the direction of the Spirit, and not as preached from the popular pulpits of today. When preachers leave out all reference to the kingdom they leave out much of the gospel the apostles preached, which Paul says, "Is made manifest, and by the Scriptures (writings) of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." Rom. xvi. 26.

It does not help matters, nor lessen the shortage, so to speak, to substitute the church for the kingdom, or point to heaven as the eternal abode of the righteous. To introduce either is a gross perversion of the gospel which according to the apostle merits a curse. It is dangerous to preach a perverted gospel and scarcely less to believe it. 1. Gospel, defined good news or glad tidings is the general truth or proposition; 2, gospel of the kingdom. This brings to our mind in a broad sense the subject matter of the gospel; it is seen at once that it tells about the kingdom. 3. The kingdom of heaven, and of God. This further unfolds the gospel by showing us that the kingdom in its origin is of heaven and of God in contrast with kingdoms founded by men, and embracing a great amount of evil, both physical and moral. The gospel called a mystery in Rom. xvi. 25 is said by the apostle to have been "made manifest and by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." The Scriptures of the prophets of the old dispensation were appealed to by the apostles in making manifest, and making known the gospel. They found in these Scriptures the subject matter of the gospel. I must confine myself to the gospel as proclaimed to sinners by these inspired men. I now call attention to the first four verses of 15th chapter of 1st Cor. where Paul sets forth what he preached to the Corinthians for their obedience of faith. In verse 1 he says, "I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you." The last clause relates to the introduction of the gospel in that city several years before. The gospel is the general truth or proposition. He says they received this gospel, stood in it, and were to be saved by it if they kept it in mind. Part of this gospel related to the kingdom. It is not necessary to find the kingdom connected with the gospel every time this word occurs in order to establish the fact that the apostles preached the kingdom. This has been proven and if any thing is needed by way of corroboration Christ's words, in the 24th chapter of Matt. may be quoted: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world." The kingdom was not all that was preached here. Included in the gospel as a part of it, he enumerates: "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." Verses 3, 4.

Early in my manhood I heard a great deal of preaching on the three facts gospel, sometimes styled the gospel in a nut shell. The three facts quoted above, together with three commands and three promises constituted the gospel as it was supposed by these men whom I heard. This simplified the subject but did not agree with the truth. The language of Paul here was quoted in proof of this view, but he does not say these three facts constitute the gospel, which he preached to these Corinthians for their acceptance, only the first things. "For I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received." The gospel was the all, and of course embraced the kingdom. The three facts following, death, burial and resurrection were the first things in the order of his preaching to these Corinthian unbelievers. So the three facts gospel is short one-half. Those who preached it thus disobeyed the command to preach the gospel of the kingdom, along with the three historical facts. With a faith embracing only part of the gospel men yielded what they supposed was the obedience of faith. They were honest, but honesty without belief of the gospel as it was preached by inspired men will not save. Persons who embrace the gospel, who had been sprinkled, readily yield the required Scriptural obedience. They go forward in baptism willingly, but many who were baptized upon the faith of the three facts gospel refuse to act, believing that their former baptism was valid, and that to be baptized again would be solemn mockery. When questioned as to their faith when baptized they return answers in accord with what they heard preached by men who scoffed at nearly everything in the system of Bible truth. They believed in the immortality of the soul, going to heaven at death, endless torment of the wicked, and held lightly, as a kind of half truth the resurrection of the dead; had no faith in the promise to Abraham of an everlasting inheritance in the land through which he walked—the land, the metes and bounds of which were given to him; nor was the oath to David, which pledged to him the endless perpetuity of his throne and kingdom, and the dominion finally of the whole earth, of any consequence in the matter of faith. I left the impression that the proclaimers of the three facts gospel believed that Jesus died, was buried, and rose again from the dead, and that their converts so far held the truth. This needs qualifying. They believed and taught that it was only the body of our Lord that died, and not the real person, or ego, for that went with the thief to Paradise at the moment of what seemed to Jew and Roman to be death absolutely. The burial was of the tenement of clay, and so the resurrection was of the same. This showing is true and the reader can judge of the amount of gospel truth that remains for faith to grasp. It is very little indeed, too little to risk one's eternal well-being on. I know one who would not stake all on so slender a thread, so to speak. No one, whose faith in gospel truth was so deficient, on coming to a knowledge of the apostolic gospel should be satisfied with a baptism formerly administered. To think that one's sins were remitted then because he conformed to the prescribed act, is to presume that God cares as little for the gospel he enjoined preached by inspired men, as many modern uninspired preachers care, who say it makes no difference so the heart is right. The heart is only right when it is made right by a belief of the truth. Baptism is only one of the conditions of remission of sins. Belief of the gospel followed by repentance or reformation are conditions relating to the same end, remission of sins; all these in an important sense relating to final salvation, and the entrance into the kingdom. Let us continue the argument on apostolic preaching. When Paul entered Thessalonica the first time he taught these pagan people "to turn to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, who delivered us from the wrath to come." 1 Thes. i. 9, 10. Paul's message would have been meaningless and without force if he had not included the Lord's coming. That was then, as it ought to be now, "the blessed hope." Protracted efforts are put forth today with the avowed purpose of making converts to religion, and no mention made of the personal coming of the Lord, or if it happens to be referred to it is done in such a way as to sink its import and importance almost, if not quite out of sight. The properly instructed disciple knows that every thing pertaining to his future destiny, every thing dear to his heart falls to his lot then, not before. The kingdom, glory, honor, immortality and eternal life, all that God has summed up in promise are his from thenceforth to have and enjoy through the ages.

In the 2nd of Acts is recorded a brief history of the first preaching done under the great commission, and under the direction of the Holy Spirit. Here commencing at the 22nd verse, are mentioned things pertaining to the name of Jesus the Christ, who was a man approved of God by miracles; was crucified and raised up from the dead, and exalted to God's right hand. The facts stated here pertain to the name of Jesus Christ, i. e. pertain to him. Verse 30 makes reference to the oath to David recorded first in 2 Sam. vii. 12, which oath guarantees his throne in eternal perpetuity to his greatest Son, the Christ; that he (God) raised him up to sit on David's throne at some future time. The exaltation to God's right hand is not the carrying out of the terms of the covenant with David, for according to this covenant Christ is to have the rule over the house of Jacob forever. Luke i. 33. The house of Jacob are the descendants of Jacob, over which he will reign at the appointed time. This is an additional fact pertaining to him and is embraced in the gospel as preached by Peter to sinners on the "day of Pentecost fully come." These few facts are not hard to grasp. Jesus is in heaven yet, but some day he will come and take his throne and reign over the house of Jacob. It is recorded in verse 41. Then they that gladly received his Word were baptized. What Peter said "with the many other words" used in testifying we do not know. Jesus often discoursed on eternal life. It is not likely that Peter omitted it though it is not directly mentioned in this synopsis of his preaching. Christ's resurrection was an all-sufficient pledge and proof of it. It was understood that obedience to the gospel insured the gift of eternal life. The gospel could not offer less than this and be the gospel of salvation to the sinner. We find proof of this in Acts xiii. 46 in the words of Paul and Barnabas who said, It was necessary that the Word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. This was addressed to unbelievers. The same words would likewise offer life to the Gentiles to whom they would turn. Paul preached the resurrection of the dead to his opponents (Acts xxiii. 6; xxiv. 21), and Peter to the household of Cornelius that "Jesus was ordained of God to be judge of quick and dead." Acts x. 42.

We have focussed in the gospel as proclaimed to sinners by inspired men, the kingdom, the throne of David, the reign over the house of Jacob, Christ's death, burial, resurrection, exaltation to the right hand of the Father, his coming again to raise the dead and give eternal life to the worthy, and to be judge of the quick and the dead. If the question of a valid baptism is not to be settled by what the apostles preached to sinners as prerequisite to that act, then it will be very difficult to settle it. They did not baptize persons who were destitute of a knowledge of the gospel, and afterwards instruct them. This was not their manner of preaching. If any one has come to the knowledge of the gospel as it was taught by inspired men, it matters not that he had been baptized. It is not solemn mockery nor sacrilege to intelligently obey the Lord in baptism, now that he has learned the truth. For one to depend on his former baptism, administered in his ignorance of the gospel, is trusting an uncertainty, and he is in an awkward relation to the gospel, especially when it comes to instructing others (every believer should do this) in the truth of the gospel which must be in harmony with apostolic teaching. Such a one to be consistent with his own theory must say that it matters little what you believe when you are baptized, which would be saying what receives no sanction from inspiration. But says one, to be baptized after years of service would be to give the lie to my former profession. Well, you have given the lie to your former belief by believing the truth. Take another step and say by it, your former baptism was invalid, then you will be right, and not till then.

JOHN L. WINCE.

Following Jesus.

I have taken for my subject, "Following Jesus," it is found in the 24th verse of the 16th chapter of Matthew. "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Jesus is here speaking to his disciples. In plain, forcible language he tells them what they will have to do, if they mean to follow him. He tells them plainly the conditions they must meet to be worthy to follow him. They were not forced to follow him; but he left it for them to decide. The little word if introduces a conditional sentence. If they choose to follow him, then he demands that they comply with the conditions. He also told them the unpleasant and sorrowful things that would meet them, because he did not want to deceive them, for had they never known they would meet trials and tribulations, when such overtook them they would have become discouraged and given up. But Jesus wanted them to count the cost before they started to follow him and he knew that only those who were determined to save themselves at any price, would accept the conditions. These conditions have never been changed and it was left with us also to decide for ourselves whether we would accept Jesus and let him have his way with us or not. If we had not complied with the conditions he tells us in Matt. x. 38, "He that taketh not his cross and followeth after me is not worthy of me."

Most of us have read about the fishermen of Galilee and that they decided to follow Jesus all the way. Let him deny himself is the first condition, and it is a great change from our former life. These fishermen had been living to please that person we have all admired, self. Jesus tells them that to follow him they must renounce self, must no longer live for self.

If we are willing to follow him, honestly renounce the world and repent of our sins, God will forgive us and put within us a spirit that is willing to give up the things of this world.

But there is still another condition. That word and means there is something still following. Let him deny himself and take up his cross. This then is a second condition, something we must do now, for we have been forgiven and adopted into the family of God. Take up his cross, take in a general sense means to accept what is offered. Jesus did not force us to take our crosses either. So accepting the conditions to become a follower of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ means we have not only denied ourselves, but have also taken up our cross.

To take up the cross in the time that Jesus was speaking meant to go out and die. Jesus took up his cross and carried it out to Calvary, where he was nailed to it and died. We then are to take up our cross and crucify the self life.

To meet the first condition we denied self, but to meet the second condition we are to crucify self. This means that self spirit is dead and Christ spirit is living within.

Cross-bearing is closely related to self-denial, and yet a distinction between them may be noted. Self denial relates more particularly to passive obedience and endurance for the Lord's sake. Cross-bearing has to do more especially with activities in the Lord's service, which we find to be contrary to our natural inclinations.

Faithfulness in self denial means courage and zeal, cross bearing means victory, overcoming. Our self denials may be victories in our own hearts, of which others may know nothing, but our cross-bearing may be seen to some extent at least, by those who are in close contact with us, and especially those who are walking in the same narrow way.

The Lord's cross-bearing consisted in the doing of the Father's will under unfavorable conditions. This course brought upon him the envy, hatred, malice, strife and persecution. Since we are walking in the same narrow way that our Master walked, we may reasonably expect that our crosses will be of similar kind to his, oppositions to our doing the will of our Father in heaven, oppositions to our serving his cause and letting the light shine out as our Master directed.

There was no reward of earthly prosperity for the Lord's faithfulness, but the reverse. He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. Though he was rich, for our sake he became poor, so poor that he said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." The only present reward for which the followers of Christ may look is, the heartfelt manifestation of the Lord's love and approval.

Brothers and sisters, let us draw near to God, in full assurance of the faith, that if we continue to follow Jesus we shall also be made like him, immortal.

EMMA BRADSHAW.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 11, 1906. NUMBER 14.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Are the New Testament Scriptures Entirely Independent of the Old?

To the readers of THE RESTITUTION, and those of the "Abrahamic Faith," the above question would seem useless, and their answer would be emphatically No. But many professed followers of Jesus, claim that we have no need of the Old Testament, that it is fulfilled and done away. Some of it we admit is fulfilled, but some is not. "But what saith the Scripture." "To the law and to the testimony." Jesus says, in John v. 39, "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they (the Scriptures) are they which testify of me." Paul says, Acts xvii. 11, "These (the Bereans) were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so." The Scriptures here referred to, of course were the Old, as the New had not then been written.

Acts xxviii. 23, "And when they had appointed him (Paul) a day, there came many to him, into his lodging, to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

Without the Old Testament we would have but a meager knowledge of creation, and none of its details; we would have but little knowledge of the covenants of promise, and of the promised "Heir to the throne of David," or the prophecies concerning a promised Messiah.

These, of course, are incidentally referred to in the New, but are references and quotations from the Old, to which we must go for particulars.

So completely are the two Scriptures interwoven that we find in the New 1011 references to the Old, and many of them very pointed and direct. In the very outset, the genealogical table of Matt. i. is from the Old, and Matt. i. 22, 23, refers to the prophet Isaiah, Matt. ii. 6 to Micah; Matt. ii. 15 to Hosea and Numbers; Matt. 17, 18 to Jeremiah, and verse 23 to Judges.

In the temptation in the wilderness, Matt. iv. 2-11, both Jesus and the devil quote from the prophets, and as Jesus so completely out-witted Satan on this occasion, so will he triumph in the end.

In all Matthew quotes from the Old Testament 102 times. We find this question quite interesting as we persue it, and especially so in Revelation where we find 332 quotations from the Old, and the closing chapters increase in interest.

Gen. iii. 17, "Cursed is the ground," etc. Rev. xxii. 3, "There shall be no more curse." Gen. ii. 9, 10, "The tree of life in the midst of the garden," and Gen. iii. 24, "to keep the way of the tree of life;" Rev. ii. 7, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God;" Rev. xxii. 2, "In the midst of the street of it, (the city) and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life," etc. Verse 14, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the City."

Dan. vii. 18, "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom even forever and ever." Rev. xxii. 5 "And they shall reign forever and ever." Isa. lx. 10 "Behold the Lord will come with strong hand, and his arms shall rule for him; behold his reward is with him, and his work before him." Rev. xxii. 12 "And behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according as his work shall be."

Every writer of the New Testament, without exception, refers more or less to the Old. With such an array of evidence we are forced to the conclusion that the Old and New Testaments are indissolubly connected.

Brother E. K. Barnhill furnishes us with a short article this week. His friends will be glad to see his name once more. It is quite a task for him to write, as he is so crippled with the rheumatism that he cannot dress himself, and much of the time can scarcely feed himself.

The article on the first page of this paper by Emma Bradshaw, was written to be read at a meeting at Cleveland, O., and by request was sent here for publication. Sister Bradshaw is the youngest Sister of the Cleveland church, and this is her first attempt at such work. We sincerely hope it will not be her last, as we are always glad to get such from any of the brethren and sisters to publish. They make a good variety of reading, and encourage the older writers very much. Write again, Sister, and urge others to do so.

A letter from Brother Wm. Platts tells of a meeting of seven weeks held by Brother F. L. Austin some four miles from Foothill, Ont. at which 14 were immersed, a Church organized, and a good Sunday School started. Bro. Platts says "I never saw young and old people so much in earnest, or give such perfect attention. The people that came and heard Bro. Austin said they never heard a man preach like him." They are much encouraged and feel that great good was accomplished.

Vesuvius is active, belching out a great molten stream which threatens to engulf Pompeii again. A pall is cast over southern Italy, and five hundred thousand people are homeless. A stream of lava 600 wide and 21 feet deep has swept over towns, and is now rapidly approaching the ancient ruins of Pompeii. The old ruins that were buried 1800 years ago and which have been uncovered at such great expense of labor, time and money, will likely be filled up again, and if this occurs they can never be re-excavated. No trace remains of a commune on one side where ten thousand people lived two days before. Many new craters are opening, red hot stones are thrown into the air and fall thousands of feet away making it impossible to run the railroad trains. Warships are taking people away from the coast ports. The entire country is shaken by earthquake, and Naples may be destroyed.

How Readest Thou?

I thank Bro. Neill for the selection he made which appears in The Restitution of Feb. 28th. It set me to thinking. How true are the words, viz: "If any man will do his (God's) will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." John viii. 17. Again, Ye shall know the truth and it shall make you free. Free from sin and ignorance. What a babel of ideas we find among our college boys, and I might further say among our college men. I am pleased that such able writers as Bros. Wince and Wilson are caring for the Professors in the different schools throughout the land.

The question that presents itself to me is, Who are to blame for such conceptions of God? If my children are found to be faulty in their school work the parents would very readily blame me. It would be right that they should. Taking this view which I think to be a reasonable one we have little trouble in placing the cause of these uncalled for ideas of God. I wish to quote from the Discipline of the M. E. church, Articles of Religion 3 and 4. There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body or parts, of infinite power, wisdom, and goodness; the maker and preserver of all things, visible and invisible. And in unity of this Godhead there are three persons, of one substance, power, and eternity—the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. (II. Of the Word, or Son of God, who was made very man.) (4) The Son, who is the Word of the Father, the very and eternal God, of one substance with the Father, took man's nature in the womb of the blessed Virgin; so that two whole and perfect natures, that is to say, the Godhead and manhood were joined together in one person, never to be divided; whereof is one Christ, very God, and very man, who truly suffered, was crucified, dead and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not only for original guilt, but also for the actual sins of men.

What thinkest thou of the above? Do you wonder that our people become confused in their conceptions of what the Bible teaches in regard to God's plan of salvation of the human family? In my opinion a worse jargon of ideas cannot be found in the English language. Those who are members of that church are required to say that they believe it. I was present in a church at one time when the minister took into full membership a little girl 12 years old. She was asked, "Do you believe the doctrine of the Holy Trinity?" The answer is, "I do." The little Miss very meekly said, "I do." This man spoke a lie in God's name and caused that innocent child to say yes to it. May the Lord soon come and deliver us from all such untruths. The questions put to the students of Columbia College were these: Do you conceive of God as an impersonal being or a personal being? What difference do you make between a personal and an impersonal being? Under what image or images do you think of God? What difference would the non-existence of God make in your daily life? More than half of the students who gave answers said that God is impersonal. A number said it would not make the least bit of difference in their daily actions if they did not know of the existence of a Deity. Others admitted it would make a difference, but were not all agreed as to what sort of a difference it would be. In every answer given by forty-two young men we discover a marked degree of ignorance manifested on the above subject. He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them who diligently seek him. Heb. xi. 6. With this Scripture before us how can we believe that God is impersonal? To believe that he is impersonal is to believe that he does not exist. Further that what we call God is simply a force. Paul says that Christ is the splendor of his (God's) glory, and the image of himself.—Murdock.

We are taught to believe in the personality of angels. If we believe the record that God has given us we must believe that the angels that visited Abraham were personal beings. They accepted Abraham's hospitality. They ate what was prepared for them. Impersonal beings could not do this.

In Gen. i. 27, So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. The fact that God created all things is a strong proof of his personality. In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Professor Gardner translates this clause, In sovereignty God created the heavens and the earth, and says in his comments on this that, "The first thought of revelation is the sovereignty" of "the God" who makes the revelation; and very naturally the next revelation of himself is in his creative purpose and plan as an Author or Creator. There is design in the act of creation and there cannot be a design without a designer. Neither can there be a creation without a creator. There is not a book in the Bible that does not teach that God has an existence and has a body and parts. His voice has been heard on more than one occasion. Think if you can of an impersonal being having a voice. I think we have strong proof of his personality in the resurrection of Jesus. The great question with Jesus was to prove that he was the same person that was put to death and had arisen again. He said, Handle me and see. He convinced doubting Thomas by showing him the nail prints in his hands and spear wound in his side. He ate and talked and walked with his disciples to prove to them that he was a personal being. When his apostles said that he was a spirit (a phantom) he said a spirit (phantom) hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. Jesus did and said every thing possible to impress his followers that he was the same person that was crucified and buried, and that God raised him from the dead as he claimed he would. When Jesus ascended to his Father two angels stood by stating that this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall in like manner come again. Was not his ascension personal? And will not his coming again be the same, a personal coming? When Stephen was stoned we have this proof. He being full of the Holy Spirit looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God. Acts vii. 55. Do not these texts all prove that Christ after his resurrection was personal and went to the Father in that form? Now is it not logical to reason that if our Savior was beheld, standing at the Father's right hand, that both must have been personal? No other reasonable conclusion can be drawn from this text. These confused ideas of the personality or the impersonality of God comes from the Articles of Religion as given at the beginning of this article. In the light of God's Word they are shown to be untrue.

There is to me a no more hateful doctrine than that of the Trinity. It destroys the very doctrine of the unity of God and of Christ. The Bible plainly teaches that God is the Father and that Jesus is the Son. Jesus is the only begotten Son and we are his adopted sons and daughters.

I do not wish to close this article without paying my respects to the answers to the last question, viz: "What difference would the non-existence of God make in your daily life?" The answers given to this question are clear and to the point. A Jewish student answered. His non-existence would make no difference to me as I believe in the Golden Rule, and it is not a fear of the hereafter that keeps me from doing evil. Another one said, "God is decidedly impersonal. I think of God under no image. I dislike the term, as it has to me an orthodox and fixed meaning, born of a popular conception which has been fostered by creed worship. I have built for myself a system of morals which I have gotten from experience in my environments. This system is sufficient to keep me a respectable member of society. My conception of the unknown something which seems to be the controlling force of nature is impersonal. I seriously object to calling that something God, because that name is connected with religious worship. If I could conceive of a personal God I should become devoutly religious."

In closing this article let me say that the doctrine of an impersonal God is responsible for the confused ideas as expressed by these students. They have no need of God. "The controlling force in nature" is their God. It does away with the need of a plan of salvation. Truly such are without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world. The golden rule and a system of morals built for self, gotten from experience in environments is needed. This will make them respectable members of society. They have no thoughts of the future and care nothing for it. Is it not true that the religious teaching of today builds up and fosters these untruths? If all would teach the gospel of the kingdom of God which embraces the royalty of Jesus, such false conceptions of God would not exist. The religious doctrines of the popular churches tend to produce these ideas. Men and women are taught to be obedient to church rules and a certain moral code. If they are loyal to their church, it goes well with them. Church discipline takes the place of the great commission, viz: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is batized shall be saved but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 15, 16. They teach for the gospel an obedience to church rules. We are admonished, "To give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." Heb. ii. 1. Should we not be careful in what we hear and believe? Your brother of "like precious faith."

At the Breaking of Bread.

Great are thy tender mercies, O Lord, quicken me according to thy judgment. For the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him and righteousness unto children's children. The Lord is good and ready to forgive and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon him, to all such as keep his covenant and to those that remember his commandments to do them. Let us hope in the Lord, for with the Lord there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption. All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies; unto the Lord belongeth mercy, he will render to every man according to his work. Let us therefore come boldly to the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need. Let us keep ourselves in the love of God looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. The Lord is good to all and his tender mercies are over all his works. It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed because his compassions fail not. They are new every morning. Blessed be God even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies.

Annie Burton.

"For the Lord God is a sun and shield, the Lord will give grace and glory. No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." Pss. lxxxiv. 11.

God is a sun and shield, both light and protection. The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear. The Lord is the strength of my life. The Word of the Lord is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path. God is light, in him is no darkness. Come let us walk in the light of the Lord, and he shall be unto us an everlasting light. If we walk in the light as he is in the light we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. The light of the righteous rejoiceth but the lamp of the wicked shall be put out. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord. He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust. His truth shall be thy shield and buckler. Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night nor for the arrow that flieth by day because thou hast made the Lord thy refuge. Happy art thou O Israel: who is like unto thee. O people saved by the Lord the shield of thy help and who is the sword of thy excellency. Our soul waiteth for the Lord, he is our help and our shield. Every Word of God is pure. He is a shield unto them that put their trust in him for the shields of the earth belong unto God. In king David's time the soldiers used the shield to protect them from the darts and arrows of the enemy. They were of two kinds, one of larger and another of smaller dimensions. The larger covered the whole person and the soldier who wielded it had some one to carry it for him when not engaged in fight. The smaller was a sort of buckler and such as might be used in a hand to hand conflict with the sword, but we have a better protection; for the Lord is our sun and shield. I will love thee O Lord my strength. The Lord is my rock and my fortress, my God, my strength in whom I will trust, my buckler and the horn of my salvation. Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight O Lord, my strength and my redeemer. Let us rejoice and praise God for his abundant mercy.

PASSING AND ETERNAL GLORIES.

I will give a brief sketch of either passing or eternal glories, but though brief will be sufficient to point the way.

At present passing glories of achievement are shared by many. There are great but passing glories of invention and construction, such as electrical inventions, the telegraph, the telephone, the trolley car. Among passing glories of construction, we have the twelve to twenty-four stories buildings, marvels of construction outside and inside, wonderful bridges, astonishing sea-walls, powerful and swift engines, magnificent and ponderous war ships. We have also the passing glories of wealth, yes, glories of wealth beyond the dreams of past ages, the passing glories of the merchantile, educational, political, military, naval and philanthropical, last but not least we have religious passing glories.

In the writings of men we read of "the immortal Shakespeare, Milton, Burns, and others." But in the Book of God,—that the glory of man does not profit and farther that "Man at his best estate is altogether vanity." Indeed the proof given in the Bible of the passing glory of man, are too numerous to mention here, but one or two will not be out of place. The glories of the kingdom of Solomon passed. The glory of Sennacherib the king of Assyria, the glory of Belshazzar king of Babylon, and the glory of Herod. The sum total of passing glories we find in 1 Cor. vii. 31: "The fashion of the world passeth away." When the Lord of glory comes, and all his saints with him, 1 Thess. iii. 13, Mene Tekel, Dan. v. 26, 27, will be the judgment, and Ichabod, I Sam. iv. 21, will be pronounced on all the glories of men.

And what of Eternal Glories? are there no men or women at present enjoying passing glories, who will also share in eternal glories? I know of none. What of the men and women who now believe, and are living, and teaching, publicly or privately "the glad news of the kingdom of God? the men and women who know the love of God, expressed in the "gospel of the Christ," the power of God to salvation, what of them? Have they any part or lot in the present passing glories? None. According to the word of the Lord Jesus Christ himself, they cannot have any portion in the passing glories. "I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." John xv. 19, 20. Again "I have given them thy word and the world hateth them." John xvii. 14. These statements of the "One greater than Solomon" have been, and are being fulfilled to the letter. There are at present men and women, in this and other lands, who like Moses, value not the passing glories, but have chosen rather to suffer for Christ's sake, entreating others to repent, to believe, to be baptized, and to wait for God's Son from heaven, Mark xvi. 16; 1 Thess. i. 10, and thus obtain God's promise of eternal life, through Jesus Christ.

Eternal glories begin at the resurrection. "It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory." 1 Cor. xv. 43. "I will raise him up at the last day." Jon vi. 40. "The dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. iv. 16. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." Rev. xx. 6.

Here are four promises of the Lord Jesus Christ to those who are "by patient continuance in well doing," Rom. ii. 7, seek for eternal glories. Those who obtain to eternal glories will be the Bride the Lamb's wife, that great city, the holy Jerusalem, and have the glory of God. Rev. xxi. 9-11. The city will have no need of the light of the sun, nor the moon, for the glory of God and the Lamb will light it. Vs. 23; 24.

Beloved brethren, John in Rev. i. gives a glimpse, in a word-picture, of the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, and says we shall be like him. 1 John iii. 2. Brethren, losing all present passing glories is a small thing compared to the grandeur of eternal glories which God has prepared for those who love him. My heart's desire and earnest prayer is, that we may strive to live so as to hear the shout, the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, when the Lord himself shall come.

P. Neill.

The Great Commission.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit." "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." This commission is both a mission and a culture. Sometimes we hear complaint made against those who feel the personal application of this Scripture. They say, "I think when Jesus said, 'Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations,' he was speaking to apostles alone, this was their especial commission given to them in a peculiar way, as the baptism of the Holy Spirit was given to them for especial reasons."

Read the Lord's commission again and think what such interpretation, as above indicated, would lead us to if the true sense of Jesus' words, "Go ye" was limited to the apostles alone, then by every law of reason and of language we must limit the "baptizing" them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit" to the apostles also; in like manner his command to teach them all things will be limited. "Lo, I am with you," would be limited also.

Granting such interpretation, what an empty, hollow, meaningless thing we have made of God's divine plan for us; what a mockery we thus make of his church and its work in the world; gone is our authority to make disciples, to baptize believers, to teach the essentials of the gospel, and to live in the strength of his promise to be with us. The whole matter is just an illustration of what shipwreck we make of the divine program. If we are to so slip from under responsibility before God then Paul was wrong, and Peter; also Luke and Timothy. How mightily the missionary enterprise is making for strength in the churches both at home and abroad. The church that gets for itself the world wide vision is the growing, thriving church. The church which says, "It is only for the apostles" is the dead or dying church today. And what may be said of the church is also true of the individual church member. He who takes Christ at his word and goes forth to do part either in actually going himself to the mission field or aiding in his full share to send a substitute is the one who wears a gladness in his face that impels the observation from the world, as of old time, "Lo, he has been with Jesus." He who refuses God's council and withholds himself or his substance in the world, crabbed soul, "neither hot nor cold. It was one of these disciples who walked with Jesus on the way to Emmaus who said, "Did not our hearts burn within us while he walked and talked with us." May we not heed his council, let him walk and talk with us, so doing our hearts will burn with zeal to the Lord's will. There is a vast difference between the church member who longs to have fellowship with Jesus in his death for all nations that they might be saved, and who cannot give but a portion, and the one who could give but will not, vainly trying to force himself into the belief that Jesus did not mean what he said, "Go make disciples of all nations." Let us arouse ourselves from sleep and go forth in the strength of the Master to preach and teach the glad message of a risen Savior who says, "If ye love me ye will do whatsoever I command you."

Diamonds on Credit.

This morning I picked up a magazine the postman had just left me, and opening its pages at random, my eye fell upon a line in big, black letters announcing to the foolish ones of the world that they could buy diamonds "on credit," or on "small weekly payments." What a privilege! Do you want to take advantage of it? If you do, you are not as long-headed as I thought you were. "Diamonds on credit!" Think of it! I have an idea that a young fellow I know working on a salary of twelve dollars a week got his diamond scarf-pin in that way, and it may be that all of his other finery was purchased on that plan.

"Diamonds on credit!" Well, well! How "set up" I would feel with a big "solitaire," or a "cluster" ring, or a "sunburst" pin on which I had paid a dollar! And how much people would think of me because of my jewelery! Oh, boys, boys, don't let any one tempt you into forming the habit of debt in order that you may wear "fine feathers." Don't run into debt for anything it is possible to do without. Wear your plain or even shabby clothes with the proud consciousness of the fact that they are yours, and that you own yourself. The man in debt does not own even himself. He belongs to his creditors. His earnings really belong to them. He finds himself crossing the street to escape meeting them when he sees them coming. He has that most humiliating of all feelings, the feeling of the sneak.

Now, boys, just write the words "Diamonds on credit" on a card and keep it handy, where you can see it every day, and when you are tempted to borrow a nickel of your schoolmates, or to incur debt for anything, just say to yourself, "It would be as foolish as it would be to buy diamonds on credit, and I haven't become that silly yet."

"Diamonds on credit!" No, thank you, sir! Not while I have any wits left.—Young People.

Cloudy days are many; bright days are few. We must catch each ray of sunlight as it comes. The clouds gather, and as they roll, they hide the distant shores from our sight. The clouds that hide our future never lift. Blessed shadow! Who would wish to see one step along the way? An unseen hand will guide us safely to the other side, if we take firm hold, and cast our care on him. It is better to trust than to see.

When Christians adorn their profession by a godly life, abound in the fruits of holy living, impart their joy, manifest the power of grace to subdue sin and sanctify character—was there ever eloquence like that? We do not in these days want so much better preaching as better practising.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "The Restitution," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Poetry.

Review of the Day.

An ancient said "The reflections of the night are deepest." David, in Psalm xix, ascribes speech to the day, and wisdom to the silent night. It is an excellent advice of Pythagoras that "we should not allow ourselves to go to sleep, till we have seriously reviewed the actions of the day, and asked ourselves: "What have I done unless? What good have I done, or failed to do? that so we may rejoice over ourselves for what has been wrong, and take the contrary of what has been ought."

Let not the stealing god of sleep our eyes,
Nor creep in slumber on the weary eyes,
Ere every action of the former day
Strictly thou dost and righteously survey.
With reference to thy own tribunal stand,
And answer justly to thy demand—
Where have I been? In what have I transgressed?
What good or ill has this day's life expressed?
Where have I failed in what I ought to do?
In what to God, to man, or to myself I owe?
If evil were thy deeds, repentant mourn.
And let thy soul with strong remorse be torn.
If good, the good with pious mind repay.
And to thy secret cell with pleasure stay.
Besides, my heart, for all went well to-day!

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 28.

(This 28th chapter the 51st chapter C. V. and R. V.)

1. Thus saith the Lord, Lo, I am arousing a scorching wind that destroyeth against Babuloon and the Chaldaioi who inhabit it;

2. And I am sending haughty men into Babuloon, and they will treat it with contempt and ravage the land thereof; Woe unto Babuloon round about in the day of her calamity.

3. Let the one who stretcheth his bow stretch it and let him put on that for which his weapons are, and be ye not sparing of her young men and make ye all her host to disappear.

4. And wounded ones will fall in a land of Chaldaioi and those who have been pierced through outside of her.

5. Because she hath not widowed Israel and Jouda from their God, from an All-Controlling Lord, because their land was filled with iniquities from the saints of Israel.

6. Flee ye out of the midst of Babuloon and save your soul each one of you, and be not cast away in her iniquity; for it a due-time for requital from the Lord; a payment is he paying her.

7. A golden cup of Babuloon is in the Lord's hand, one that intoxicateth all the earth; from her wine have nations drunk; because of this have they been shaken;

8. And suddenly hath Babuloon fallen and been broken; threne for her; take retinee (balm) for her, if somehow she may be healed.

9. We have healed Babuloon and she hath not been healed; we have forsaken her and we have gone away each into his own land; because her verdict-rendered hath drawn nigh to heaven; she hath lifted it up even to the stars.

10. The Lord hath brought out his verdict; come and let us tell in Sioon the doings of the Lord our God.

11. Make ready the bows; fill the quivers: the Lord hath stirred up the Spirit of a king of Meedes because his wrath is against Babuloon to utterly destroy her, because the Lord's requital is it, his requital for his laity is it.

12. Upon the walls of Babuloon lift an ensign; stand quivers upon them; awake guards; make ready weapons, because the Lord hath put his hand to the work and he will do what he hath talked in respect to those who inhabit Babuloon,

13. Who pitch their tents down upon many waters and upon a plentitude of her treasures. Truly the end is coming to thy feelings of compassion.

14. Because the Lord hath sworn by his arm I shall fill thee with men as though with locusts, and those who go down will murmur against thee;

15. The Lord who createth an earth with his strength, maketh ready an inhabited earth with his wisdom, who stretched out the canopy with his understanding,

16. Who put into speech an echo of water in the canopy, and led up clouds from a farthest of the earth, who caused lightnings for rain, and led out light from his treasures, is he.

17. Every man hath failed of comprehending, every golden-pourer hath been put to shame by his moulded-things because they have moulded lies; there is no spiritual-breath in them;

18. Inutile works they have been mocked at; in a time of their visitation they will perish.

19. Such-like is not Jakoob's distributed portion, because the one who moulded all-things is his inheritance, Lord is his name.

20. Thou art scattering abroad instruments of warfare, and I in thee shall I scatter nations and I shall take kings out of thee.

21. And shall scatter in thee horse and his rider?

22. And I shall scatter in the achariots and their riders, and I shall scatter in thee young man and virgin, and I shall scatter in thee, man and wife;

23. And I shall scatter in thee shepherd and his flock, and I shall scatter in thee husband—man in his field, and I shall scatter in thee thy civil and military leaders.

24. And I shall repay to Babuloon, and to all the Chaldaioi who inhabit it all their evil-doings which they did to Sioon before your eyes, saith the Lord.

25. Lo, I am against thee thou mountain that corrupteth all the earth; and I am going to stretch out my hand against thee, and roll thee down upon the rocks, and I am going to give thee to be like a mountain burned with fire;

26. And they shall not take from thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for a foundation-course because thou wilt be in a state of disappearance unto the animate-age, saith the Lord.

27. Lift up an ensign over the land, blow with a trumpet unto nations, sanctify nations against her; enjoin against her kings, lift up from me, even unto the Achmazeoi; stand missile-hurlers against her; lead up a horse-troop against her like a swarm of locusts.

28. Lead up against her nations, the king of the Meedes and of all his land his civil and all his military-leaders.

29. The earth hath been shaken because a reasoning of the Lord hath astounded it in his making the land of Babuloon a desolation and not to be inhabited.

30. Babloon's warrior hath left off warring; they will sit down there in their environment; their host hath been awe-struck; they have become like women; their habitations have been burned, her bars have been broken.

31. A pursurer will pursue to meet a pursurer and one who telleth news, that he may tell the news to the king of Babuloon that his city hath been taken;

32. From a farthest of his ways through have they been taken, and their canal systems have been burned with fire, and his men of war are coming out.

33. Wherefore thus saith the Lord, Houses of Babuloon's king will have been threshed like a threshing-floor in its season; yet a little and her early-harvest will come.

34. He hath devoured me; he hath apportioned me, fine darkness hath overtaken me; Nabouchadonosor king of Babuloon hath swallowed me; like a dragon (draikoon) hath he filled his belly with my daintiness.

35. My weary-toil and wretchedness thrust me away into Babuloon, will indwelling Sioon say, and my blood is upon the Chaldaioi who inhabit it will Hierousaleem say,

36. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Lo, I am going to judge thy opponent, and I am going to requite thy requital, and I am going to desolate her sea and dry up her fountain;

37. And Babuloon will be a desolation and will not have been inhabited;

38. Because straightway like lions have they stirred up blood and like lion's whelps.

39. In their heated-condition I shall give them something to drink and I shall make them drunken, so that they will become stupefied and sleep an age-lasting sleep, and they shall not awaken, saith the Lord.

40. And do thou lead them down to slaughter and like rams with kids.

41. How hath the boast of all the earth been taken and hunted down? How hath Babuloon become a desolation among the nations?

42. The sea hath gone up against Babuloon with an echo of its waves and it hath been covered.

43. Her cities have become like a land without water and a trackless waste; there will not dwell in her even one, nor will a son of man stay for a night in her.

44. And I shall bring out of her mouth the things she hath drunk down; and the nations shall no more be gathered unto her,

45. And in Babuloon will the wounded of all the earth fall.

50. Ye who are saving yourselves go your way out of the land and stand not upon your going; ye afar off may ye have remembered the Lord and let Hierousaleem come up upon your heart.

51. We have been put to shame, because we have heard our reproach; dishonor hath covered our face; aliens have gone into our sacred places, into the house of the Lord.

52. Therefore days are coming, saith the Lord, and I shall requite upon her graven things, and in all her land wounded will lall.

53. Because though Babuloon should ascend even as the heavens, and though she build her walls with strength, from me will those who destroy her come, saith the Lord.

54. A voice of clamor in Babuloon, and a great crushing blow in a land of Chaldaioi;

55. Because the Lord hath utterly destroyed Babuloon, and hath made to cease from it a great sound that echoed like many waters; he hath given to destruction the voice thereof.

56. Because wretchedness hath come upon Babuloon; her fighting men have been taken; their bow hath been awe-struck, because God is repaying them.

57. The Lord is repaying and making drunk her leaders and her wise men and her military-chieftains, saith the king, an all controlling Lord is his name.

58. Thus saith the Lord, Babuloon's wall hath been broad—dug down it will have been, and her high gateways will have been burned with fire, and laities will not toil for naught, and nations in authority (en archee) will leave off.

59. The word which the Lord enjoined on Hieremias the prophet to speak unto Saraias, son of Neereios, son of Maasaios, when he was going his way to Sedekias king of Jouda in Babuloon, in the fourth year of his royalty, and Saraias being a ruler of votive-offerings.

60. And Hieremias wrote all the calamities which were about to come upon Babuloon in a book, all the words which had been written in respect to Babuloon;

61. And Hieremias said unto Saraias; when thou shalt arrive in Babuloon and shalt see it, thou shalt also read all these words.

62. And thou shalt say, O Lord, O Lord, thou hast talked in respect to this place of utterly destroying it, and hast said that there should not be dwelling in it from man even unto domestic-animal, that it will be a desolation unto an animate age.

63. And it shall be, when thou shalt cease reading this book, thou shalt also bind a stone upon it and cast it into the midst of the Euphrates;

64. And thou shalt say, Even so will Babuloon sink and it shall not arise from before the face of the calamities which I am leading upon it.

COMMENT.

This 28th chapter in the Greek is given as the 51st in the C. V. and R. V. or what purports to be this prophecy of Hieremias in respect to Babuloon; but with many changes of thought too numerous to critically call attention to. Read and compare for yourselves.

Notice the 58th verse particularly, where "en archee" occurs and see what the translators got out of this verse.

The 28th chapter in the versions is the 35th in the Greek.

The Forces of Evil.

"Though the cause of evil prosper, yet 'tis truth alone is strong." James Russell Lowell.

Looking at the gigantic forces of evil, that are massed at the present day against righteousness and truth, it would seem to one whose heart is not "stayed upon God," that as Lowell says, Truth must be "forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne." And yet when we remember that, "that scaffold sways the future," we take courage, and yet feel that, "Though the cause of evil prosper yet 'tis truth alone is strong." Jesus was crucified and the cause of evil seemed to have triumphed when he was laid in the tomb, but the accusing scribe and Pharisee with the whole Jewish nation, were mowed down like grass and scattered to the winds, while pagan Rome that put him to death, fell as if by a mighty earthquake, but the cause that Jesus died for, lived on and on, until at the present time it is proclaimed by myriads of books, and by thousands of brave men and women, who would go to the stake in a moment rather than desert the Christ.

Papal Rome thought to destroy truth, and bury it in a grave so deep that it would never be resurrected, she boasted that she had destroyed it, that the books that contained it had been burned, and its witnesses put to death, that "not one had been left to peep" and yet, scarce was the boast out of her mouth ere the standard was snatched up again and a mighty multitude had rallied around it and were bearing it onward. In Holland, in Germany, in England and in Scotland it triumphed. Men were put to death, but others sprang into the ranks, and kept them filled and so the Bible came to us. And Rome thinks she will be able yet to stamp out the Bible, and crush its adherents into the very dust, notwithstanding her loss of temporal power, she is endeavoring to accomplish by the most subtle strategy what she could not accomplish by auto de fes inquisitions, excommunications, banishments, wholesale massacres, burned Bibles and the unsheathed sword. In taking the Bible from the schools the very result she looked for has been brought about. Irreverence for holy things has crept into the hearts of our people and the altars of the homes have been overturned.

Following this state of things as a natural sequence, infidelity and scepticism, veiled and unveiled, in the pulpit and out, and heathenism masked in various forms, have come in like a flood, thus enabling Rome to manipulate our political world as she pleases, and to use for her own ends, the turbulent elements of unbelief, doubt and lawlessness that she has created. A national confederation of all Catholic societies in this country has been brought about, and these societies are all military in character, perfect in drill and equipment. And beside all this, the national convention to meet in Buffalo from July 29th to Aug. 1, will be instructed to pass a resolution, "which will put the entire Catholic population of the United States on record as advocates of the parochial school idea," seeking thus to seize upon the public funds to educate Catholic children "on the lines of their own faith." And the unbelieving masses do not care. They are ready to take the side of Rome, when the time of battle comes, just as Rome has planned.

"While men slept the enemy sowed"—what? "Tares!" And an abundant crop has sprung up for the drowsy-eyed ones to reckon with by and by. Truth may have to climb the scaffold again; she seems to flourish best in times of woful trial. There is not a very pleasing prospect ahead of the pleasure-loving, God-defying multitudes of these United States. A sudden and dreadful awakening is certain to come, for already, fear of Rome dominates the people from President down to the humblest newspaper editor. And only some dreadful catastrophe can awaken the slumbering ones, but Rome in bringing about that catastrophe will over-reach herself. The very elements on which she depends, the men whose faith she has swept away, the laborers whom she has made lawless, will be found but broken reeds in the day when she comes to lean upon them. "Though the cause of evil prosper, yet 'tis truth alone is strong." She may put "truth on the scaffold" again, yet despite of her, that scaffold will sway the future, and God will "give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath," and she will be "thrown down with violence and be found no more at all."

"Truth alone is strong," because it has the Lord always at hand to help and to deliver. "Our fathers trusted in God, they trusted, and he delivered them," and shall he not deliver us? "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with him?" "They may gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous, and may condemn the innocent blood. But the Lord is our defence, and our God is the rock of our refuge." "He shall bring upon them their own iniquity and shall cut them off in their own wickedness, yea the Lord our God shall cut them off."

He is ever with his people. When Wm. Miller set out to proclaim the near advent of Christ, God went before him. When the set time passed, and scoffers said that "the prophecy had failed and the watching bands had disbanded," God heard. He has been with those bands ever since. The advent message is ringing out still, it will ring out until the Master comes.

The Sabbath.

I think one will find a very good answer to the question Should or should we not keep the Sabbath? In Matt. v. 17, etc. "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled. Ver. 21. Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill. But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment."

No less than five times does Christ take exception to the law in this chapter. He adds to it, and in some instances so changes the wording that the whole meaning is changed. The law says "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth." Christ says "If he smite you on one cheek, turn to him the other also." A child can note the difference, and so we see the old law was not done away with, but was fulfilled.

Is not Col. ii. 14, etc, also an answer in part to this question. "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances, that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross. And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come."

In the same connection read Acts xv. 10, "Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the necks of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear? But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.

HOWARD GIDDINGS.

Obituary.

At her home in Lakeside, Wash. on April 2, 1906, Marion Howell-Cook, aged 23 years, 8 mo. and 28 days.

Marion Howell was born in Lynn Co. Oregon, July 5, 1882, afterward moved with her parents to Waterville, Wash. where in 1898 she became obedient to the gospel.

Sister Howell was married to Frank Cook on Nov. 30, 1903. In the autumn of 1904 she had a severe attack of lagrippe, which gradually developed into that dread disease consumption, which finally resulted in death.

Sister Marion was of a wonderfully cheerful and happy disposition, and brought sunshine and joy wherever she went. She died strong in the faith of the soon coming of the Savior. She leaves a father, brother John Howell, a mother, sister Lillian Howell, a husband and two brothers, to mourn her loss, and oh, how she will be missed, but they sorrow not as others who have no hope.

She was brought from Lakeside to Waterville, a distance of 26 miles and buried in the Fraternity Cemetery. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at the graveside, to an attentive audience, then we left her, sweetly resting till the Lord shall call.

Dear Restitution:

I will write a few lines to the dear paper. I am always glad to hear from those of like precious faith through those encouraging letters. I am still striving to win the prize of the high calling of God in Jesus Christ. On account of poor health I have not been able to attend meeting much this winter. I do love to read the many good letters from the dear ones scattered abroad. "A World of Opportunities," written by Brother D. C. Robison, is just fine.

Yours, in the Blessed Hope.

LIZZIE B. OLIVER.

Our Helping Fund

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

WHEN YOUR TIME IS OUT PLEASE RENEW.

Editor Restitution:

I will write a few lines to let you know that I have not forgotten that the dear, old RESTITUTION is published in Plymouth, Ind., and as my time has expired I think it high time that I was giving an account of myself. I cannot think of doing without the paper. I enjoy its weekly visits so much, in fact, I would feel lost without it. I love the name "Restitution" because there will be "a restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts. iii. 21. By reading the paper I have been able to see and understand many blessed truths. I thank God that he has removed the veil from my heart and caused me to see the truth, for the truth alone can make us free. Also, so many able writers. I used to read the Bible because I felt it my duty, being a church member, but since I have come to understand God's plan of salvation, there is nothing that gives me so much pleasure as to read my Bible and to search out God's mind towards us. Jesus said, Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me. It seems to me that there are very few who search, for if they would search carefully and prayerfully they would be able to see better. How can any one see the truth, when if they read the Bible at all, they read with their eyes blind with prejudice. Now I think we must get everything of a sinful nature out of our hearts, better than we do; besides, we must overcome everything that is worldly. Jesus says, To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne. Rev. iii. 21.

Yours, in the Blessed Hope.

Announcement.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 16th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

"The Baptism with the Holy Spirit" a 19-page booklet with cover, printed in large type on fine paper. This pamphlet is a reproduction of a series of articles which appeared several years ago. Price 5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen. Send orders to the author, A. H. Zilmer, at Plymouth, Indiana.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

We need what is due us on subscriptions and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor,

The Birth of Christ.

The beautiful story of our Savior's birth
Is known throughout all the earth.
This wonderful story never grows old,
But grows more beautiful each time it is told.

The star that shone so pure and bright,
And guided the travelers that sacred night,
To Bethlehem where Jesus lay,
For his birthplace was a manger and his outcast bed was hay.

How the wicked men of Herod
Searched with all their might and main,
To find the blessed Savior,
And number him among the slain.

How they killed the little babies,
With a sword cut off their head,
But they missed the precious Savior,
For he had to Egypt fled.

For an angel of God had warned them
In a dream to flee away,
And not return again to Israel
Until dead king Herod lay.

Notes by the Way.

I have just closed a series of successful meetings at Buffalo, Texas; but before relating that, I wish to call attention to an incident which occurred on the trip to Buffalo. I had to remain over night at Fort Worth, in order to make railroad connection. While there, a gentleman, perceiving that I was a stranger, approached me, and asked me where I was from? I replied, from Chicago. He then asked, Have you come down here to reconstruct us rebels? I answered, Yes, sir, (rebels against God). I apprehend that the South is no more guilty of that kind of rebellion, than either the North, East, or the West. All of them are sadly in need of reconstruction. That rebellion will never cease, until they become citizens of the Commonwealth of Israel, and swear eternal loyalty to the King of the aforesaid Commonwealth.

I then resumed my journey to Buffalo, Texas. This is the home of Sister Watt, who wrote me that she had not heard a gospel sermon, for thirty years. On arriving there I was met by Mr. Watt, who conveyed me to the family home, where I was heartily welcomed by the entire family. They made my stay with them so comfortable and pleasant that I hated to leave them. They had announced meetings to commence on the following night. There was satisfactory attendance all through. They told me that no other ministers ever drew as large an audience. But better than this, was the attention and interest given to the Word preached.

In the Watt family are five children, four daughters, and one son. Three of these daughters are young ladies, ranging in ages from nineteen to twenty-three. The youngest (Buelah) is eleven years old, and Frank about fifteen. Mr. Watt is a subscriber to THE RESTITUTION; and consequently, through that source, Mr. Watt, and the three oldest daughters had become partially instructed in the Word of Truth. They all took a lively interest from the start, in the preaching of the saving message of life. They all privately asked questions for instruction; and hence, in this way, I was enabled to perfect that which was lacking in their faith. The result was, that each one came to me privately, and requested me to baptize them for the remission of sins. They were so sincere and honest. It filled my heart with joy, as it did the angels of God in heaven, over these four repentant believers of the glorious gospel of the kingdom.

The entire family and many neighbors, took a trip into the woods for a mile or two, where "much water," was found, and I buried these four repentant believers with Christ in baptism. I want to say that these three sisters are intelligent and cultured young ladies, and reflect much credit upon their father and mother, as to their training while in childhood.

Frank and Buelah are also nice children. I noted particularly how prompt they were to obey both their father and mother.

Buelah says, "I do want to be good, I want to be a Christian." She is going to study the Bible, and I feel sure that if in the providence of God I am ever permitted to visit Buffalo again, that I shall baptize dear young Buelah into Christ, and may be Frank also.

Sister Watt is so happy over the outcome of my visit to Buffalo. Before this, she was all alone in the faith, but now she has her husband and three daughters with her.

I wanted to get there, and so I sent home to get a little more money to carry me that far. I am glad I did, seeing how glorious the outcome has been. We must not expect the crown unless we are willing to be living sacrifices for the kingdom of God's sake.

These four obedient ones are not the only results from the meetings held at Buffalo. The good seed has found lodgment in others also, which will require time to develop. They came to me, and expressed warm words of thanks for benefits received.

I feel that if the above four shall be counted as God's jewels in the day when he makes up his jewels, that I am well paid for my labor and the expense of my present trip. But I know that is not all, as many others have received the Word of the kingdom into their hearts.

Dear ones in Christ, don't it pay to carry the glad tidings of the kingdom into the "wilderness and solitary place," where no other voice is ever heard proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom as a message of life.

It is all very well to spend time in preaching to organized churches, but there is much need of one "crying in the wilderness," where the people are hungry for the Word of God. I know many are fearful in going there, because it means sacrifice of personal comfort, and besides this there is no money in it. Well, as far ath at is concerned, it is wrong for other believers to let an evangelist do all the sacrificing.

It is now spring time in the South. The grass is green, the trees are clothed in the fresh beautiful green of spring time, flowers are blooming, the roses and honey suckles are beautiful; peach, plum and apricot trees are in bloom. In the woods we have the wild flowers, and wild shrubbery in bloom.

At this time (April 2) I am holding meetings at Alvin, Texas, which I will report later on. At this place they are shipping strawberries by the car load, besides fresh vegetables. I will say more about this in my next "Notes by the Way."

While at Buffalo, it was a delight to me to take a ramble through the woods and gather bunches of beautiful flowers.

At Alvin I saw the orange tree breaking out in bloom.

When I see these things in the early spring time, it always reminds me of the new age, and the new life, at which time will end the dread reign of the winter of death; when the blessed and holy ones will then emerge from under its cold icy grip, and will spring forth in the freshness and beauty of immortal youth. It reminds me of the words of Solomon: "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away, for lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in the land; the fig tree is putting forth its green figs, (the fig tree is putting forth its green figs at this time in Texas) and the vines with the tender grape, give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away." This is a beautiful picture of the spring time, as it is now seen in Southern Texas and Louisiana.

The above Scripture is doubtless a description of a more beautiful spring time, than now seen in nature. May God hasten the spring time of the new life. At that time nature's spring time will even be more beautiful than it is today, because the curse will then be removed.

"The snow-plumed angel of the North
Has dropped his icy spear,
Again the mossy earth looks forth,
Again the streams gush clear.

"Rear up, O mother nature! cry
Bird, breeze and streamlet free;
Our winter voices prophesy
Of summer days to thee.

"Reviving faith and hope, they show
To all its rising powers,
And how beneath the winter's snow
Lie germs of summer flowers!

"Behind the cloud the star-light lurks,
Through showers the sunbeams fall;
For God who loveth all his works,
Has left his hope with all!"

The Christian's hope is centered in the summer time of God's love, when the winter of death will melt before the genial warmth of the sun of Righteousness. It is then that the righteous shall shine forth as the Sun in the kingdom of their Father; at which time, even the sun and the moon shall be ashamed when Israel's glorious King shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.

"For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake, I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof, as a lamp that burneth. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory."

There is a blessed good time coming beloved in the Lord. The question which should concern us most is, have I secured a home in that blessed kingdom? If not, what is lacking? In these last days it should be the main thought and business of our life, to make sure of such a blessed inheritance. None of us can afford to come short of it.

"They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."

Take an inventory as to how many you have personally "turned to righteousness." If you cannot do so personally, you can seek an interest in the work of some one who can, and thus share in the blessing.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if printed will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Send your pledges but no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Encouragement.

The day is long, and the day is hard,
We are tired of the march and of keeping guard;
Tired of the sense of a fight to be won,
Of days to live through and of work to be done;
Tired of ourselves and of being alone.

And all the while, did we only see,
We walk in the Lord's own company;
We fight, but 'tis he who nerves our arm;
He turns the arrows which else might harm.
And soul the wounds his grace makes calm.

Miracles. No. 1.

What must be done with them? Mr. Foster moves to reject them as false and infidels every where second the motion. Put to vote it carries without a dissenting voice among the Higher Critics; and of course, among the infidels, we would not expect dissent. The latter reject the Bible while the former claim to be its friends, standing by its truths in the pulpit and the Professor's chair. It is plain as to which class ought to be charged the greater amount of mischief. Place and relationship give the former vastly the advantage in the matter of undermining faith in the Bible. It is the sowing of this class that has produced the harvest of doubt and infidelity everywhere prevalent today, rather than that of open and avowed infidels. The Higher Critics make a great flourish of "the test of reason," "Irrefutable logic" and "scientific investigation." They indulge in the use of these phrases but give us very little of what these mean in the handling of the Scriptures. They assume—thus decide against belief in miracles, and then on the strength of their assertions give us the choice of being either classed with fools or knaves. Belief in miracles entitles one to one or the other of these epithets. Jesus and his apostles and the prophets before them cannot be freed from the charge of being fools, for they all believed that miracles actually occurred. From the standpoint of these critics some preachers of today do not get off with the lighter charge of being fools, but must face that of being knaves, for these critics seem to know or at least conclude that there are men occupying the pulpit who do not believe the miracles, but to please their churches and secure fat salaries continue to preach them, so deserve to be called knaves. These lack the courage of their convictions, so make no open avowal of their real sentiments but go on preaching what they do not believe. Jesus believed the miracles recorded in the Old Testament Scriptures. This is shown by the fact that he quoted them. When certain scribes and Pharisees demanded of him a sign he assured them that no sign would be given to that evil and adulterous generation except the sign of the prophet Jonas: "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." He gave them this as a type of his own entombment and resurrection; that believing the one they might look for the other to occur as he had predicted it. If on the strength of this final sign they refused to believe they would be worse than the Ninevites who were heathen. Other miracles had failed to convince them of the truthfulness of his Messianic claims. Only one more sign could they have. If they still regarded this as false there remained no possibility of convincing them. Here was the final test they had, Jesus' prediction of his own resurrection; and it was both their duty and privilege to watch and wait for developments. Both Jesus and the Pharisees believed Old Testament miracles and the former believed in those wrought through his own agency, and the crowning one yet to occur, his own resurrection; then how can it be true that, as Mr. Foster asserts, touching the miracle of quelling the storm by word "this story grew up as the primitive community caught forth their sense of the worth of Jesus to their lives." This primitive community includes Christ's disciples who heard and believed his words, and witnessed his works, now how is it that Jesus believed in miracles and the scribes and Pharisees in those of the Old Testament history, and yet, these disciples, constituting the primitive church and just as much disposed as Jesus himself and these Pharisees to believe in miracles, did not believe in them according to our Chicago Professor, but had to invent the story or cause it to grow up, for their purpose. If his language means any thing it means that the early disciples did not believe in real miracles for if they had so believed there would have been no necessity of palming off fictitious ones. Now it is much easier to believe that these earlier disciples held in common with Jesus and his countrymen faith in the supernatural, than to believe Mr. Foster's theory that the "story grew up," for this involves the conclusion that all the miracles found recorded on the pages of the Bible, grew up as stories, like the one of stilling the tempest on the sea of Galilee, which the learned gentleman takes as an example. Jesus believed in miracles, and the primitive community did not! How does this sound?

The four evangelists who recorded the words and deeds of their Master must be included in this "primitive community." According to Mr. Foster's language they had no faith in real miracles! Strange! is it not? And yet these same critics say that back there it was easy to believe in miracles, that all were given to superstition. How these men get rid of superstition and then go to inventing stories for superstitious people like many of us folks today, who still persist in thinking miracles possible. The legs of the fame are unequal. What limping theories are set on foot! Mr. Gibbon would have found his task much easier, if he had allowed the reality of miracles in his accounting for the rise and rapid spread of Christianity in the Roman Empire in the early centuries of our era. Instead of this he met the supernatural claims of the new religion with a sneer, and then tried to account for its origin and progress on the ground of the belief of its propagators in unreal events. The fact of their belief in the supernatural he could not deny, nor did he wish to do so. It was not necessary for him to call in question the honesty of these founders and propagators of Christianity. Their belief in miracles was excused on the ground of their ignorance and the prevailing superstition of the times. They lived in the time when it was easy to believe in the supernatural; when the world was full of prodigies—in an unscientific and uncritical age. I remark that these are not sufficient reasons for rejecting the miracles of the Bible. "Strauss and Renan assume that a miracle is simply impossible, and that all reference to miracles is to be laid out of the question." Hume also places the matter on the same ground. But why is a miracle impossible? Let Hume answer for himself and all others who so hold. He says, A miracle is a violation of the laws of nature; and as a firm and unalterable experience has established these laws, the proof against a miracle, from the very nature of the fact, is as entire as any argument from experience can possibly be imagined." According to this supposed axiom Jehovah could not perform a miracle if he wished to for any purpose, he is tied up by laws of his own making. What Hume lays down here is a sophism and not a truth. The experience of mankind is not universal. Man knows but little about the laws of nature; he has only explored the surface of things. "There are many events which lie quite beyond the range of any observations hitherto made; there are undoubtedly many things which have not as yet been reduced to any known laws, and it is an open question whether they can be; that is whether the powers of men are adequate to the inquiry." He says, "a miracle is a violation of the laws of nature." Many things occur under our own observation which are contrary to some known laws of nature.

The man who picks up a stone and throws it upward into the air overcomes the law of gravitation for the time being. Here is a conflict between a living force set in operation by the human will, and one of nature's fixed laws. The property of the stone is inertia. Its movement is the result of the man's physical power under the direction of his will. Take another example. The vegetable vitality of the oak operates in a way to overcome the law of chemical affinity in the soil and by re-combining the elements in new proportions builds up a mighty column that resists the winds and storms of centuries. In this case vital force in the acorn suspended, or violated (as Hume would say) the laws of chemical affinity and gravitation—the law of vitality conflicting with two other laws. Mr. Hume's statement amounts to nothing as against miracles. The experience of mankind establishes some things and furnishes an argument against some other things being true, but does not furnish an argument against divine intervention. It will not be denied, except by the atheist (he is a very unreasonable creature) that there was a time when Jehovah brought into being the present beautiful order of things including man; the antecedents to which were the will, the wisdom and the power of the great Creator, the same as in the case of a miracle. Jehovah formed or fashioned things; he formed man of the dust of the ground. What a marvelous mechanism is before him. It is not a body of dust thrown together promiscuously. It was not brought together by the law of chemical affinity or natural selection. It is not the mere contour that draws our admiration, though that shows beauty of form. It is the organic structure in all its parts, the complicated machinery ready to perform all the functions of life and mind. The moment the vital principle is imparted by the breath of the Almighty, that inspires our most reverent wonder and calls for the words of David as expressive of our deepest emotions. "I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: wonderful are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well." Psa. cxxxix. 14.

The living, moving, thinking man is the completed miracle. Man today is the standing proof of that miracle that along with many others a little less marvelous, antedates that "firm and unalterable experience" which Hume says established the laws of nature, and thus furnish proof against miracle, argument as entire as any argument from experience can possibly be imagined. The Higher Critics can not deny this stupendous miracle which was wrought at creation's dawn, back of human experience. So miracles are possible after all. If Jehovah could make a man of the dust of the ground and imbue him with life, and endow him with mind, why could he not raise his dead Son to life again, and why could not this Son prior to his death, if so empowered work miracles of a similar kind in proof of claims that needed just such attestation as a ground of faith?

THE PROOF OF A MIRACLE

is the testimony of credible witnesses. This must be deemed sufficient in the case, as it is in that of an ordinary fact of human experience. If testimony proves one fact, or event why not another, though that other should be in the realm of the supernatural. The testimony of witnesses connects us with the history of the past, and makes us acquainted with events occurring in the present, but beyond the range of our own experience. Mr. Foster says that a miracle treated as a fact that actually occurred simply becomes an item of knowledge to be accepted on the basis of adequate evidence carefully tested. As such a fact it would be a mere matter for scientific investigation and no value to religious faith whatever." So he would have us bring miracles to the bar of science for investigation. Now according to his own notion what could science do to help us, for in the next breath he says, "While it would not deny, it could not affirm the actual occurrence of the events. He represents science as more modest than himself. It would not deny; he does deny them saying they are false did not actually occur, does not believe them. That science could not affirm their actual occurrence is why he rejects them; so it seems. He rejects miracles on that ground, but the Christian will not. The Christian accepts them on the only ground or evidence available, the testimony of credible witnesses. This is suited to the nature of the case, adequate to establish the fact or event though it be in the realm of the supernatural. Mr. Foster speaks of scientific investigation; and after the investigation is through with science is silent in the presence of the miracle. It has no pronouncement to make. The only utterance it could put forth would be "not proven," nor "disproven." It neither helps nor hinders faith. The case is dismissed from this bar. How does the learned gentleman know that a miracle is not true? His conclusion is what in logic is called a nonsequitor. So he goes to work, as he tells us, to strip the Bible of the false (?) and leave us the true, on an assumption pure and simple. It would have been wiser in him in his ignorance on the point, to suspend judgment.

JOHN L. WINES.

Random Thoughts. No. 21.

SPIRITUAL.

With some people almost everything is spiritual, nothing means what it says, but must be spiritualized, or understood to mean something not real or material, but spiritual or figurative. In conversation with a man on religious matters, I quoted the Bible as it read, taking it literally, but he remarked that it is all spiritual, not literal. The kingdom of God is in the heart, said he, don't you believe in a spiritual religion? I replied, it depends on what you mean by spiritual. If you mean by spiritual, figurative not real or literal, I don't. I believe in a religion that is real and literal, that takes hold of a person's heart, mind, spirit, affections literally, so much so that it must control the body or flesh. I would not give a snap for all the religion in the world if it is only spiritual. You may say to the hungry and naked, "be clothed and fed," and in your heart, mind or spirit wish they were clothed and fed, but so long as you only do it spiritually, how much good does it do? You say you did it spiritually, and your religion is a spiritual religion, and God looks at the heart? Yes, God does look at the heart, and if you had, from the heart, or heartily, cheerfully given to those in need the best you could, it would have been pleasing to God. But if you did nothing literally but only spiritually, you really did nothing at all. You thought of doing it, but never did, had you done something, though but little, if the best you could, it would have been pleasing to God according to what you have not. But nothing is nothing, and so long as it is only spiritual, it is nothing.

The poor widow who gave her two mites, gave more than the other who gave much. She did give much in proportion, though that was little, but had she only thought about it, or did it only in her mind or spirit, it would have been nothing! It is not the amount we do, but we should do according to our ability, but we must do, not spiritually only but literally, or it is nothing!

Suppose I owe you five dollars and you want your money, but literally I have not got it, so I tell you I will pay you spiritually. Then in my mind, heart, spirit, I get the money and pay you spiritually. I do it and you receive it in the same way, that is spiritually not literally. Did you get it? Did you give me credit for it? or do you think I owe it to you still? I really paid you spiritually, not literally, are you satisfied with such spiritual things? Some people's religion is too spiritual for me because it is only spiritual. Now, I do not object to its being spiritual, it should be that, but I object to its not being literal too! If a man owes another he should pay it, his heart, mind and spirit should be in it, he should do it with all his heart and feel a pleasure in doing it. If he does it, because he knows he would be sued for it and compelled to pay it with costs, I don't think much of his honesty.

Still many people do not believe the kingdom of God is or will be a literal kindgom but only a spiritual kingdom. If that be true it is and will be nothing. But in a certain sense the kingdom is, at present is spiritual because it is as yet in the future, we can only see it spiritually. All future things can only be spiritually seen.

In 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18, Paul says, "Our light afflictions, which is for the moment, worketh for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." Now what have we here? Paul speaks of his afflictions as being light. Then what are ours? Ours must be light indeed. But these light afflictions work out for us more and more exceedingly an eternal weight of glory (let my readers think how much and grand the thought expressed) and thus while we look not at the thing seen, but (we look) at the things not seen! Is it not peculiar that we should look at the things we don't see, and not look at the thing we do see? Why is this? Is it because the things are different? Perhaps so in part, but not altogether. The things we see at present with our natural eyes are temporal or of short duration and will pass away. But we are looking for the kingdom of God and its attending glories, etc. these things will be eternal, but we do not see them with our natural eyes, because they are yet future, but with our spiritual eyes—that is spiritually.

We have heard the gospel of the kingdom and believed it, and obeyed it, and have full assurance of faith that the Lord will come and set up the eternal or everlasting and glorious kingdom. These are the things we at present cannot see with our natural eyes, but by spiritual eyes or eye of faith.

People today by spiritual things generally mean immaterial things, and use the word matter as opposed to spirit. Material things and spiritual things, as though spiritual things were not material things, and material things were not spiritual things. But I say, if spiritual things exist they are material. Spiritual things may be just as material as material things, and some things are both spiritual and material. I say there is a sense in which the kingdom of God may be said to be a spiritual kingdom, that is because it is yet future. Not because it will not be material, but because at present we can only see it spiritually or by faith. It will be just as material as any other kingdom, though it will be eternal or everlasting.

To illustrate, suppose I have a boy and I say to him, Now my boy, you be good and obedient to your parents, and I will give you a farm when you are 21 years old. The farm is away in California. The boy looks at me and promises to be good, and often talks about his farm he is going to have. I describe the farm to him—it is well watered and in every way a good farm. He is very pleased, does not doubt my word, but has full assurance of faith. He often talks about it, and as far as I have described it to him, he sees it in his mind, that is spiritually, and to him it is a spiritual farm, though it is just as material as any other farm, and this will continue to be to him a spiritual farm till the time shall come that faith shall be swallowed up in sight, and hope in fruition. And so with the kingdom of God it will be as material as other kingdoms, though the curse will be removed from the earth, so that instead of thorns and thistles, it will yield her increase to God's people. And God's people will be real, literal people, just as much so as we are today, so far as relates to the subjects, but even the saints who will be the rulers, the spirit or spiritual beings like the angels and our Lord, will be real persons with glorious bodies, spiritual bodies, but not spiritual in the sense of being figurative or material. They will be material just like our Lord who was put to death in the flesh, but made alive in the Spirit, that is he was flesh and blood when crucified, but Spirit when made alive, or raised from the dead, but he was just as material or real after as he was before, and showed his wounds, ate and drank, and will do so in the kingdom of God, when at the table with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets, etc. Luke xxii. 30, and he will again drink of the fruit of the vine, now in his Father's kingdom. But many would say that is spiritual! Spiritual wine or wine in a figurative sense, not literal! (Note the cup spoken of as the fruit of the vine used at the Lord's Supper, is nowhere spoken of as being wine). If so it was nothing! Perhaps I have said enough to show that the difference between spiritual things and fleshly things does not consist in one being spiritual and the other being material, as both may be either, and either both! Most of the works of the flesh are spiritual at first, before they become material. A man may even be guilty of adultery—wholly spiritual, all in his heart, mind or spirit. Matt. v. 28. And the fruit of the spirit while proceeding from the heart, mind or spirit must be carried out in works—good works! To do a thing in spirit (spiritually) only, or figuratively, amounts to nothing, something must be done literally. To further illustrate let me tell you of what I once read. A certain man had occasion to go into his cellar through a trap door in the kitchen floor. His little child saw him go down, and went to look down into the cellar to see him, but it was dark! He can see nothing! Says the child, Papa! Papa looked up and saw the child and said, Jump down, I will catch you. Without a moment's hesitation the child jumped down into his father's arms! Now suppose the child should say, yes, Pa, but I can't see you, I will jump spiritually! And spiritually jumps! but what did Pa catch? If he caught him at all, it was spiritually! And that was nothing. Just the same as the spiritual religionist which consists in spiritual only. The child had full assurance of faith in his father and did as he was told to do, literally, and that is the only way we can obey our Father.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 18, 1906. NUMBER 15.

The Restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

WE wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

We need what is due us on subscriptions and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor,

VESUVIUS has quieted down and the flow of lava and showers of ashes has ceased.

BROTHER A. H. ZILMER has been conducting a series of meeting the past two weeks at Inwood, six miles east of here.

IT was announced that Brother B. W. Woodward would begin a series of meetings at Burr Oak, this County on last Saturday, but he was unable to come on account of ill health.

WHEN Dowie left Mexico, there was much talk of a spectacular entrance into Zion City, but it ended in his stopping in Chicago, where negotiations have been going on between the lawyers, with no peace in sight. It will likely end by throwing the whole institution into the courts.

THE annual Conferences for Illinois and Iowa have been announced, and ample time is given for those within their jurisdiction to make arrangements to attend. The Bible School previous to the Illinois meeting has been full of interest and helpful for a number of years past, and the promise for this year is as good or better than ever, so that none will be disappointed who attend.

The Shepherd's Voice.

Our Lord is not so far away but that his listening sheep may hear his voice. Those who fail to hear his voice when he says, "Thou shalt not," will hear the decree, "Thou shalt." The happy pair in the garden heeded not the voice which said, "Thou shalt not." But science and philosophy with all their din and confusion have failed to silence the voice which says, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." The voice is near which says, "Thou shalt surely die." Are you surprised when thorns and thistles spring up in your fields without your sowing and in the face of your untiring efforts to destroy them. Man's efforts are vain to silence the voice which said, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake, thorns and thistles shall it bring forth." If man had been successful in his constant efforts to change this condition, we of today could not have heard the voice of our blessed Lord in the growth springing from the cursed ground in every neglected field and corner. We could only have read it from an old book; we could not realize that we are still in the presence of the living God. There shall be wars and rumors of wars and men's hearts failing them for fear of things coming on the earth. Do you just read that in a book, or do you hear his voice near you in the present conditions on every hand? "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Is the above just a thrilling story in an old book, or do we hear the shepherd's warning voice present with us in the appalling facts of today. Do you hear his voice in the stern decree, "Go too now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you, your riches are corrupted and your garments are moth-eaten, your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire, ye have heaped treasures together for the last days." If the above seems to be a far away voice, read the papers and magazines of the day and you will see the scorn and derision for the rich. The shepherd's voice is near us in the present day facts, the rich man's miseries are brooding fast. "Wherefore as the Holy Ghost saith, Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness." Heb. iii.

SADIE SKEELS.

A man who feels that his religion is a slavery, has not begun to comprehend the real nature of religion.

Pride and humility appear to be opposite principles. Webster defines the first as Vanity, high-mindedness, said to be the food of fools. He defines the latter as freedom from pride, lowliness of mind.

These definitions appear to be in harmony with the Scriptures. Peter said Be clothed with humility, for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. 1 Pet. v. 5, 6

Again said James, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble. James iv. 6 Pride is represented in the Scriptures as a very bad principle, and those who are deceived by it will be amongst those who will be destroyed by the fires at the judgment.

Said Malichi, The day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, and shall not leave them neither root nor branch. A fearful result indeed. May we try to keep out of the fire.

Paul in addressing the Roman brethren exhorts them not to think of themselves more highly than they ought to think, but to think soberly as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. Peter in addressing the women says, Whose adorning let it not be the outward adorning of plaiting the hair and wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. 1 Peter iii. 1-6.

John said Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world, for all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes; and the pride of life, are not of the Father but of the world; and the world and the lust thereof passeth away, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever.

Such will have everlasting life. O that we may labor earnestly to be amongst this class. May we remember that God is not mocked. Whatsoever we sow, we shall reap. May we then strive to enter at the straight gate.

I remain yours for the truth as it is in Jesus.

At the Breaking of Bread.

"Every good and every perfect gift is from above." James i. 17.

There are temporal gifts and there are spiritual gifts, but every perfect gift is of God. We are daily receiving the temporal gifts, but often do not realize that the rain and snow in their season, the food and raiment are all from above. Even our faith is the gift of God according to Eph. ii. 8. For all these we ought to be thankful, for by him we live, move and have our being.

In ages past God required the giving of sacrifice upon the altar as the gifts of men. All of these sacrifices were as a great wheel, the spokes all having the one center, and that center was Christ. God having provided a Lamb of his own, whom he gave as a sacrifice for us all. This was the best and most perfect gift the world has ever known, for through this gift of his only begotten Son comes the gift of eternal life for us, if we accept the conditions. Thanks be to God for this unspeakable gift. What should be more fitting than that we should gather around his table to commemorate his death. When we know that this supper was instituted by our departed Savior, how much more important it becomes, especially when it is his own voice that commands us to do it. For in partaking of these emblems we do show forth the Lord's death until he comes. May we all be able to sit at his table in the kingdom of God.

"But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine." Titus ii. 1.

Paul exhorts Titus to speak sound doctrine, the true gospel, to hold fast the faithful Word, be able by sound doctrine to convince the gainsayers. Jesus warned the disciples of the doctrine of the Pharisees. He said, In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men. Jesus taught the disciples the words of life, the glorious gospel of the kingdom, sound doctrine, the words which Paul says were committed to his trust, and to the Gentiles, and to all who would hear him. He taught no other words than those concerning the kingdom of God and Jesus Christ, and to all the churches which he established he exhorts and commands that they should hold fast the form of sound words, which they have heard in faith and love, and be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines, for it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace. Whosoever abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God, he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ he hath both the Father and Son. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house. Neither bid him God speed. These words of the Apostle to the churches was for their guidance, and to keep them in the love of the truth, and today this exhortation of Paul's will strengthen us. We, brothers and sisters, need the same sound doctrine, same good works, and live lives that will adorn the doctrine of Christ. May we be kept by the Word of truth until the appearing of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is my prayer.

Dear Ones Scattered Abroad:

It has been a long time since I have penned a line to you all, but I am longing to see some of like precious faith, as I am alone here. No one appears to have any desire to hear of the soon coming of the Lord, in fact, it makes them afraid to hear of it, but I try to tell the good news every chance I get. Truly, gross darkness covers this people and this age. I intend to devote more time to the teaching the good news of the gospel this coming year, as I have sold my farm. Some, I think, may take hold of the precious Word and obey the gospel plan unto eternal life.

Your Brother in the faith.

Notice is given that the brethren at Fonthill, Ontario, expect to have a special gathering—an all-day meeting on Sunday, May 27 next. We invite all lovers of truth to meet with us on this occasion. We expect three or four speakers. Any further information in respect to this meeting can be obtained by corresponding with the undersigned.

Obituary.

After an illness of several months, William H. Elton died at his home in Swan Creek township, Thursday morning of last week. In the development of the township where he has lived since he was twelve years old, Mr. Elton contributed his full share. Beginning in poverty, by industry, economy and a close application to business, he acquired considerable wealth, which he used for the betterment of mankind, and the industrial improvement of his community. He was a kind, genial and benevolent citizen, and in his death, the county loses one of its best types of a true American, poverty one of its successful sons, the community an upright citizen and the Christian faith an exponent and a defender.

W. H. Elton was born in Newtontony, Eng. Mar. 18, 1850 and was the oldest son of Thomas and Jane Elton. When but six years old he came with his parents to the United States, locating in Medina County, Ohio. Six years later he came with his parents to this county, locating on a farm in Swan Creek township. On November 26, 1876 he was united in marriage to Minerva Robbins, and to bless this union one child was born. Feb. 21, 1888 his companion died. He was again united in marriage with Etta L. Kope, Aug. 15, 1889 and to bless this home seven children were born, two of whom have preceded their father into the great beyond.

He united with the church of blessed Hope and lived a consistent Christian life. He leaves a wife, six children, one grand child, two sisters, one brother, one half brother and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

For a number of years he has been afflicted with Bright's disease which caused his death April 5, at the age of 56 years and 18 days.

The funeral services were held at Baker church conducted by A. H. Zilmer, of Plymouth, Ind., and the remains were interred in Baker cemetery.

[The above is a clipping from a local paper, and was handed us by Brother Zilmer. Bro. Elton lived near Delta, Ohio, but the county and state are not mentioned in the notice.—Ed.]

Every post of a servant of God, and every work of a child of God, has its place and its part in the Divine plan. To be faithful at that post, and in that work, should be the purpose of servant or child. Faithfulness there redounds to God's glory, and to the honor of the faithful one.

Selections.

The Second Coming.

It is the purpose of the Lord Jesus Christ to return to this earth again. The knowledge of this purpose has developed in the minds and hearts of thousands of his followers a hope which has made bright many an hour that would otherwise have been weary. We believe that he is coming; we are sure he is coming. Why are we sure? Is the hope a mere sentiment, or does it rest upon the sure Word?

We believe the Lord is coming because the structure of the Old Testament demands it. The promise made to Adam, that the seed of the woman would bruise the serpent's head, pointed to the Christ. The sure mercies of David point to the Christ. The prophecies point to the Christ; and none of these things are complete without the second coming.

We believe the Lord is coming because the structure of the New Testament demands it. There is scarcely a chapter that does not teach it either directly or by implication. Some great lesson, of which the coming Christ forms a part, or else some doctrine having for an essential feature his appearance, is involved. We believe in the second coming of Christ because in the wonderful parables we find it interwoven in the woof and warp of their fabric. Most of the parables deal with the kingdom. Remove the Second Advent from the doctrine of the kingdom, and how much is left? The germ is destroyed and the lessons become meaningless.

We believe in the second coming of Christ because from the Lord's own lips the promise came, "If I go away I will come again." Blessed Lord, thy language is simple and very plain; we believe it, and look for thy glorious appearing!

We believe in the second coming of Jesus Christ because the angels confirmed the promise. When Jesus was caught up into the clouds, and his followers turned away with heavy hearts, a messenger came from the Master, the first he sent, saying, "In like manner as ye have seen him go, so he will come again."

Paul wrote about the second coming of Christ, Peter wrote about it; John also was enraptured with the promise, and the hope; so we believe it, because these men of God left their records that we shall see him return to this earth.

What joy there will be when we look upon his face and see in very truth that One whose love for nearly twenty centuries has been earth's greatest example. May we live so that when he comes we shall not be ashamed.—W. B. in Bible Standard.

The Fruit of Kindness.

I went the other day to the funeral of a good woman. She was the widow of a minister. She was not a brilliant woman, but one of those sweet, loving natures that go singing their way through all the burdens and sorrows of life, cheering up everybody they meet. This is the story that a successful young man of business, with a brilliant prospect before him, told of her on the day of her funeral. Said he:—

Three years ago I was out of work, out of money, and tired nearly to death. I came into a little town, and hungry and worn out, I lay down in a yard in front of the village church. While I lay there resting in the shade, a sweet-faced, motherly-looking woman came out at the porch of a little house across the street to water her flowers.

Hungry as I was, I was hungrier yet to have some one speak kindly to me, and to come into friendly relations with some one. Obeying a sudden impulse, I got up, went across the street and asked for a drink of water. She brought it to me in the most gracious manner possible, and then evidently seeing how tired I looked asked me to take a seat. With great delicacy she drew out my story until I told her all that was in my heart. She took me into her dining-room, gave me a meal as gently as she would have served her own son, and then, after praying for me, she made me take a little help, and I went on my way like a new man. All that I am and hope to be I owe to that hour's kindness, received from that good woman.

The young man came to the city of Cleveland, got work, showed excellent qualities in business, has been rapidly promoted, and has every prospect of fine success. What a blessed thing it is to be on the alert to give a "cup of cold water," when it is needed, and in the right Christian spirit.—Brotherhood Star.

"Alas! for it was Borrowed."

The Watchman tells this story of a young man who stood before a Presbytery in Scotland asking ordination. "Principal Robinson was Moderator. The young man was rigidly examined, and asked to preach. The examination and the sermon were both satisfactory. The candidate retired, and the Moderator said: 'I feel compelled to say that the sermon which the young man has preached is not his own; it is taken from an old volume of sermons, long out of print. Where he found it I do not know. I supposed the only copy of the volume to be found was in my library, and the candidate has had no access to that.' The young man was called in and asked if the sermon he preached was his own. 'No,' he frankly said, 'I was pressed for time, and could not make a sermon in season. The sermon I preached was one which I heard Principal Robinson preach some time ago. I took notes of it, and liked it so well that I wrote it out from memory, and have preached it today.' Nothing was said; there was nothing to be said."

As long as a minister is expected to furnish one or two "brand new sermons," able, learned, orthodox and brilliant, every week, year after year, to the same congregation, so long some ministers will preach a good many poor sermons or borrow others that suit them better. We heard of one minister in Massachusetts who was watched by a physician and his daughter, till they detected him in preaching some sixty sermons that were taken from a single volume!

When men learn to "preach the Word," there will be less activity in the second-hand sermon market, and old essays from rare books will not be as useful as they now are. But so long as men read their pretty essays, made up from newspaper scraps, paragraphs from magazines, snatches of poetry, etc., there will not be wanting those who "steal.....words every one from his neighbor," (Jer. xxiii. 30,) or who beg, borrow and buy better sermons than they are able to prepare. And some who do not do this may go farther and fare worse. The cure seems to be in such study of the Word as shall make the gospel message ever fresh, and in such a going forth into all the world, as shall find fresh ears to hear it when it is proclaimed.

A Single Idle Word.

"I was not a bad young man," said an elderly gentleman lately, "but was given to fun, enjoyed a good time, and, while not unusually vulgar or low in my conversation, had a keen sense of the ludicrous, and could not always resist the temptation to make an apt rejoinder, even when it involved coarseness.

A party of us were camping, mostly young fellows, but one or two were middle-aged men. We had a good time, and there was only one thing to regret, and that I have regretted all my life. We sat around the fire the first evening telling stories, and a story which one of the older men told suggested an obscene comment, which I uttered before I thought twice.

I could have bitten my tongue off the next instant. I knew that I did not deserve the opinion which in that instant he formed of me; but I knew also that I had given him just cause to estimate me as he did. The one careless word did not fairly represent me, but I could not deny that it was my own.

All night I lay looking up at the stars and thinking over what I said. I could almost have counted on my fingers all the other sentences of like character that I had ever spoken. I was not habitually vulgar, but for that one word, and all like words and thoughts.

I determined to be so careful during the remainder of the week as to redeem myself in the sight of that man. The others knew me better. But a telegram called him back to the city next morning, and I saw him unfrequently after that.

He always treated me civilly when we met, but I never saw him without feeling that he still measured me by that word. I had opportunities to show him that I was not wholly bad, but they were too few to give a comprehensive view of my character, or really to influence his opinion of me.

In a strange way, after a year or two had passed, my name was mentioned for a position which was desirable, and which I seemed likely to secure; but this man was one of three to decide the matter. Without positively knowing how it came about, I could never doubt that a quiet intimation that he considered me unfit was what defeated me.

Later I found a situation which, although a good one, was in a very different line of work from what I had chosen, and I have never doubted that my whole life was changed by that idle word.

Did I learn the lesson? Yes, I did! My habit, now almost lifelong, has made impurity, even in its milder forms, repulsive. The memory of that incident has stopped many a hasty utterance, and in the years that followed it the warning of the Divine Teacher has added a sense of responsibility to the sense of shame: 'I say unto you that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."—Youth's Companion.

Saying His "A B C" to God.

The bells were ringing for church, while the little shepherd boy was obliged to keep watch over the sheep But in his heart there grew up a longing to pray to God, as they were doing in the church. He had, however, never been taught any prayer, and so, kneeling down, he began, with closed eyes and folded hands, saying the alphabet, "A B C D," and on to the end.

"What are you doing, my little man," said a gentleman passing on the other side of the hedge.

"Please, sir, I was praying," replied the boy.

"But why are you saying your letters?"

"Why," said the little fellow, "I didn't know any prayer, only I felt I wanted God to take care of me and help me to take care of the sheep. So I thought if I said all I knew he would put it together and spell all I wanted."

"Bless your heart, my little man! He will. When the heart speaks right, the lips can't say wrong," wisely answered his questioner.

Character lives in a man: reputation outside of him.

Not to know evil, that is innocence; but to know evil and choose the good, that is virtue.

It is with flowers as with moral qualities: the bright are sometimes poisonous; but, I believe, never the sweet.—Hare.

Personal character should always be a resultant of true action, instituted for unselfish purposes. The meanest and most illegitimate of all man pursuits is the direct pursuit of reputation.

Our spiritual natures are to be knit into firmness by toil, to be hardened into power by conflict, to be softened into humanity by the experience of their weakness, to be rendered tractable by affliction, and thus fitted for a safe eternity.

Dear Brother Underwood:

The excellent numbers of THE RESTITUTION recently sent out are surely encouraging to receive, for they teem with the riches of the Word in its purity and simplicity. How it helps us and makes us feel strengthened, to know there so many yet who prize the work and words of the Master above all that the things of this life can give.

We who are so isolated from all of like precious faith, and have had no opportunity to hear a sermon from one of the Abrahamic faith for twenty years, can appreciate to the full such fine sermons as we get from Brothers Joblin, Zilmer, Wince, Woodward, Robison, Wilson, and I must not fail to mention Sisters Wince, Woodward, Boice, the Neills, and the young workers, the Bereans, and many other co-workers in the Lord's vineyard.

The weekly visits of THE RESTITUTION gives us joy and renews our strength, for it assures us that there are a few left in these "perilous times" who have not "bowed the knee to Baal," but are endeavoring to keep themselves unspotted from the world. Lord hasten thy appearing, and help us to faint not by the wayside.

Yours waiting his coming.

MRS. C. W. RUSSEL.

Dear Restitution.

I desire to say that Brother D. M. Hudler made a visit to the brethren at Lanark, Plum River and Antioch, Ill. After his absence of several years we were all pleased to see him and hear him expound the Word of God. He has not forgotten, but rather improved in the work, although for a time he did not preach regularly while in the far west. He will remain about home until September, and any of the brethren in Iowa or elsewhere can secure his services by addressing him at Muscatine, Iowa.

Poetry.

Are You Watching?

Should you hear the trumpet's warning
Would it bring aught else but cheer?
Should you hear it is the morning
Would it cause you any fear?

Are you watching, are you waiting?
For he's coming back to stay,
And he told us at his coming
He would bring eternal day.

Can you hear the heavenly chorus
Of the angels in their flight,
Bringing forth the King of glory,
In their spotless robes of white?

Are you watching, are you waiting,
Till you hear the welkin ring
With the song they shall be singing—
"Glory to earth's reigning King!"

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 29.

1. In respect to the other tribes thus saith the Lord.

2. Lo, waters are going up from the North, and they will be in the way of a spring-torrent that floodeth: and it will flood a land and the fulness of its city, and those who dwell in it; and the men will shout and all who inhabit the land will clamor

3. Because of the sound of the rushing of it, because of the sound of the hoofs of his feet and the jarring of his chariots, the echoing sound of his wheels; fathers have not turned unto their sons because of the weakness of their hands.

4. In the day that is coming to destroy all other tribes. And I shall desolate Turos (Tyre) and Seidoun (Sidon) and all the rest of their helpful alliance, because the Lord is going to destroy the rest of the islands.

5. Baldness is coming upon Gaza, Askaloon and the rest of the Enakim have been cast away.

6. How far wilt thou cut down, O thou sword of the Lord? Until when wilt thou not become quiet? Be thou restored to thy sheath, be at rest and borne away.

7. How will it be quiet? And the Lord hath commanded it to be awakened against Askaloon and against those along the sea-coast and the rest?

8. Unto Idoumain, thus saith the Lord, There is no longer wisdom in Thaimon; counsel hath perished from understanding men; their wisdom hath gone away;

9. Their place hath been descended; ye who dwell in Daidam sit down deep, because it did things that did not please; I have led upon it in a time of my visitation;

10. Because vintners have come who will not leave a remnant for thee; like thieves in the night they will lay their hand on thee.

11. Because I have dragged down Heesaw; I have uncovered his hidden things; they cannot be hid; they have perished because of the hand of his brother, my neighbor, and there is no one

12. To leave thy orphan with that he may live; and I shall live, and the widows have trusted in me.

13. Because thus hath the Lord said, They have drunk the cup for whom there was no law to drink it; and thou though guiltless shalt not be accounted guiltless:

14. Because I have sworn by my own name, saith the Lord, that thou shalt be in her midst a trackless waste and a reproach and a curse, and that all her cities shall be desolate for an animate-age.

15. I have heard a report from the Lord, and he hath sent messengers unto nations, saying, Be ye gathered together, and be against her: arise for war.

16. A little one have I given thee to be among nations, a well-despised among men.

17. Their mockery of thee hath laid hold of thee, dejection of heart made holes in the rocks thy abodes. It hath seized the strength of a high hill, because it hath lifted up even as an eagle hath lifted up its nest; from there shall I drag thee down.

18. And Idoumain will be a trackless waste; every one who passeth by it will whistle with scorn at it.

19. Even as Sodoma and Gomorra were overthrown and her sojourners, hath the all-controlling Lord said, a man shall not sit down there and a son of man shall not dwell there.

20. Lo, even as a lion will go up out of the midst of the Jordans into Aithan's place, because quickly shall I persue them out therefrom, and may ye have stood the young men against her; because who is even as I am? And who will withstand me? And who is this shepherd who will withstand my face?

21. Therefore may ye have hearkened to the counsel of the Lord which he hath counseled against Idoumaia, and his reasoning which he hath reasoned against those who inhabit Thaiman, and see if the least of the sheep be not swept away, if their folding place be not made a trackless waste;

22. Because at the sound of the smiting of them the earth hath been made afraid and the clamor of the sea hath not been heard.

23. Lo, even as an eagle will he see and spread his wings over her walled-places; and the heart of the strong men of Idoumain on that day will be as the heart of a woman suffering birth-pangs.

COMMENT.

In the 9th verse observe the identification of the "Aitham" prophecy again, and that "Idoumain" was a part of the original inheritance of Aitham and Heesaw a descendent. In the 5th verse "Philistines" substituted in the R. V. for "the Enakim" and "Caphtor" or "the seacoast" for "the rest of the islands." "Edom" for "Idoumain" in the 8th verse—"Teman" for "Thaiman." The verse is not interrogatory at all. The numbering of the verses changed even. In the 9th "Dedan" for "Daidam" or "Esau" inserted—not in the text. No interrogatory in this verse either—a bare statement of a coming fact. No "Boxrah" in the text.

"No "Boxrah" or "Red Sea" in the text of this verse either.

Other changes of thought and simple statement too numerous to note in passing. Read and compare the whole chapter.

CHAS. GARDNER.

1 Cor. xv. 37 Again.

Questions often arise from the same foundation, but presented in a multitude of different forms. The controversy in relation to 1 Cor. xv. 37 is still unsettled in the minds of some who, perhaps are earnestly seeking after truth.

The article in THE RESTITUTION of Aug. 2, 1905, by Bro. Wilson's Bible Class is to my mind very complete; yet there are those who say that he (Bro. Wilson) purposely evaded the point at issue, by failing to quote the whole verse and not touching upon it in his comment or proof; but we who are acquainted with Bro. Wilson's vigorous methods of answering questions, are not easily persuaded that he would "shirk" a question or "dodge" an issue.

It is not the intention to enter into a long discussion of this 15th chapter of 1 Cor. at this time, and what is written will consist in part, of what has been before stated in a former article. The whole chapter is an exhaustive exposition of the resurrection, and a change from mortality to immortality couched in the eloquent and masterly language of the apostle Paul. But we think the apostle had two thoughts in mind, else why should he use both animate and inanimate objects to express the facts. The 37th verse reads thus, "And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or of some other grain." The contention is, that wheat that is sown contains a germ that shall not die; therefore the apostle used this figure to prove that there was something that does not really die, and concluded that he meant the soul, and stoutly maintain that it will live on, and endlessly on, forgetting that by this very contention they are destroying their own argument, for the word "quicken" means to make alive, and nothing can be quickened without first being dead, as is affirmed by both Jesus and Paul. Well says one, what are you going to do with this wheat germ, as the apostle uses it right in the midst of his resurrection sermon? There is but one disposition to make of it, and that is the Bible one. To whom was the apostle speaking? The Corinthians were a part of the One Body, the Household of Faith, the Church of God; they had taken upon themselves the name of Christ. Paul was not instructing any as to the nature of the resurrection, except those who had a right to expect they would share in a resurrection or change from mortality to immortality at the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and there is to be but one class considered in the resurrection at Christ's coming. Now, how did the Corinthian brethren obtain their station in this class? Obviously the bringing in the wheat figure was a secondary thought, or what may appear more reasonable a thought reserved to be brought in at the place it occupies in the discourse, and was a brief statement as to the step to be taken, that they might be among those worthy ones that are to receive life at Christ's coming. Paul says, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death?" "We have been planted together in the likeness of his death." The two statements show an act that was in the past tense, i. e., the wheat has been planted, the blade appeared, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear, fruit brought forth, even as the believer is symbolically dead, and by faithfully following after the Spirit, attains to the full stature of a man in Christ Jesus. He has left the hull of the wheat, the old man, the body of sin behind in the watery grave and is a new man in Christ Jesus, producing fruit, the full corn in the ear. What then? We have been planted in the likeness of his death (past) we shall be (future) also in the likeness of his resurrection. We must become a new man in Christ Jesus before we can occupy the status that it is necessary to attain to, in order to become amenable to the condition taught in the great resurrection sermon. The sowing of the wheat (repentance and baptism) is optional with the individual; the balance rests with the Life-Giver. "Except ye be born of water and of the Spirit, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John iii. 5. In order to produce a birth, there must first be a begettal; repentance and baptism constitute the begettal of the Spirit birth, which is forcibly illustrated by the figure of the sowing of the wheat. Make any other application than that given above, and you will have confusion. I cannot see that it has any other connection with resurrection life and have harmony in the Scriptures of truth.

MERRITT ELLIOTT.

Evangelizing Trip.

Though not troubled by the "deceitfulness of riches" the writer has "the cares of this world" to contend with to such an extent that this correspondence is not as regular as was designed when begun. My stay with Bro. Hatch lasted over a week; during which time I delivered six discourses in the Advent Christian church. As is my custom I dwelt on subjects that I thought the people needed most to enlighten them in the things concerning the kingdom of of God. Of course with this people it would be "the literal construction of the coming kingdom," "the age to come" and "the restoration of Israel." I find there is considerable prejudice among Advent people and much misunderstanding on these questions. But I do not think I left any more prejudice than I found, and while Bro. and Sister Hatch were encouraged other members may be benefitted. I also met and formed the acquaintance of Bro. and Sister Dresser, who stand firm in "the hope of Israel." Was much encourage to have Bro. and Sister Steffa come 70 miles to hear the Word, and although they could only remain one night it probably gave me as much encouragement and help as them. A strong sentiment is expressed in Arizona and along the route from Oregon to Arizona that they should be included in the Conference work of the Northwest, and should be visited during the coming year by the Evangelist. They showed not in word alone but by their liberal aid that they will help to support the Northwest Conference if they can be included in its work. I have not visited a locality but I received a warm invitation to come again. This helps one to bear life's heavy burdens. I feel grateful to the One that rules all things.

Traveled north several hundred miles where under the auspices of Bro. C. H. Dresser I held three meetings. Here I was depressed exceedingly with bad news from Oregon. Also with news from San Francisco that my daughter Grace Lawrence, who was there from the north being treated for cancer would return to the State of Washington in a few days. I must see her! I cut my work short at Tipton; agreeing to return in the future, if favored by Providence. In my flight to the city I spent two days with Bro. Calder at Oleander, and gave three discourses in the Congregational church to a good and interested hearing. The minister expressed a desire to hear more. We announced meetings a week ahead. When I reached San Francisco I found to my regret that my daughter had gone home, but learned to my joy that the removal of the cancer had been successful. Thus are the joys and griefs mingled all along our pathways.

The greater part of the week was spent in the city night-reading, gently trying to assuage my greater grief. Two days were spent on a trip to Santa Rosa and a visit at that place with Bro. and Sister Eli Scott. It was designed to hold meetings in this city, but as the Advent Christian brethren were gone to their Conference, and they were the people we wished especially to talk to, our meetings were omitted. So I am back to Olea der. Held meetings last evening, strong indication that an enemy has been sowing tares in the field, but expect to remain awhile.

Next meeting to be held at Wolf, Cal., under the direction of Bro. and Sister B. F. Cook. Then as soon as this is completed the work will be in the Rogue River Valley, Oregon, where I hope to stay as interes may require.

Can't We Assist?

What can the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus do to arouse a greater interest in the Master's cause? All admit that the time is short, that whatever is done must be done quickly. It is also admitted by all thoughtful persons, that the necessity for a great work to be done, is almost overwhelming.

Dear reader, do you know of at the least one who would be left out if Jesus should come tonight? Is there a father or a mother, or a brother or a sister, or a wife or a husband, or a grandfather or a grandmother, or a child or a grandchild, or a neighbor, or a dear friend who you want to take with you into the kingdom, whose name has not yet been written in the Lamb's book of Life?

Yes, there are thousands upon thousands who are in this condition, all or nearly all, of whom will be left out unless an extraordinary effort be made and made without delay. There is not a pastor of a church or an evangelist in the field who do not expect to gather into the fold a goodly number of his hearers, baptizing them in the name of the blessed Lamb of God, and sending them forth on their way rejoicing into the kingdom of our Lord.

The desire of these pastors and evangelists should be met. It can and will be, if all who expect to pass through the golden gate will lay hold, with all the means and ability God has given them and hang on with a determination born of the necessities of the case.

When Jesus was here on the earth he labored almost day and night. He began his work by fasting forty days. He often prayed all night. In this manner he thoroughly consecrated himself to the work which was given him by his Father. How many are willing to imitate his example and consecrate the remainder of their lives as thoroughly to the Master's work as did our blessed Savior. If we do that with all the vigor we can command, we will come bringing in the sheaves when the angel proclaims the message, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him."

R. S. DWIGGINS.

Dear Restitution:

The following paper was read at a cottage prayer meeting held at Ontario, California.

I had a beautiful dream or vision of the glorious appearing of the Son of God. I saw a bright cloud extending from heaven to earth. The whole universe seemed filled with bright angels. Midway between heaven and earth I saw Jesus. As I stood gazing in admiration and wonder, upon the beautiful scene, the cloud about me became filled with the saints, ascending up to meet the Lord.

I saw my beloved brother and his wife, who stood beside me, slowly and gradually ascending. Next, I saw my husband being parted from my side, then came the awful thought "Oh my God, am I left?" But soon I too began to arise. The thril of joy no mortal tongue can tell. The heavens and the earth were filled with the sweetest songs of praise. Soon I was joining in redemption's glad song of praise to our King.

The curtain fell—the vision ended. May we all who name his name be caught away to meet the Lord in the air, and so may we ever be with the Lord.

Now unto our God the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit will we ascribe all glory and honor and praise this night, and for ever more. Amen.

The Bereans Column.

Dear Bereans:

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Eccl. xii. 1.

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth." "As we have therefore opportunity let us do good unto men." Gal. vi. 10.

While we are searching and studying the Scriptures let us look for opportunities to do good and make others happy. Let us not only search the Scriptures but be ready to grasp the opportunities according to our ability. Be ready to help each other, willing to teach, and be patient, remembering that the trials were only to mould our character and make us more perfect. If any one becomes indifferent we should put forth our efforts to interest them again. We should be gentle, self-sacrificing, slow to anger, and "above all these things, put on charity which is the bond of perfectness." Col. iii. 14 Let us be earnest in these things now, and become steadfast before the many cares of our life overtake us, as the years draw nigh, so that we will not say that we have had no pleasure in them, but that we have.

EDNA ANDERSON.

Dear Bereans:

CONFESSING CHRIST.

Why should we confess Christ? Is it not enough to believe on him, and reverence him? I am afraid that will not do. In Rom. x. beginning with the 9th verse, He says if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and in the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the Scripture saith whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek, for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon his name. There were some among the chief rulers who believed on him, but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him lest they should be put out of the synagogue, for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God. The Pharisee who prayed in the temple had a beautiful flow of language, while the poor publican spoke in halting, broken sentences, but Jesus listened to the poor publican and he was justified. The Lord says nothing about our confessing him eloquently, but "whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him." Hoping for the return of the King.

MINA KNOBLE.

Dear Bereans:

The Illinois Berean Bible school will convene at Oregon, Illinois, Monday August 6th. Brothers Lindsay and Conner will conduct the school. Those who have attended before know of the excellent work done by Brother Lindsay. All must feel it has been a rare opportunity. Now with Brother Conner as a co-worker it will be made doubly so. The school is absolutely free and no Berean should miss this opportunity of studying God's Word. Imagine yourself placed for ten days in the company of young people of the same faith, all intent upon the study of the Bible, with two able instructors ready and willing to guide you. Then decide whether you can afford to miss so great an opportunity. Let every one who can be present and make the school one grand good success.

A BEREAN.

Editor Restitution:

We will write a few lines as it is time to renew our subscription for the paper that is a welcome visitor to our home. We feel that we could not get along without it. We get so many encouraging words from the brothers and sisters, it seems like a cool drink of water to a thirsty pilgrim in a dry land. We met Brother Skeels of Oregon during his stay in Arizona and heard him preach and his sermons we never will forget. It was wonderful to hear him explain the Word of God to his dying congregation, so tender yet so firm, it did us so much good, we felt that the burden of life was lighter, that we now could live nearer to him who died for us.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

MR. & MRS. R. E. PERRY.

The love of Christ is like the blue sky into which we see clearly, but the real vastness of which you cannot measure. It is like the sea into whose bosom you can look a little way, but its depths are unfathomable.

"Good evening, Abe. Why [illegible]
Have you lost all your friends?"

Abe was tall and awkward-looking; his big bare feet were a long way below the bottoms of his overalls; under his arm he carried a book; and as he answered Mr. Crawford he turned over the leaves, showing them discolored and crumpled.

"Mr. Crawford," he said, "I'm very sorry that an accident happened to your book. Last night I read by the fireplace till bedtime, and then took the book to the cabin loft with me to read until I had burned up a short end of a candle."

"Did you fall asleep a-readin', Abe, and did the straw bed catch afire, and then did you souse the book tryin' to put the fire out?"

There was a twinkle in Mr. Crawford's eye as he asked Abe these questions. But Abe was very serious, so he went on to explain.

"I didn't fall asleep, Mr. Crawford, for the book is the most interesting one I have ever read. When the candle burned out I laid the book on the straw beside me, close against the logs. But you know it rained in the night, and as the cabin is not very tight the rain came through. How much is that book worth, Mr. Crawford?"

"Oh, I reckon it's worth seventy-five cents, Abe."

"Well, I've almost ruined it, Mr. Crawford, and I think I ought to pay for it. I have no money, but I can work for you. If that will do I am willing to help you three days in your corn cutting."

Mr. Crawford reckoned that would be about right. So at the end of the time Abe was going home feeling that he had fully paid for the damage done.

"Hold on there, Abe," said Mr. Crawford, "I don't want to sell that book and keep it, too. You made as good a hand at cuttin' corn as any on the place, and that book is yourn."

Abe was greatly affected. He told Mr. Crawford he had not thought of such a thing; but he saw it was fair, and he did love the book. It was a "Life of Washington." The story of the good man's life thrilled Abe as he read.

With pride and a light heart the country boy walked home that evening through the woods of Kentucky, the cherished book under his arm.

Many years afterward when Abe had become President Lincoln, he used to say that the possession of that book, the first he had ever owned, gave him greater pleasure and pride than he had felt in his election to the Presidency.

Waste Soil.

As we pass through the country we find abundance of waste and useless land. By the wayside, on the commons, and within enclosures, we find soil which is rich and fruitful, but only filled with thorns and briers, pestilential weeds and worthless trash. Every foot of that soil lies useless while people hunger and perish. A little labor, and the waste places would brighten and bloom with fruitfulness and beauty. But for lack of seed and the toil of the sower, the energies of the land run to waste, and only produce that which causes trouble and vexation.

So human minds are barren of good and fruitful of evil. Thorns and briers and weeds exhaust the energies of minds that might be fruitful in all good and gracious work. Nothing is lacking but good seed and careful culture. God has given us the seed. His truth planted in the heart will change it from barrenness and desolation to beauty and fruitfulness. The seed is abundant, but who will sow it? "The sower soweth the Word." A sermon preached, a few words spoken for Christ, tracts given, papers distributed, letters written,—all these afford means and methods for sowing good seeds. Let us ask the blessing of God upon our labors, and let us go forth and sow beside all waters the seed that shall bring forth fruit unto holiness, and the end thereof everlasting life.—Safeguard.

This is to be a "mind mother" sermon. There are two ways in which you ought to mind everything she says. Mind her the first time she speaks. When she says "Mary, please bring me some coal or water, or run to the store," don't answer "In just a minute, mother." Little folks' minutes are a great deal longer than the ones the clock ticks off. When you say "yes" with your lips, say "yes" with your hands and feet. Don't say "yes" and act "no." Saying "Yes, in a minute," is not obeying, but doing "yes" in.

A Word to Young Preachers.

You have your own work to do, your life to live, your race to run and your God to serve; and you will at last have your own account to render up. God who has given you your being has laid upon you responsibilities, and will hold you accountable for the improvement you make of the talents committed and the opportunities afforded to you. If you fail in your life-work, it will be your own failure, and you yourself must bear the loss. There is no possibility of shifting this responsibility. If you follow the multitude to do evil, or if you are influenced and swayed in wrong directions by older and wiser persons, you yourself must still bear the responsibility of your own acts. He who gave heed to a lying prophet died as surely as he would had he become an Idolater, or joined himself to the worshipers of Baal.

It behooves you, therefore, to weigh well the fact of your own personal responsibility, thus making you own calling and election sure, keeping yourself in the love of God, and then endeavoring to do the work which God by his providence places within your reach. There are many things within your power which you are not called to do simply because the Lord has not commanded that they should be done. You need not burden yourself to devote your life to the building up of every "cause," or interest, or enterprise which others may inaugurate or approve, and which may at last only cause you disappointment and regret. But you are to have understanding what the will of the Lord is concerning yourself, and then labor to save individual sinners, and to build up the saints in their most holy faith, and give light in the world, and show yourself "approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

It is not necessary that you should rule the world, control the church, guide public opinion, or stand with the great in the high places of the earth; but it is necessary that you should obey God, and walk in his fear, and be led by his Spirit, and enjoy his fellowship. Although it may not be necessary that you should be a seeker of office, a leader in politics, or a manager of sectarian enterprises, it is necessary that you should be a good minister of Jesus Christ, a faithful witness that delivereth souls.

To do this you need to so know for yourself, your weakness and your strength, that you will beware of rash undertakings which result in failure; that you will not seek to imitate others, and strive to do great things because they have done them; in a word, that you seek to copy the Lord Jesus Christ in his faithfulness, in his lowliness, in his poverty, in his fidelity, and in his active life as he went about doing good. Doing this you will find blessings on you, in all your ways. Being partaker of Christ's afflictions, you shall share his consolations; going at his command, he will be with you alway, "even unto the end of the world;" and having suffered with him here, you shall reign with him at last in light and joy unspeakable

Compared with such a glory and such a reward, what has the world to offer? O man of God, cast aside every worldly weight. Follow hard after God; run with patience the race that is set before you, and you shall win the crown of glory that fadeth not away.—H. L. Hastings.

Life and Song.

A perfect holy life would be a perfect song. At the best on the earth our lives are imperfect in their harmonies; but if we are Christ's disciples we are learning to sing while here, and some day the music will be perfect. It grows in sweetness here just as we learn to do God's will on earth as it is done in heaven.

Only the Master's hand can bring out of our souls the music that slumbers in them. A violin lies on the table silent and without beauty. One picks it up and draws the bows across the strings, but it yields only wailing discords. Then a master comes and takes it up, and he brings from the little instrument the most marvelous music. Other men touch our lives and draw from them only jangled notes; Christ takes them, and when he has put the chords in tune he brings from them the music of love and joy and peace. It is said that once Mendelssohn came to see the great Frieburg organ. The old custodian refused him permission to play upon the instrument, not knowing who he was. At length, however, he granted him leave to play a few notes. Mendelssohn took his seat and took the most wonderful music was breaking forth from the organ. The custodian was spellbound. At length he came up beside the great musician and asked his name. Learning it, he stood humiliated, self condemned, saying, "And I refused you permission to play upon my organ."

There comes one to us and desires to take our lives and play upon them. But we withhold ourselves from Him and refuse him permission, when if we would but yield ourselves to him he would bring from our souls heavenly music.

We are but organs mute, till a master touches the keys;
Vocal, we stand earth into which God breathed with the wind;
Harps are we, silent harps that have hung in the willow trees.
Dumb till our heart-strings swell and break with a pulse divine.

It is often in sorrow that our lives are taught their sweetest songs. There is a story of a German baron who stretched wires from tower to tower of his castle to make an Æolian harp. Then he waited to hear the music from it. For a time the air was still and no sound was heard. Afterward gentle breezes blew and the harp sang softly. At length came the winter winds, strong and stormlike in their force; then the wires gave out majestic music which was heard through all the castle. There are human lives that never yield the music that is in them in the calm of quiet days; but when the winds of trial sweep over them they give out murmurings of song; and when the storms of adversity blow upon them they answer in notes of victory. It takes trouble to bring out the best that is in them.

Come what may, we should make our lives songs. We have no right to add to the world's discords, or to sing any but sweet strains in the ears of others. We should start no note of sadness in this world, which is already so full of sadness. We should add something every day to the stock of the world's happiness. If we are truly Christ's, and walk with him we cannot fail to sing.—Westminster Teacher.

Our Helping Fund

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Annual Conference.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittances should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Paylon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 624 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

Take Time to Pray.

Take time, my brother, take time to pray.
Take time, my brother, now while you may.
The day will soon pass, time flee away,
Darkness will gather, no time to pray.

Take time to pray, brother, take time to pray,
Take time to commune with God while you may.
[illegible] prayer to passing today,
The day of salvation is fleeing away.

Take time to pray, brother, take time to pray,
Time, life and hope are flying away.
Eternity dawns, and there must obey
The call to surrender, oh, take time to pray.

Miracles. No. 2.

If the miracles could be proven false we would be obliged, logically, to abandon the theory of an inspired revelation, and consequently that of the supernatural origin of Christianity. In this sad condition there would remain no ground for indulging the hope of future life. The last expiring breath would mark the termination of human existence forever. "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die," would be the fitting motto of every human being; so Paul concludes in case there should be no resurrection of the dead; referring to himself and fellow apostles he could say, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." The question of miracle, by the Higher Critics themselves has been narrowed down to the impossibility of performance.

It is in place here to quote the language of Mansel (Aids to Faith page 16); "If it once be granted that testimony is admissible in the case, it is scarcely possible to conceive a stronger testimony than that which the Christian miracles can claim." In the light of this concession it may be asked: Why then did Mansel reject miracles? Another quotation from him will answer the question. Hennys, "The question is not of the rarity of miracles—no one asserts them to be common; it is not their improbability—no one asserts them to be generally probable; it is not that they need an extraordinary testimony as compared with other events—such testimony we assert they have. It is neither more nor less than their impossibility." This explains why "testimony is not admissible in the case," according to his view. Now if these rejectors of miracles could prove this proposition it would settle the question and end the controversy. They have not proven this, nor can they prove it. The impossibility is assumed, and asserted with a blare of trumpets as "advanced thought;" "in the opinion of modern scholarship," and "in the light of science."

The question of the actual occurrence of miracles is to be settled by the testimony of witnesses to the facts. It matters not they were wrought in a credulous age and at times and in countries where men were disposed to believe them. Bible miracles had to be performed under conditions unlike the present conditions in respect to many things. They could not be performed under any other than existing conditions at the time. No nation during the ages in which it is claimed the miracles in question were wrought, was free from superstition. If any nation was less disposed than any others to rank extraordinary natural events as miraculous, that people was Israel or the Hebrew family. These critics think the present age would furnish suitable conditions under which to perform miracles in order that they might be properly tested. They are not needed now; the revelation of God's will toward man was made in far gone ages; and his Son put forth his marvellous claims to place, and power, and worldwide dominion well on to two thousand years ago. Miracles were absolutely necessary back there in order to faith. God is not making a revelation of his will today, nor is his Son here in person asserting his divine mission. So miracles are not in order. The matters of fact which needed attesting were placed on record along with the testimony of the witnesses. We have it in hand, with the exhortation to read it, to search the Scriptures. As rational beings it is our business to examine the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses but it is not our business to try to explain the miracles, and then on the ground of our inability and ignorance discard them.

THE CREDIBILITY OF THE WITNESSES.

The witnesses in mind now are those who were present when Jesus performed his mighty works in Judea and Galilee, and who, afterwards, bore witness to the fact of his resurrection. If it can be shown that their testimony is credible all else pertaining to Divine intervention in man's behalf must follow as true—the inspiration of the Old Testament Scriptures, and the supernatural origin of the two religions, the Hebrew and the Christian.

1. As to what they bore witness. It was not a dream nor an impression, nor opinion, nor a theory, but facts, as truly such as any recorded on the pages of secular history. The testimony of eye witnesses establishes all the facts or events which swell the history of the world into countless volumes. No one calls in question the facts of our country's history, its settlement by emigrants from the old world; its early struggles with the Indian tribes and the French; the war with the Mother country by the thirteen colonies, resulting in their independence; the war of 1812, again with England and the one with Mexico in 1846-7; and the war of the Rebellion which threatened to break up the union of the states—ending in the freedom of four millions of slaves. All this with its endless details of events we read and believe because testified to by competent witnesses, the most of whom are now dead. The facts of our history can never cease to be true, and after the lapse of a thousand generations would as strongly challenge the faith of the thousandth generation as that of the one on the stage at present, and separated by only a few years from the last events enumerated. Length of time does not affect the testimony of credible witnesses. Some people think it has been so long since Christ was on the earth and wrought the miracles ascribed to him by the four Evangelists, that we cannot accept them as true.

II. What is necessary to constitute a competent witness to facts or events? The natural use of his senses, soundness of mind, and the opportunity to see and know. These the Christian witnesses had in an eminent degree. Renan denies the fact that they were qualified to testify, and the conditions under which the miracles were wrought were not such as would satisfy a reasonable and scientific mind. Says he, "None of the miracles with which ancient histories are filled occurred under scientific conditions." He of course includes those recorded in the Bible. I quote another remark of his: "No miracle was ever performed before an assembly of men capable of establishing the miraculous character of the act. Neither men of the people nor men of the world are competent for that. Great precautions and a long habit of scientific research are requisite." What a pity that it was necessary to perform miracles so early in the world's history! If Jesus was here today performing marvelous works he would be found among the common people and such as believe miracles possible and not among the scientific Higher Critics, for these would, on hearing of him, set him down as an imposter along with Dowie and Sanford! I wish to contradict a statement or two in the above quotations. 1st, The Christian miracles though not performed under what Mr. Renan would call scientific conditions, were performed under conditions that would absolutely preclude the possibility of imposture. Some of them were performed under better conditions than he suggests, wise as he was.

All the circumstances were favorable to passing judgment in the affirmative, or that they really occurred as stated in New Testament history. The conditions have satisfied millions of minds quite as capable of reasoning and research as this author of the Life of Jesus.

III. The assembly and groups of men and women in the presence of whom miracles were wrought were capable of settling the question of actual occurrence of the event. True they were not scientists, but they could tell when the sun rose and set without the aid of astronomy, could decide that man is dead, without applying any of the modern tests. They knew just as well as any scientist could know when a man was deaf, or blind, or lame. Renan would I suppose, have all the cases examined and a judgment rendered by a scientific man, as he suggested should be done in the case of a dead man on whom resurrection power was to be exerted as a test case. Would this be necessary as a precaution against deception? I see no need of such a procedure.

All there was about these cases and all others in New Testament history was plain enough to common sense people, without calling in the aid of science to determine conditions. Here is a dead man, Lazarus for instance; another is dumb; a second is blind; and a third is deaf; a fourth has palsy; and a fifth a withered arm. The witnesses were well acquainted with the dead man while he was alive and knew of his death; and were thoroughly cognizant of the sad condition of the other cases. If the dead man was restored to life and the other persons healed of the infirmities where was the difficulty of bearing testimony to the fact that the dead man was alive and the others [illegible] afflicted with their several infirmities? There is no difficulty in knowing a man in two conditions. This is an every day occurrence. The witnesses to the miracles performed by our Savior did not see supernatural action, nor the energy that set up the action that resulted in the changed conditions of these persons. A scientist, if present could not have seen the instantaneous operation within the lifeless corpse of Lazarus. That was inscrutable. But there was the tangible fact as proof of power exerted, Lazarus himself alive after the four days interval of death. Was there any chance for deception? Was it a phantasm seen by disciples, by Jews and the loving sisters? Were all these under a hypnotic spell brought on them by Jesus for the purpose of deceiving them? Perish the thought! There were Jews in the group that stood about that grave who would have welcomed the opportunity to expose any trick or fraud.

"Many of the Jews believed in Jesus" on the strength of this miracle. "But some of them went their ways to the Pharisees and told them what things Jesus had done." None denied the fact. Six days before the next passover, at a supper given in honor of Jesus, Lazarus was present and sat at the table as a guest. John xii. 1, 2. "Many Jews knowing of this supper came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom he raised from the dead." ver. 9. Lazarus was so much in evidence that the chief priests consulted that they might put him to death, assigning as a reason that many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus. Was there ever a better substantiated fact in all history than that Lazarus was raised from the dead.

JOHN L. WINCE.

He that truly walks with God, converses with him in frequent prayer and constant communion, runs to him in all his necessities, asks counsel of him in all his doubtings, opens all his wants to him, weeps before him for his sins, asks both remedy and support from him for his weakness, fears him as a Judge, reverences him as a Lord, and obeys and loves him as his patron and father and friend.—Jeremy Taylor.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, APRIL 25, 1906. NUMBER 16.

Walter Tomlinson

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Are We a Missionary People?

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved. But he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 15, 16. I cannot think that any intelligent believer can apply this as having been spoken to the Apostles alone. This commission goes down through the ages. Jesus said, Lo, I am with you always, even unto the age. A true believer is a live missionary.

The trouble with us often is that our knowledge of what others are doing is limited. I know little of what the churches in other states are doing. I feel assured that we have the true missionary spirit in our state. Yet we can do but little for the want of means. Did it ever occur to those who think we should enter the foreign field that our people are poor in this world's goods? If all the wealth we possess were available it would not send and support many there. The truth is that the churches around us have the wealth of this world and are using much of it in foreign fields. One church collected twenty million dollars as a twentieth century offering. I am safe in saying that much of this was taking the bread out of mouths of the poor and famishing. I heard a minister state from the pulpit that a poor widow who cared for a family by washing had contributed $5 for foreign missions. Could she afford to do this? Yes, at the extreme expense of her children. It was taking the bread out of their mouths. I am not making this statement as an argument against giving. I am wanting to show the unreasonableness of those around us in their efforts to keep up their missionary work. All true believers [illegible] to get others to believe the gospel. Now is God blessing these churches because they have a world wide missionary spirit? Will he withhold his blessing from us because we are not measuring up with others? I think not. God requires that we make the proper effort and he will do the balance. Our commission is to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God and by this means to take out of the Gentiles a people for his name. God is calling for men and women to become rulers in the age to come. The preaching of the gospel is the means by which this is accomplished. The churches think their commission is to convert the world to Christ before he comes. We know that this cannot be accomplished. It is not God's plan. Shall we assert then that because they become powerful in the world that God is blessing them? We think not. We think rather that our heavenly Father is using them as an instrument to further his future plan to convert the world to Christ. These churches are instruments for the distribution of his Word (the Bible) to the remotest parts of the earth. A work that a weak church could not do. Within the last 50 years millions of Bibles have been distributed through the agency of the "United Missionary Society." Some may say, "If they do distribute they do not preach its precious truths." Leave that to God. The same precious truths that are making men and women adopted sons and daughters will make the nations obedient to Christ and his saints in the age to come. It will be found there and translated into all tongues for all people. God has used human instrumentalities during all the ages to accomplish his plan. There is not a nation of people on the face of the earth that God is not using to bring about his plan of redeeming the earth from its curse and the people from darkness. We may not see it very clearly now, but we will when the veil is removed and we have the power of an endless life. The churches are permitted to preach their dogmas but God places this charge upon them, Distribute my Word to the uttermost parts of the world. Livingston, Stanley and Bishop Taylor have done much to place the Bible in the hands of "Darkest Africa." Others have gone to the remotest bounds of India, China and the isles of the sea. They go out with the missionary spirit of converting the world to Christ and carry with them the Bread of Life. This is God's work. The time will come when true believers will preach the whole truth to a famishing world. "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled. There are a few hungry ones now but a large majority are not so. They are feeding on the husks that the churches are giving them. Not a few are becoming tired of such spiritual food (?) and are seeking for something better. Some are finding the "bread that came down from heaven." Others are seeking rest in infidelity. The time will come when many shall say, "Come let us go up to the house of the God of Jacob. He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." Then men will hunger and thirst after righteousness and God will feed them. Happy are we if we can see God's hand working to bring about a righteous race. We have tried to make plain our views as to what constitutes a true missionary spirit, also the spirit that works in those around us.

We should not worry because others seem to prosper and we seem to do so little. Remember that the mite the poor woman cast in counted for more than the abundance of the rich. We should remember that bread cast upon the water will return after many days. Some are anxious for the future as to who shall become preachers of the Word. Some think we need an educated ministry. So we do, and we have it and will always have it. But do we necessarily need college educated ones? Such an education will do no harm, but can we wait so long a time? It is said of Jesus that, "The common people heard him gladly."

My instructor in the gospel was a man of little education and yet he spake to me as never man spake. His words were a healing balm. They opened my mind to the grand truths of God's Word. I had attended college but this man in his weakness was stronger than my wisdom. Look over the field and see how many of our preachers have had a college training. Ask them how much it helped them to believe and obey the gospel of the kingdom of God. There are a few things that young men in college have to contend with. Not the least of these is religious infidelity. Our colleges are honey-combed with corruption. Higher Criticism is being thrown broadcast. It is nothing less than vile infidelity. The money that would be required to educate one young man in college would send a score out strong in gospel truth. Our rural schools are furnishing a liberal education in our day. The time is short and we should concentrate our efforts to preach the gospel. Yours in the truth.

D. C. ROBISON.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 30.

1. To the sons of Ammeon. Thus saith the Lord. Are there not sons in Israel or have they no one who will take possession? Why is it that Melchol hath taken possession of Galaad, and why shall their laity dwell in their cities?

2. Therefore days are coming, saith the Lord, and I shall make a tumult of war to be heard in a trackless place and in desolation, and her altars with steps have been burned down, and Israel will take his own sovereignty.

3. Alala (the shout of victory) O Eseboon, because Gai hath perished; shout ye, daughters of Rabbath; gird on sack-cloth and make public-lamentation, because Melchol is giving away on foot in a removal, his priests and his rulers together with him.

4. Why are ye glad on the plains, ye Bunkelm, thou daughters of audacity, thou who trusted in treasures, thou who art saying, Who will come in against me?

5. Lo, I am bringing fear upon thee, hath the Lord said, fear of all the inhabited around thee, and ye will be scattered in the face of it, and there will be no one who gathereth together.

6. Unto Keedar the queen of the court which Nabouchodonosor king of Babuloon smote, in this wise hath the Lord said, Arise and go up against Keedar and smite the sons of Kedem.

7. Their tents and their flocks will they take; their outer-garments, and all their utensils and their camels will they take for themselves; and call for loss against them from round about.

8. Flee ye, go down very deep in your sitting, ye who have seated yourselves in the pasture-land because a king of Babuloon hath counseled a counsel and reasoned a reason against you.

9. Arise and go up against a well-fixed nation and seated at ease,

10. Who have no doors, no bolts, no bars, who pitch by themselves alone; and these camels will be for plunder, and the multitude of their domestic-animals for loss; and I shall winnow those to every wind who have been shorn before their face; from everything beyond them shall I bring their defeat hath the Lord said.

11. And their pasture-land will be a resort for sparrows and a trackless-waste until an animate-age; a man shall not sit down there, and a son of man shall not dwell there.

12. Unto Damaskos. Amath hath been put to shame and Arphath, because they have heard a bad report; they have been astounded, they have become angry, they shall not be able to find rest.

13. Damaskos hath given up, hath turned to flight, trembling hath laid hold of her.

14. How, hath she not utterly forsaken my city, my beloved village?

15. Therefore young men will fall in thy public-squares, and all thy men of [illegible] will be destroyed in that day, hath the Lord said.

16. And I shall kindle a fire in the wall of Damaskos and it will devour the ways round about a son of Ader.

COMMENT.

To find and compare what purports to be this same prophecy as given above in this 30th chapter, look in R. V. chapter 49 for verses numbered 1 to 5 first, then for 6 to 11 numbered there as 28 to 33 and then for 12 to 16 numbered there as 23 to 27 and for the 30th chapter in the R. V. see 37th chapter in the true text which will come later.

This prophecy the reader will observe covers "Amoon," "Keeder" and "Damaskos" as integral parts of the primitive "Ailam" (or Elam) "Eseboon" is not exhorted "to howl" as in the R. V. but to raise the shout of victory or "Alala." Why? Because "Eseboon" was the capital city of the sons of Amoon when they became subject to Israel under the first conquest and afterwards had been snatched away and become an integral part of the kingdom of Edoom; and this is a prophecy of the ultimate redemption again to the blessings of Israel under Jesoous, the Mediator of the New Covenant. Amoon was a national "first-fruits" and will be again in the redistribution of the land and the earth.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Resignation.

Resignation to the divine will does not imply stoical indifference under afflictive providential dispensations. We cannot but feel the stroke of the divine hand, which is sometimes very grievous. But while we suffer, and it may be very keenly, we may say sincerely in the spirit of true resignation, in imitation of him whose example should be our pattern, "Not my will, but thine be done." We may not be able to comprehend the dealings of our Heavenly Father with us, but we know that he careth for us, but he knows what is best, and that he would not chasten us if it were not for our good. A man who undergoes a severe surgical operation can not but feel the pain, although he may be fully satisfied that it is necessary, and will promote his health. So the Christian, although his trust and resignation may be complete, cannot but realize the bitterness of the cup placed to his lips.

"The Covenants of Promise."

The title of my address, "The Covenants of Promise," is a phrase seldom or never heard amongst the popular churches of today. This is a serious matter indeed, in our estimation. In fact there is no difficulty in proving that it was a vital question in apostolic times; it was a matter of life and death to be strangers or not to be strangers to the covenants of promise. And it saddens our hearts to know that tens of thousands,—ah, millions upon millions of religious people know absolutely nothing about these covenants of promise and so of course they do not believe them. Friends, we behold that what Paul in the second chapter of Ephesians calls the covenants of promise form the very kernel of the salvation which is in Christ Jesus. It is really distressing to us to hear people talk about being saved, or being Christians, who do not know what the covenants of promise are. I have made some statements, but have as yet offered no Bible proof of them; but I proceed to offer it now. In Eph. ii. 11 Paul writes to the churches at Ephesus to remind them of the conditions they were in before he preached to them the gospel of the kingdom of God. Says he,—Wherefore, remember, that ye, being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called uncircumcision by that which is called the circumcision in the flesh made by hands,—that at that time ye were without Christ, (they had never heard about him or his gospel) being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope—[no hope, good, bad nor indifferent, they just lived for the present only] and in the world. But now, [since I preached the gospel of Christ to you, and you have believed] but now, in Christ Jesus ye who were at one time far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ; for he is our peace,—who hath made both one [i. e., Jews and Gentiles] and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both [Jews and Gentiles] unto God in one Body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby," etc., [that which caused the enmity, viz., the law and its ordinances]—that caused the variance; that which kept up the distinction between Jews and Gentiles is slain, destroyed, put out of the way. It had served its purpose when Christ appeared upon the scene; and so, it having served its purpose, it expired by statute of limitation. So we will consider the Mosaic law dead, then. And in order to introduce you to the new order of things that succeeded the defunct law, I invite your attention to the words of Jesus, the night of his betrayal, as described in the 22nd chapter of Luke. As you know, it was the time of the Passover, and Jesus sent Peter and John to go and prepare, that they may eat. He directed them how to find a suitable place and they found things just as he had said. And when the hour was come he sat down and the twelve apostles with them. And he to them said, "I have earnestly desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer; for I say to you, I will not eat of it till it shall be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And taking a cup, having given thanks, he said, Take this and divide it among yourselves; for I say unto you, I will not drink from henceforth of the product of the vine till shall come." That was evidently the feast of the Passover. "And taking the loaf, and having given thanks he broke it, and gave to them, saying, "This is that Body of mine which is given for you; do this in my remembrance." Here the memorial Supper was instituted. "In this manner also the cup, after supper, saying, this cup is the New Covenant in my blood, that in your behalf being poured out." The wine, the fruit of the vine, was in the cup—the cup being mentioned instead of its contents, a frequent usage. Notice, if you please, this wine was to represent to the disciples the blood of Jesus soon to be poured out for or on account of them; and that it is called the Blood of the New Covenant. It may be necessary to explain here that more than 700 years before Jesus uttered these words the great Jehovah said through Isaiah the prophet that he would give one whom he would call, for a covenant of the people, and for a light to the Gentiles; I presume no one here doubts that Jesus was telling the truth when he said the wine in the cup represented his blood which was about to be shed, and which was actually shed the very next day,—and which he called the blood of the

WITHOUT GOD

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

NEW COVENANT.

But to show more clearly what he meant by his blood being the blood of the New Covenant; I will take you to the 15th of Romans and the 8th verse where it says that Jesus Christ was a minister or servant to the Jews for the truth of God,—to confirm the promises made by God to the fathers of the Hebrew nation, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David. Now every enquiring and honest person will want to know what promises God made to these worthy patriarchs. By going back to the 12th of Genesis we find God calling Abraham to leave his native land and go to the land of Canaan and he would make of him a great nation, and make his name great, and he should be a blessing,—and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee, and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed. And besides that,—after he arrived in Canaan God told him he would give it to him and his Seed for ever. Now it so happens that we have an infallible commentary on these passages in Gal. iii. 16 where Paul says that the seed referred to in connection with Abraham was Christ. That covenant or cluster of promises gives Abraham and Christ that land for ever, and they are in some way to bless all the families of the earth. In patriarchal times it was the custom in entering into a covenant for the parties thereto to take a heifer and cut it in two, and then the contracting parties passed between the pieces. For whatever purpose a covenant was made it was ever offered to God, and the passing between the divided parts of the victim signified that each agreed that if they broke their engagement, to submit to the punishment of being cut asunder. The words karath berith means to cut a covenant,—and as I have said the contracting parties passed between the pieces,—so that cutting the covenant meant making a covenant or agreement. So the God of Abraham condescended to enter into a covenant with him in that way—the Lord God told him to take a heifer, a she goat, a ram, a turtle dove and a young pigeon and divide all except the birds and when it was dark a smoking furnace and a burning lamp passed between those pieces, and the covenant between God and him was typically ratified. But as this related to eternal things it could not come into force till it was ratified or confirmed by the precious blood of Abraham's seed who was Christ. Now you can see what Jesus meant when at the institution of the Lord's Supper he said this is the New Covenant in my blood. Remember Abraham and his Seed were covenanted eternal things,—and Abraham, and Isaac and Jacob the other partners in the will, all died, we are told in Hebrews xi., not having received the promises. And you see they never can have them unless raised from the dead. The blood of no animals would confirm that covenant, and the blood of no man would bring it into force if he ever

RATIFIED BY A SACRIFICE

SINNED A SIN.

In all the ages not one man was found without sin till Jesus the promised seed of Abraham came. He was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners. And so, when he shed his blood, that confirmed the covenants of promise made to Abraham; and when the proper time comes it brings out of the grave not only Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, but all the patriarchs, prophets, martyrs and saints that ever lived. Did you know that we have positive proof that that everlasting covenant has power to give life after death? We have—you can depend upon that. It has already raised one, and he is a living witness to its power. Would you like to know how I found this out; and who the party is, who has been raised from the dead,—and where he is now? It gives me much pleasure to quote to you one grand passage that tells the story in part. It is Hebrew xiii. 20. It is the apostolic benediction, and reads as follows: Now, the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will," and so forth. Here are answers to part of those questions. I found out from this Scripture that one had been raised from the dead by the everlasting covenant. And that that person is our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep. And Hebrews i. 3 tells us that he is now seated on the right hand of

THE MAJESTY ON HIGH.

And in Mark xvi. 19 we read that after the last interview with his disciples on earth, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. Indeed an invitation for him to occupy this exalted position was given out by the Father a thousand years before Jesus was born. It is recorded in the 110th Psalm, and says: Jehovah said unto my Lord, "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." And the next verse tells what will take place after his enemies on earth shall be placed under his feet. Jehovah shall send the rod of his strength out of Zion,—and say, "Rule thou in the midst of thy enemies." It is added that the Lord who is at Jehovah's right hand, will when his enemies are turned over to him, strike through kings in the day of his wrath,—shall judge among the nations—and wound the heads—that is, the rulers, the authorities—over many countries. And Paul tells us 1 Cor. xv. 24 that Christ shall put down all rule (of man) and all authority and power; for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." Agreement with Daniel ii. 44 that the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom on earth, that shall break in pieces all the kingdoms of men and stand for ever. Now it is about time to say to you, that these last Scriptures explain what God promised the land of Canaan to Abraham and Christ for; namely as the territory on which his Son should set up

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

As already hinted, this covenant with Abraham and Christ contained the promise of future life that should never end. Jesus must possess the land forever with life for ever. And to make you doubly sure that I have been telling you the truth of God,—I turn from Daniel ii. to Dan. vii. 14 we have in Daniel's vision here the giving to the Son of Man of a dominion and glory and kingdom that all people, nations and languages should serve him; and four verses further on it shows that the saints of the Most High take that kingdom and possess it for ever, even for ever and ever; and the 27th verse shows that this kingdom which the saints possess for ever will extend to earth's remotest bounds,—under, not above—under the whole heavens. And now I will make haste to show when and how, and under what circumstances they will be put into possession of that kingdom, and installed in office. In Matt. xxv. 31-34. The very Son of Man Daniel says a universal kingdom on earth is to be given to, has something to say about it; he says that when the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then is the time that he will sit upon the throne of his glory,—and being thus seated he will address those who have been blessed with a resurrection to everlasting life in this way, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world!" That this had always been the purpose of the great God and Father, it is plain to be seen. In all the grand old Book he never gave the faintest hint that he created this earth to raise inhabitants for world's on high, or any other place. The earth was made for earth and made of earth,—and we have seen that those blessed of the Father will possess it for ever and ever. This kingdom to which he says he will invite the saints, or the blessed of the Father in the kingdom he proclaimed the coming of throughout Judea and Galilee, and which he in Matt. xxiv. 14 said should be preached in all the world; and which he referred to when he said, the kingdom of God and his Righteousness; and which he taught his disciples to pray for, by saying, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. In all these places it is the kingdom which he invites the blessed of the Father to inherit, that is referred to. Only one kingdom of God is promised from Genesis to Revelations,—and that must be on earth not in heaven, for Jesus in Matt. v. 5 teaches exactly what Daniel teaches, that they live and reign on earth. Says Jesus, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." He knew! If he had meant heaven, he would have said heaven. As he meant earth he said earth. He knew what the Father had covenanted to Abraham and himself—it is this he offers us a share of. Jehovah swore to Moses that all the earth shall be filled with his glory. This kingdom of God under the government of Christ and his saints is to accomplish the work. And when Jesus says, "Come unto me;" it is an invitation to live and reign with him in that kingdom. I do not wish you to take my word for it. He himself speaks from heaven in Rev. iii. 21, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." He will not always remain where he is as he showed us in Matt. xxv. 34, and besides that, he promised before leaving for heaven that he would come again; and the men in white apparel said to the wondering disciples when Jesus ascended, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven—and in Acts iii. 19 we read, "Repent ye therefore and be converted that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and he shall send Jesus, whom the heavens must retain until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. This, friends, is, in briefest outline, the things contained in the covenants of promise. Jesus is soul heir to all this blessedness; but WE have accepted an invitation to become joint-heirs with him, sharers with him; and are rejoicing in hope of all this blessedness. The conditions we had to comply with were: To believe all these covenants of promise; repent of our sins, be baptized into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of past sin, and live Godly, and wait for God's Son from Heaven. Will you come?

"SEEK FIRST

SINCE last issue of last week a great disaster has occurred on the Pacific Coast, especially at San Francisco. Early on Wednesday morning an earthquake shock destroyed the larger part of the business portion, and broke the water and gas pipes. Fires started and the ruins were soon in flames, and those who were caught in the fallen buildings were burned. There is no telling the number of people who were killed. The fire continued until the greater part of the city was destroyed. The people fled to other points, and money and provisions are being hurried to them as fast as trains can carry them. Some 300,000 people are homeless, with nothing to eat, and all their property destroyed. The loss is hard to estimate, but will likely reach three hundred million dollars. Several other towns were destroyed, and the shocks were felt in many parts of the United States. Most of the buildings of the State University were destroyed, and all but one of the buildings of the Le land Sanford University. Many light shocks have occurred since the great one.

THE friends who have in years past met Sister Mary Watkins, who used to live here, and is still a member of our local organization, will be pained to hear that she fell from a step recently while at the home of her grand daughter, Mrs. Grace Bates, at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and broke her right shoulder. Reports are that she is resting easy, and hopes are entertained that she will recover from the injury. Our Sister has the sympathy of all her old friends here and elsewhere.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Selections.

Rightly Dividing the Word.

Great confusion results from failure to identify and distinguish things in the Bible that are really very different.

Of course all intelligent Bible readers know that the headings and the italic words are not in the original text.

These are generally correct, but are sometimes erroneous, like the heading over Isaiah lx. "The glory of the church," when it should be Israel, the church being then a hidden mystery; and the italics in Psa. xix. 3 directly reverse the sense, and are omitted in the R. V.

1. We should distinguish the paragraphs or themes, often running over the artificial divisions of chapters. 2 Cor. vi. 14-17; vii. 1.

2. Mark that the Bible always distinguishes the singular and plural personal pronouns correctly; you always meaning more than one. Luke xxii. 31.

3. Though the whole Bible is an inspired record, it is of vital importance to notice who speaks, who is spoken to, and who is spoken of. Gen. B. F. Butler once quoted "All that a man hath will he give for his life, saying "We have the best authority for this saying," and was taken to task by Rockwood Hoar, who said he had long suspected what Gen. Butler regarded as the highest authority. Job ii. 4.

4. Note the difference between the believer's eternal life, which is a free gift, and his crown which is earned by faithful service. In 1 Corinthians ix. 25 Paul is not speaking of his eternal life but lawful service and crown of reward.

5. Notice the difference between a saint's relation to the state under a theocracy, as of Israel under the old covenant, and a state in "the times of the Gentiles." Under the former Isaiah was both a prophet and a statesman, but under the latter Paul was not an apostle and a statesman.

6. The Bible distinguishes three great classes, Jew, Gentile and Church of God. Mark when God speaks to each one severally. Do not appropriate Jewish promises of riches, power and glory. 1 Cor. x. 32.

7. Notice the difference between a commission to convert the world and one to evangelize it. If the Church held the former, after eighteen hundred years, how guilty she would be. Mark xvi. 15, 16.

8. Distinguish between the church, an out-called, a humble, suffering, swordless body, and the kingdom. The one is here: but for the coming of the King and kingdom we still pray. Matt. vi. 10.

9. Distinguish the two great resurrections, that of the righteous from among the dead at the coming of the Lord, and of the wicked dead at a later period. 1 Thess. iv. 17-18; Rev. xx. 12.

10. Distinguish between the different judgments spoken of in Gal. ii. 20; 2 Cor. v. 10; Matt. xxv. 31, 32; Rev. xx. 11-15.

11. Study the differences of the dispensations or administrations of God in redemption or you may fall into confusion and error. 2 Tim. ii. 15.

12. Never confound the blessed hope of the Lord's coming with death, for no two prophetic events in all Revelation stand out in greater contrast. Christ is the King of glory and death the king of terrors. Psa. cxiv. 7-10; Job xviii. 14.—E. P. Marvin, in Armory.

THE LORD IS MY ROCK.

Brethren and Sisters:

The Psalmist in Psalm xviii. 2 declared, "The Lord is my rock and my fortress and my deliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower." We also read in Deut. xxxii 4, "He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgments; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." And again in 1 Sam. ii. 2 we read, "There is none holy as the Lord, for there is none beside thee; neither is there any rock like our God. From these Scriptural passages there can be no doubt but that God is our rock and our foundation, for if he was the rock and foundation of the holy men of old who believed God, how can we build on any other? For if the Bible be true and we earnestly contend that it is, God made the heavens and the earth and all things, and man in his own image; and man being made of the dust of the earth into whose nostrils the breath of life was breathed and by which breath man became a living soul. Is he not yet subject to God by whom he was made, or did God create a being that did not need God for his rock foundation? No! Brothers and sisters, God did not make a being that would live forever, but a being, a free, moral agent, able to believe God and work out his own salvation by faithful obedience.

Adam and Eve were placed in the Garden of Eden with the privilege of eating of every tree of the garden, excepting the tree of good and evil, but he did not say it was not in their power to do so, but on the other hand if they did eat they should surely die. What was the consequence? Eve believed the serpent more than God, that she should not surely die, and God told Adam that as he had disobeyed he would have to go back to the ground, for out of it was he taken, and by Adam's sin death was passed upon all men, but glory to God, He did not leave us without a hope, and nothing to look forward to, but the going back to earth. He made us the promise of a Redeemer in the Seed of the woman who should bruise the serpent's head. This Seed came that we might have life and that we might have it more abundantly, and we are quickened into a lively hope by Christ having been raised from the dead. Abraham believed God and it was counted unto him for righteousness. He did not doubt God when he promised him a child when he was past age or when God took him out of his country, by faith he went, not knowing where he was going. He did not doubt but trusted in him who gave us the Scriptures which are able to make wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. But we are told by Paul in Hebrews, that Abraham as well as the faithful died, not having received the promise, but having seen them afar off embraced them and confessed that they were strangers and also that God has provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect. It is possible for us to be made perfect if we will accept the promises. This we believe we have done, and now if we do not do those things that God says, we shall die; but if we do, we shall live, and we may ever be looking forward to the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. There is one thing recorded that God cannot do and that is lie. Is this not good news that God cannot lie regarding his promises to the fathers for the hope of which promise Paul was bound in chains and through whom the gospel was preached to us Gentiles? Therefore it behooves us that we strive to enter in at the straight gate, accept God's Word with full confidence that at the appointed time we may be be found of him in peace, and woe be to any of us if we come short of the crown. Let us therefore put on the whole armor of God and above all the breastplate of faith by which we shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. That we may all attain to glory, honor and immortality is my prayer.

At the Court of Heaven.

At heaven's high court eternal justice reigns.
While in the gloomy prison I abide;
But where's my hope if justice there obtains,
If guilty of the crime for which I'm tried?

Sits there the Man who hung upon the tree,
At once my Savior, Advocate and Friend:
Heaven's court in justice can't reject his plea,
And he my case has taken to defend.

Law and Commandments.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. xxii. 14.

That it is necessary to do the commandments of God in order to obtain eternal life, is admitted; but the question is, What are the commandments required of this gospel age? Sabbatarians would tell us, they are the ten, given to Moses on tables of stone, putting special stress on the fourth and why put stress on the fourth (the Sabbath) when it is the only one that is left out by he who was "Lord of the Sabbath," as we shall show.

Are we under the Mosaic law? if so, then we are under obligation to keep all of its commandments, not the fourth in particular, but all, for "He that is guilty of one, is guilty of all." Jas. ii. 10.

The law and the commandments seem inseparably connected. They were given to the "Children of Israel," and to them alone.

By investigation we find that the law was done away in Christ. John the Baptist was a forerunner of Christ. Matt. xi. 12, 13 says, "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John."

Luke xvi. 16, says, "The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it."

John i. 17. "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth by Jesus Christ."

Acts xiii. 38, 39. "Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses."

Eph. ii. 14-16. "For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby."

Col. ii. 14-17. "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross; and having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days: which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."

Heb. x. 1, 2. "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect; for then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins."

Heb. vii. 11 to 19 and 28th verses. "If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron? For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar. For it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood. And it is yet far more evident; for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest, who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life. For he testifieth, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedek. For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by which we draw nigh unto God. For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore."

Gal. ii. 16-21. "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by works of the law; for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified. But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners, is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid. For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor. For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God. I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. I do not frustrate the grace of God; for if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain."

The 3rd chapter of Galatians is so full on this subject, that we could not get the complete sense and force of the argument by selecting special verses, we therefore quote it entire, placing special stress on verses 2, 5, 10, 11, 12, 18, 19, 21, 23, 24, and 25.

"O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you? This would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? Have ye suffered so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness. Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for, The just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith; but, the man that doeth them shall live in them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree; that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is one. Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Gal. v. 4, "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." 18th verse, "But if ye be led of the spirit, ye are not under the law."

COMMANDMENTS.

Matt. xix. 16-21: "And behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God; but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness. Honor thy father and thy mother; and, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up; what lack I yet? Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me."

Mark x. 17 to 21 and Luke xviii. 18 to 22 are almost the exact language of Matthew. Now we submit in all frankness, if Jesus designed to teach the observance of the Sabbath, here was the place to have mentioned it; but instead we hear him say, "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; therefore the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath." "For the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath." Matt. xi. 8. "And he said unto them, that the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath." Luke vi. 5.

DAY.

Paul, in Rom. xiv. 5, 6, says, "One esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks."

Gal. iv. 9, 10. "But now, after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain."

THE GREATEST COMMANDMENT.

Matt. xxii. 34 to 40. "But when the Pharisees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together. Then one of them, which was a lawyer, asking him a question, tempting him and saying, Master, which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

Luke x. 27, is almost the exact words of Matthew.

In John xiii. 34, 35, Jesus says, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

2 John v. 6. "And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it."

John xv. 12. "This is my commandment, that ye love one another, as I have loved you."

1 Tim. i. 5. "Now the end of the commandment is charity (love) out of a pure heart, and of good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."

We stated in the outset, that the fourth commandment was the only one left out in the teachings of our Lord, to be observed. The quotations given, we think clearly show that Christ did not require its observence; while the other nine are frequently mentioned and required, and indeed one could not live a good, moral Christian life without their observance.

The keeping of the fourth commandment according to the decalogue was required; our Sabbatarian friends fall far short of its proper observance. See Deut. v. 12, 13, 14.

The observance of one day in seven is proper and right, our physical natures need it, our Spiritual or Christian life requires it, and this was foreseen and ordained by the Creator in the beginning. It was on the seventh day that God rested from his labors and hallowed it.

It was the seventh day called the Sabbath that was given in the Decalogue, to the children of Israel, to be observed by them, and no other day is properly called the Sabbath. Then why and whence the change? Not by the Pope, and hence the "mark of the beast," as Sabbatarians claim; but by the "second Adam," even he who was, "In the beginning, and by whom all things were made." John i. 1, 2, 3. Jesus, who was "Lord of the Sabbath." Matt xii. 8. Luke vi. 5. "He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second." Heb. x. 9, did not require the observance of the seventh day as we have shown; and as he who "gave a new commandment," was raised from the dead on the first day of the week, John xx. 1, it was fitting and proper that that day should be kept, and was kept by his disciples. John xx. 19; Acts xx. 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; Rev. i. 10.

Notes by the Way.

I last reported the results of the work at Buffalo, Texas. Having bid good bye to the dear ones in Christ at that place, along with kindly greetings and well-wishes from Sister Watt, and her husband and three daughters, who have entered the race for the coming kingdom, I resumed my journey to Alvin, Texas, which place is situated twenty-four miles from the city of Houston, and twenty-nine miles from Galveston.

Arriving at Alvin, I was met at the depot, by Mr. Carlton, (who is a prominent dry goods merchant) and sent by carriage to his handsome home.

On arriving there I was cordially greeted and welcomed by Sister Carlton, and her mother, Sister Bentley.

They had long been readers of The Restitution, and had become familiar with my contributions to our paper, and that they felt that they did not need any formality of getting acquainted, and you can be assured that we had a delightful visit together. In this place, as it is the case in most places I visit, they had many Biblical problems for me to solve. It is certainly proverbial that the Church of God people are light-seekers. Their minds have become so illuminated by the glorious gospel of the kingdom, they become eager for an ever-increasing light.

Meetings were held in the Christian Church. They were not as largely attended as most places that I have visited in the south, yet the light radiated in the minds of some of the few who did attend. One studious young man grasped at it eagerly, and asked for literature, that he might study at home. I did not have any but I advised him to examine The Restitution. He said that he had never heard of that paper.

Another man who heard me preach on the subject, How to Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, said in the hearing of others, "Let me congratulate you on that discourse, it is the best that I ever heard."

Another man said to me, "I was brought up a Methodist, and belong to that church, but it always seemed so mysterious to me." He said, "I have been benefited by your discourse, and shall give more attention to these things than I have in the past. I hope you will visit us again. You will always be welcome." I feel that the work in the city of Alvin has not been in vain.

I found Mr. Carlton a very hospitable gentleman. He escorted me on a trip to the city of Galveston, made memorable by the sad disaster of the year 1900, where ten thousand people met fearful deaths in the death-dealing waves of the Gulf, as they rolled upon the busy city of Galveston.

As we were crossing the Bay in order to reach the island, on which the city is built, we could see some of the remnants of wrecked bridges. One section which was entirely swept away. Mr. Carlton explained that that was caused by a great War Steamer, which the furious waves threw sideways against the bridge. It would certainly be difficult for a person to conceive of the exceeding violence of the furious storm. The Bay is about three miles wide. On reaching the island, Mr. Carlton showed me some of the most prominent places of interest on the island. We then took the street cars for the Gulf. The wind was strong, and it was truly an inspiring sight to see those great white-capped waves dash upon the beach. I could feel the invigorating effect of the fresh salt-water breeze. Thousands of people constantly enjoy the luxury of bathing in the salt water.

I was interested in examining the great sea wall that has been built since the memorable flood. The wall is some fifteen feet high. It is a concave wall, built to suit the form of the waves. The wall is about four miles long, covering the front of the city. In the front of the wall a heap of great rocks is piled up the entire length of the wall. This serves as a breakwater, it breaks the force of the waves before they can reach the wall.

The land surface of the city is being filled in even with the top of the wall. They are filling in the city for fifteen blocks back from the wall, where it meets the portion of the city previously filled in. This will make the city fifteen feet above the sea level. The people feel that this will be a protection against future sea storms.

The new houses are built upon high stilts, so that they will not be buried up when the filling in reaches them. This makes a strange sight.

In many places Galveston has a tropical appearance. The great palm trees, together with other tropical plants and shrubs contribute to this effect. In some places they plant palm trees along by the sidewalks, as we do shade trees.

I enjoyed the trip so much. The kindly attentions of Mr. Carleton made it much more pleasant than it could otherwise have been.

We then took the train back to Alvin, and reached there in time for the night service.

The orange trees were in bloom. Mr. Carlton showed me one orange tree on his grass lawn from which he said that he picked three hundred oranges last year.

At Alvin large quantities of vegetables and strawberries were being shipped to markets in the north while I was there.

In the Carlton family are two interesting daughters who are about finishing their education. In finishing their education, I trust that they will not neglect the study of the Holy Scriptures, as no persons education is complete without it. It is an education which leads to greater nobility of character, which is rich in results.

My work for the present being concluded at Alvin, and the time for parting come, we bid each other an affectionate farewell. I then took the train for Crowley, Louisiana.

On arriving there I was cordially welcomed by Brother and Sister Haupt and family, consisting of one son and two daughters, the entire family are baptized believers of the gospel of the kingdom. I had a very pleasant visit with them all. Circumstances were unfavorable for holding meetings at Crowley, at this time, consequently none were held. Brother Haupt and myself visited the Jewish services. I next visited Iota, La. Rice is the main product of this part of Louisiana. The farmers were busy sowing their seed just at this time, so meetings were only held on Saturday night, and twice on Sunday, which were quite satisfactory. The truth as far as spoken took effect so strongly in some minds that we feel sure will lead to obedience. Brother and Sister Farley, and Brother and Sister Horn are earnest believers in the grand old gospel of the kingdom. In both these families are quite a company of young people who are pretty well instructed in the Word of truth, and also take an interest in it. I look for quite a number of baptisms when I visit this place again. May God's blessing attend his faithful few at Iota.

From Iota I again took the train for Crowley, and remained over night and then took the train in the morning for Hammond, La., by way of New Orleans. Brother Albert met me at the Hammond depot, and took me to his home. So I am once more with my old Pine Woods Bible class. At this date (April 19,) meetings are in progress at the Christian Church. The next day while walking the streets of the city we met face to face with our faithful Brother Lud. We were much pleased to meet each other again.

I will report the work at this place later on.

I greatly anticipate the pleasure of meeting my loved ones at home very soon now, after an absence of some three months.

I feel in closing this present trip, it has been a profitable one for the cause of Christ. The good seed has found lodgment in many minds. Five have obeyed the gospel, and are making the race for the kingdom. May God care for the seed sown, and prosper those who have obeyed.

During my next rest at home it is my intention to see to the printing of Pine Woods Bible Class Book, if I shall find that sufficient has been received during my absence to pay the necessary expense of the printing, and send it forth on its seed-sowing mission.

Dear ones in Christ, may each one of us live the pure and holy life of our Master, and be ready at all times for his coming.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.
W. H. Wilson.

Genuine Vs. Sham Holiness.

Every good thing in this world is counterfeited. Hence, we hear of and see so many imitations which frequently amount to actual perversions. But the genuine article is easily discovered, and the sham stands out so much the more prominently. Actions speak louder than words, and these are oftentimes a true index of the condition of the heart. Perhaps there is nothing that is more frequently counterfeited than genuine holiness. There are certain obvious marks whereby such counterfeit holiness is discoverable. We will mention some:

1. A peculiar and hackneyed phraseology in public utterances.

2. It sets up a standard of its own, and by this standard its advocates judge everything and everybody but themselves. They criticise the pastor's prayers, testimonies, the method he employs to guide and quicken the activities of the church, if it differs from their narrow standard. They talk often and talk long. Such people are the hardest in the world to preach to; neither an angel nor Jesus Christ could please them.

3. Another indication of a sham holiness is a spirit of fault-finding and of censoriousness. They would sooner fight even about and over holiness than to promote peace. If they cannot fight some one or some thing they are not in their element.

4. An ungovernable and defiant spirit. Their tongues are like poisoned arrows when let loose. They are self-centered people. They chafe under discipline. They want to be a law unto themselves. As long as others are held down by discipline they say, glory! but when discipline is applied to them, they think it is an awful sin! They care little for the church. They are greater and better than the church, church law or church officials. They know more and are far more in advance of the pastor and church regulations and authorities.

True Scriptural holiness has its characteristics whereby it can be known. 1 Cor. xiii. presents it in its true light.

1. The people who enjoy it live it.

2. They have little to say about themselves, but a great deal about Christ.

3. They have sanctified commonsense and sanctified tongues.

They avoid wranglings and janglings and backbitings. They are saved from a supersensitiveness. "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." True holiness will stand that test every time. Individuals may be grieved at uprisings in the church, but they are the first to act the part of peace-makers, but never peace disturbers. They seek by all honorable means to promote unity. They grieve, weep and pray when contentions arise. They would rather suffer wrong than do wrong. They "pray for the peace of Jerusalem and for the prosperity of Zion."—W. H. Bucks.

To believe in Christ's supernatural advent, his perfect character, his true and wise sayings, does not reach the measure and quality of the faith that he himself prescribes. A belief that is unto salvation, a faith that will lead to eternal life, this must arise from looking unto Christ as lifted up upon the cross. His dying on the cross was as truly in the plan of his religion, as was his advent, his preaching, his miracles and his life of truth and love.

Selections.

Quotations from Scripture.

The neglect with which people treat the Holy Scriptures, is plainly shown in the constant misquotations which are heard both from the pulpit and in the less formal utterances of Christian men. Sitting in a meeting for prayer and conference one evening, the writer heard a minister quote three passages two of which were quoted wrongly, and also misapplied in a manner that showed that they were misunderstood as well as misquoted.

More than this, words are often quoted as Scripture which are not in the Bible and never were. Thus men will quote "God did from all eternity unchangeably forordain whatsoever comes to pass"—from the Catechism; "In the midst of life we are in death," from the prayer book; "He tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," from an old novel; and a multitude of similar expressions which they are sure they can find in the Bible, but which nevertheless are not there. And one of the worst features in the case is, half the people do not know, or seem to care, whether they are listening to the Word of God or the word of man.

It is related that soon after the late Salmon P. Chase assumed the gubernatorial chair in Ohio, he issued his proclamation appointing a Thanksgiving Day. To make sure of being orthodox, the governor composed his proclamation almost exclusively of passages from the Bible, which he did not designate as quotations, presuming that every one would recognize them, and admire the fitness of the words, as well as his taste in their selection.

The proclamation met the eyes of an editor of an opposition paper, who pounced upon it at once, declared he had read it before—he couldn't say exactly where; but he would take his oath that it was a downright plagiarism from beginning to end.

That would have been sufficiently remarkable, but the next day the editor of a paper which supported Gov. Chase came out valiantly in defence of the governor, pronounced the charge false and libellous, and challenged any man living to produce one single line of the proclamation that had ever appeared in print before.

A flood of light and trashy literature, copious as the waters that issued from the dragon's mouth, threatens to overwhelm the Word of God, and leave us without a rock on which to rest our feet or stay our hopes. We shall never find firm footing until the oracles of God become our choicest treasure, until his statutes become our counselors and our delight. A time will come to us when, like the dying Walter Scott, we shall say—"There is but one Book."

Happy shall we be if we have followed its teachings in life, and are comforted by its promises when every earthly comfort shall fail us.—Safeguard.

Manners impress as they indicate real power. Nature forever puts a premium on reality. What is done for effect is seen to be done for effect; what is done for love is felt to be done for love. A man inspires affection and honor because he was not lying in wait for these.—Emerson.

Towards the soul which places itself in the attitude of reception all things flow.

The beam of the benevolent eye giveth value to the bounty which the hand disperses.

WE wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

The God-Breathed Word.

The apostle tells us that the Scriptures is "God breathed," or as our version has it, "given by inspiration of God." The breath of God breathes through the words of God. Holy men "spake from God as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

There was a human element involved; human instrumentalities were employed, and human characteristics are exhibited. A man playing on a flute makes a different sound from that he makes playing on a fife. From a flageolet he draws a different note from that he produces on a trombone. But one man may play the same tune on all these instruments, and the notes will, all of them be breathed by him alone.

So the Spirit of God has spoken through shepherds, statesmen, peasants, herdsmen, fishermen, princes, kings, exiles, prisoners, men of every age, class, grade and century; the expression and voice being different, and yet, one breath spoke through all of them, for they were "moved by the Holy Ghost."

God speaks to the sons of men; let us hear his voice; assured that in hearing we listen not to the words which men's wisdom dictates, but to the words which the Holy Ghost has uttered for our instruction, admonition, regeneration and salvation.—Armory.

Notice is given that the brethren at Fonthill, Ontario, expect to have a special gathering—an all-day meeting on Sunday, May 27 next. We invite all lovers of truth to meet with us on this occasion. We expect three or four speakers. Any further information in respect to this meeting can be obtained by corresponding with the undersigned.

Our Helping Fund

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is represented by some one known to be trust worthy.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Announcement.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother,

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 624 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

Poetry.

Give Them Now.

If you have gen'rous words and looks, my friends,
To spare for me—if you have tears to shed,
That I have suffered—keep them not, I pray,
Until I hear not, see not, being dead.

If you have flow'rs to give—fair lily buds,
White roses, dahlias (meadow-stars that be Mine own dear namesakes)—let them smile and make [illegible]
For loving looks, though fraught with tenderness,
And kindly tears, though they fall thick and fast.
And words of praise, alas! can not avail
To lift the shadows from a life that's past.

And sweet blossoms, what can they suffice,
Offered to one who can no longer gaze
Upon their beauty? Flow'rs in coffins laid
Impart no sweetness to departed clays.

Is Christ Divided?

In these days of the apostasy there are many strange ideas presented in the name of Christianity. The so-called Christian world has been dividing into factions. Today we have a babel of voices all calling in the name of the crucified Christ. Each having its own peculiar plan of salvation. Those who believe the gospel of the kingdom of God and are isolated are sought after and requested to seek a home among the sects. Now my dear brother or sister, if you are deprived of the fellowship among those "of like precious faith," you cannot gain strength by attempting to live with those who have no truth. After we have arisen from the watery grave we are admonished to walk with him. How can you obey this injunction if you join yourself to a false faith and worship with those who worship idols. Who among the so-called Christian world believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God? Not one. Their doctrines nullify this blessed truth. Then how can we worship with them and build up a Christian character? We are attempting to gather figs of thistles and grapes of bramble bushes. It is through the reception of the truth that we are made strong in Christ. Not long ago I was requested to make a home among those calling themselves Disciples. I was informed that I might hold to my peculiar views and nothing would be said about it. I answered, I am aware that you would bear with me but I cannot have the patience to bear with your error. Since then nothing has been said about my making a home with them. I respect many of these people, but cannot regard them as my brethren. They argue that you should belong to some branch of the church in order to show to the world that you are a Christian. Applying this to the sects it is all right but applying it to us is all wrong. If you have obeyed that form of doctrine from the heart you are a member of the body of which Christ is the head. The Bible is your text book from which you must learn to rightly divide the Word of truth. The food that will strengthen you must be gleaned from the Scriptures.

Listen to the Apostle Paul in 1 Cor. 1., It hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you. Now this I say that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I am of Apolos; and I am of Cephas; and I am of Christ. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? or were you baptized in the name of Paul? There is but one name into which we can be baptized that will remit our sins and that is the name of Christ. If you have taken his name upon you then you become his and must abide there. What a beautiful figure we have in the vine. In John xv. we have this figure. I am the true vine and my Father is the husbandman. Now note the following. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. You cannot bear fruit if you are laboring to build up those who are opposed to the truth. You are daubing with untempered mortar. You are not abiding in the vine. Now ye are clean through the Word which I have spoken unto you. This is the truth that shall make you free. If you have cast your lot among the sects for a home and speak the Word that Christ gave his apostles you become a disturbing element and are so informed. If you remain quiet you sacrifice the truth for error and a home among those who slay Christ's [illegible] death and resurrection. It is through the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ that we are made partakers of his divine nature. It is through ignorance that we are alienated from that life of God. Jesus says, "Abide in me, and I in you, as the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye except ye abide in me." You divorce yourself from Christ when you join yourself to another.

Listen to Paul in Rom. vii. 4: "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God."

Again Jesus says, "I am the vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abideth not in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered, and men gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned." No language can be stronger than this. The vine has its root in the good soil which our heavenly Father has made. The true vine draws sustenance from this soil and nurtures the branches. God is the husbandman of this vine, and will purge it that it may bring forth fruit. If you have that abiding faith you will bear fruit and those around you will see it, and some will acknowledge it. There can be no compromise. You are either Christ's or you are not. If you join yourself to a harlot you know the result.

Again Paul says, Rom. vii. 2, 3, The woman who hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead she is loosed from the law of her husband. So it while her husband liveth she be married to another man she shall be called an adultress; but if her husband be dead, she is no adultress though she be married to another. While this is applied in a natural way I think it is also applicable to those who divorce themselves from Christ to whom they have been joined by faith, repentance and immersion. We should remember that the husband to whom we have been married can never die, as he has been raised to an immortal life.

We submit the above in love. Your brother in the "Blessed Hope."

Miracles. No. 3.

Mr. Ingersoll said that in order to prove a miracle it would be necessary to perform another miracle, and so on without end. This was his reductio ad absurdum. So in his view it is impossible to prove a miracle, even though one was wrought. He ruled the testimony out and then there remained no proof that a miracle was wrought! But the Christian, whose all is at stake, whose hope of the future rests on the supernatural intervention of Jehovah, as he verily believes, is not to be scared by bold and confident statements made by these modern destructive critics. Testimony of the witnesses is to be heard in this court of inquiry into the extraordinary events alleged.

It is to be borne in mind that the real facts of history have gone into the history of the world and have made the world what it is. These facts cannot now be detached from the present condition of the enlightened nations of the earth. These are what they are because it was believed that Christ lived and wrought miracles in attestation of his claims, and having been put to death was raised again to life. 1. Those facts were attested to by the men who saw them, and put what they saw on record. 2. It was not for any worldly consideration that they proclaimed to friends and foes the supernatural events that occurred before their own eyes. 3. They abandoned the opinions in which they had been schooled and disciplined because they believed those facts, sacrificing all their prejudices on the ground of that belief. 4. Homes and friends were given up for the sake of the truth to which they yielded assent against the belief of their own countrymen. 5. Reproach, calumny, persecution, and death in its most frightful forms, were not sufficient to turn them from the course they had entered on. 6. Bribes and terrors were powerless to cause them to waver in their statements, or doubt the things they believed. 7. Not one of them ever breathed a suspicion that he had himself been deceived, and that he and those with whom he was associated had conspired to deceive the world. 8. They bore their testimony in the "Augustinian age of learning," before the most intelligent and cultivated; in cities where schools abounded, and art was patronized, and the facts they proclaimed were believed. From what has been stated every reasonable person is forced to admit their honesty and strength of conviction, and there is every reason to believe in their competency. The miracles were wrought under circumstances that were such that to not believe the facts would have done violence to the minds of these witnesses. The human mind is constructed to perceive facts as they occur in the range of the senses, therefore, faith in the existence or occurrence of the facts is as natural as breathing. On the ground of belief in the miracles the Christian religion was propagated in the first century of our era, spreading until it overturned every idol altar, vacated every pagan temple, and banished all the old superstitions which had for centuries bewitched the people of the civilized world. In the light of it the world took a new start, a new element was infused in its civilization; from henceforth human thought was diverted from old channels to flow along other lines, and history was written by other pens than pagan ones. It could never be what it once was; a powerful influence was at work modifying and shaping human action and human lives.

When Edward Gibbon set himself to the task of writing the history of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire he found that Christianity must be reckoned with, and a theory of its origin and progress put before the world. He agrees with the Christian that belief in miracles by the early propagators was a principal factor in its rapid spread over the Roman world in the first century, but disagrees with him as to the actual occurrence of these marvelous events. Gibbon could sneer at, Ingersol ridicule, and Foster deny the reality of miracles, but no reasonable man who examines the credibility of the witnesses, the conditions under which these events took place, and learns that these cannot be duplicated by any of the supposed miracles of the heathen world, by those of the Catholic church, and by those alleged to have been wrought at the tomb of the Abby of Paris, can have any doubt as to the actual occurrence of the Christian miracles. These stand alone in their grandeur, unparalled by any thing outside of the Bible. Historical criticism can scatter these pseudo miracles to the winds, and undermine all faith in them, but when it has done this with these, Bible miracles stand unassailed, and unassailable. I grant that historical criticism has done much to rid the world of its superstitions, its belief in witchcraft, necromancy, sooth-saying, sorcery and divination, and reduced many of the marvels of the ancients to the reign of natural law. Spiritism is about to rank in the same category. We will see when the investigation is carried further. Whatever science has done to relieve the world of its nightmare of [illegible]on and consequent dread and [illegible] constantly occurring prodigies [illegible]y nook and corner of nature, [illegible] not touched Bible miracles. [illegible] can not be resolved into facts [illegible] explained by natural law, nor c[illegible] be philosophically placed on the [illegible]ground with witch-craft, sorc[illegible] divination, nor disposed of in [illegible] way as those alleged to have [illegible]ught to the early church [illegible] the days of the apostles. [illegible] with the supposed miracles of the heathen world and the Roman Catholic church; so they must be treated as a class by themselves.

Coming back to the witnesses of the Christian miracles: 1, They had every thing of a worldly nature to lose and nothing to gain. Wealth and fame and ease were not before them, but the opposite, privation, poverty, reproach, and to be esteemed the offscouring of all things, and to have before them the prospect of a martyr's death preceded by all the exquisite, and refined torture that the skill, and the ingenuity that devils in shape of men could inflict. 2. The place where they bore their testimony touching the resurrection of the Lord was Jerusalem, the scene of his betrayal, suffering and death. 3. The time, the first Pentecost after that passover that witnessed the events connected with his tragic end. There was no waiting till the history of those passover days grew old and half-forgotten. 4. To whom testified? To Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven—zealots for the law, together with enemies whose hands were still reeking with the blood of the Son of God. 5. At the passover when Jesus was in the hands of his betrayers and murderers, these witnesses were shrinking and cowardly, but now in the presence of these same men, positive and bold and with the courage of their convictions charging upon them the crime of the crucifixion of that just man, coupling with the charge the astounding facts that God had raised him from the dead, and seated him at his own right hand, and that what the assembled multitude saw and heard was proof of these two facts. It is no wonder that the thousands present on this occasion were amazed, and that they marvelled, saying to one another, "Behold, are not all these who speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue wherein we were born." Acts ii. 7, 8. 6. Paul in 1 Cor. xv. enumerates above five hundred witnesses to the fact of our Lord's resurrection. No event in all history is better attested than this and on this great foundation fact the history of the world for nearly nineteen hundred years can be explained.

JOHN L. WINCE.

Evangelizing Trip.

I started my work at Oleander, Cal., on the 20th of March, with the purpose of holding three meetings, and going on to San Francisco to see my daughter, Mrs. Grace Lawrence, who was being treated for cancer at that time in that city. I felt greatly disappointed, because she had decided that she would return home before I reached her, but glad that the remedy had proven successful. Spent a week among friends in that city, and the beautiful towns of Santa Rosa and Berkley. And now we have additional reasons for thankfulness. It is for her providential escape from this terrible earthquake, and greater disaster by fire that followed.

On my way north I had purposed on making a short stay at San Francisco, Santa Rosa and Berkley, which would have been likely to have fallen on the date of the earthquake, yesterday the 18th. On account of my daughter's relief I returned to the work at Oleander. She escaped because of her speedy relief, and we were not in the doomed city, both saved from danger of the most appalling calamity that ever visited the United States. Having heard of the disaster, and having near relatives living in Berkley and San Francisco, I closed my meetings last night, and hastened to Berkley; and as I write from this place the news has been confirmed, that Santa Rosa is leveled to the ground, and from Berkley we can have a faint idea of the death dealing havoc being dealt out under the smoke-pall that hangs over the half million people of sufferers at San Francisco, mingled with their dead and dying. This is a scene witnessed by but few generations.

We think of Sodom and her sister city; yet we cannot believe that San Francisco has been so much worse than other cities of our times. Though prosperity has created that greed that knows only the worship of mammon, condemnation would come alike to other localities, and we are ready with our reasoning to conclude, that this earthquake and this destroying fire are the result of fixed laws, and that this is not a special judgment on a portion of humanity, while others are exempt. Be that as it may be, the most terrible calamity that has ever befallen a city of our nation, is with in sight, and we can hear the explosion of the dynamite that is used to lay level with the ground millions worth of property, to save other millions; and can sadly see that the fighters of the flames have not conquered, for the flames leap up through the clouds of gloom, and go on in the conquest of destruction and death. Hundreds of thousands are homeless, suffering from the anguish of loosing their homes, and many of them from losing their friends, who were snatched away with the awakening hour of that 18th day of April, 1906, when the crashing buildings crushed them, and the burning flames consumed them. The date and its events will always be nailed to the brains of those that are spared from the destruction.

Over in the city a few are praying, many are cursing. Some will look at their ruined homes and thank God that their lives are saved; others will curse God for the loss of home. We are told that over there, thieves instead of helping the suffering, are looting them. That beings in the form of men are mingled in a drunken, dead stupor, with those that the earthquake crushed to death, and the fire partly consumed. This is a sad picture of humanity, but it shows to the life and to the death, the world we live in. Well may we long and pray for the coming of the Deliverer.

On the 20th I went from Berkley to Oakland to look at the devastation of the earthquake, which compared with the crush of buildings on the other side of the bay is slight; and yet on every side we could see the evidence of the destructive work of a few minutes. But few buildings in Oakley or Berkley have chimneys left. In the business part numerous houses of brick were torn down; while standing almost uninjured, among the partly destroyed, a block of eleven stories high was scarcely harmed; this is on account of the steel frame in its construction. Hundreds of refugees followed each other in line, getting passes for free transportation from the city, issued at the city hall. We found a crush of people at the depot, intent on getting away from the disaster. The piles of luggage awaiting shipment, and the variety was astonishing, and as with many the trunks, boxes and bundles were all the owners had saved, the crowd again awakened our sympathy.

Visited Bro. Thomas Wilson, editor of "Last Days," and found that he had suffered no mishaps, but the shaking down of a chimney, and some shelves and printed matter. We spent an hour or two in forming acquaintance and talking over incidents connected with our work. A pleasant interview, the first and perhaps the last, as our field of labor may be hundreds of miles apart.

At the finishing of this letter the fire is partly under control, and fragments of the once beautiful city may be saved, and as the relatives that I had especial concern for, occupied that portion we hope for additional reasons for thankfulness. Propose to go on to Wolf, Cal., in the morning to hold meetings, and from there to Central Point, Oregon.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath [illegible] by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, IND[illegible] MAY 2, 1906. NUMBER 17.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Dear Restitution:

I feel it my duty to let the Household of Faith know through THE RESTITUTION of my cure of cancer of the breast, that any one so afflicted might know where to go for treatment. One week ago today I returned to my home from Dr. S. R. Chamley of San Francisco, Cal., having spent just two weeks at his office, and having had while there two cancers removed without the knife and with but little pain. One was in the left breast and about three inches in diameter while the other was small and in the arm pit. I now have the larger one preserved in alcohol as proof of what has been done for me, thinking it might be the means of helping others so afflicted. I cannot speak too highly of the Doctor and nurses at this institute, their kindness to their patients and their success in curing this disease, which by so many is pronounced as being incurable. But most important of all is, that one does not delay in this disease, as they do not take a case unless they are sure of effecting a cure. After being there and seeing people come every day and many refused as having let it go too far, I felt that I should like to speak a word of warning, thinking that it might benefit some one. We read many advertisements in our papers and often wonder if we can depend on them, but these doctors are all right. Some might think that it had been so short a time that we would not yet know whether the cure would be permanent, but we have a sister in this State who was cured by the same treatment about five years ago, and is enjoying good health or was the last time we heard from her, and it was through her influence that I went. But I must also add that we did not go without first offering many prayers for guidance and we have faith that all will be well and that I may be spared to help raise our little ones. And how thankful we feel that there is a cure for this dreadful disease and that we learned of it before it was too late. And I will say for the benefit of the brethren who live in the East that Dr. Chamley has an office in St. Louis, Mo., and one or two other large cities of the East. If any one should wish to correspond with me in regard to this address, Etna, Wash.

Announcement.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.
EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the Camp-grounds at Waterloo, Iowa, from Aug. 18th to 26th inclusive. Programme will be announced later.

O. J. ALLARD, Pres.
MRS. EVA L. STEARNS, Sec.

WE wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

"Not My Will, But Thine."

Brethren and sisters, through the week I have been longing for Sunday to come again, because our blessed Lord has appointed to be here, and I was anxious to meet him and receive his blessing. Besides this I wanted to look into the faces of others that beam with hope and love; and in addition to this I have been thinking of the solemn words of the Scriptural lesson recently read to us before partaking of the emblems. The utterances of him who was spending the last hours of his mortal career with his disciples before he suffered. Amongst which was the sad announcement that one of the little group by which he was surrounded, should betray him. I thought of the anguish the dear heart must have suffered, from the knowledge that one of those who had ostensibly espoused his cause should prove a foul traitor to it. I followed the little band, (except Judas) who had gone to secure the shameful price for which he sold his Lord; I followed them to the Mount of Olives—heard him tell the disciples to pray, that they enter not into temptation. Saw him withdraw about a stone's throw and kneel down and pray, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me, nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." In imagination I saw the heavenly messenger who came to strengthen him; and the agony that caused him to pray more earnestly, and could see his sweat, as it were great falling upon the ground; saw him rise and go over to his disciples, and saw his disappointment at finding them asleep, instead of awake, able to sympathize with him in this dark hour. I heard his remonstrance,—"Why sleep ye, rise and pray; lest ye enter into temptation." I felt they were still oblivious of what was to happen. They anticipated no temptation that would put their faith and loyalty to the test. They were full of sorrow, but hardly knew why. They knew something was going to happen, but I think they imagined that after all the manifestations of divine power they had seen, there was no doubt that whenever the crisis should come, and however it may come, he would rise to the occasion, as he had done before; and that the dark pictures of his suffering and death would be sure to vanish, and the kingdom promised and longed for would surely come soon. It is plain to be seen, that an indescribable sadness had come over the blessed Jesus soon after entering the garden. It says he began to be sorrowful and very heavy; as if some mysterious apprehension oppressed his mind. And the way Mark depicts it: "He began to be sore amazed" makes me think that he had suddenly come to realize some phase of his trial that threatened to shatter his mind. On returning to his disciples, he said, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." A great deal of speculation as to the cause of this great depression was found expression orally and written. Many think that the load of others guilt was being laid upon him and almost crushed him. Others think that evil spirits attacked him with all the power at their command, but this is so wide of the truth that it cannot be entertained for a moment. Others that the horrors of a death by crucifixion were almost more than he could bear. Others that suggested that the end to be attained by his death could be attained in some other way." I have no confidence in any of these theories or suggestions. The fact that he hastened back to his three friends like one who in his feebleness welcomes the slightest support and consolation; and his words, "Watch with me," suggests to me, that weakness and loneliness was what oppressed him. Meaning: "Do not leave me, your presence comforts me. "Tarry ye, here." Indeed he must have been in a great extremity when the sight of these frail disciples seemed so desirable to him. It seems to me that he could not have besought them in this manner if he had seen heaven opened above him, and realize that, as hitherto, he was in his Father's bosom. I think the agony of the garden was caused by a foretaste of what he realized in all its fulness, when on the cross he cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" I think the fact that he had to die had fully come home to him, and that the Father-Spirit would leave him and was leaving already, and he would have to suffer alone. I cannot think that he regretted that he had undertaken the work of redemption; but, as intimated, that the cup of agony now presented to him was—being forsaken of his Father. From Mark's account of this affecting incident, I am led to think that he had not expected to be forsaken of the Father. He says:—"He began to be sore amazed" at something. The original word implies a sudden and horrifying alarm at a terrific object. And so we have now to look at him as one of us, without special possession of Spirit. Of course it was in flesh and blood he was required to develope a character without spot; but he was enabled to do this by a measureless supply of the Spirit. But the closing act of the wonderful drama could not be shared by the Spirit. He partook of our sinful nature and in this nature he had to die under the law of sin and death.

HIS SELFHOOD

THE WILL

of this flesh was to be overcome. The flesh detests mental, as well as physical suffering, and tries to evade it; and this it was that cried out under the agony, as I believe, of being forsaken of the Father. But, under angelic ministry he was able to overcome it, so that when he comes again to the drowsy disciples it is in quite a different tone. The cup had for the time being been emptied. His deportment is essentially changed, and indicates courage, manliness, victory. He came forth a conqueror, and prepared for what was to follow. What does he say? "Sleep on, now,"—meaning that they need watch no longer on his account—he required their assistance no longer,—his conflict was ended. If this reproof is not a keen, ironical reproof I do not know what it is. "It is enough,"—what do these words mean? If not that their slumbers will cease of themselves,—stirring events were upon them that would not allow them to sleep—"Behold the Son of Man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

"RISE UP!" LET US GO!

Lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand. He is ready and eager for the conflict now,—"Rise, let us go," not to get out of the way, observe,—but to start off to meet the traitor and his band. In Heb. v. 7, 8 we read that in the days of his flesh, he offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears;" and the apostle says he was heard in that he feared;" this seems to confirm my impression that it was the cup of mental agony that was the subject of his prayers and tears. Possibly he was alarmed lest that cup would kill him, and frustrate the sacrifice he was ready to make. But no one before me will doubt but it was the words "Not my will, but thine be done," that brought him relief. I have had them in mind all the time, but could not reach them directly after introducing the narrative. It is an enchanting story, and I love to dwell upon it.

The balance of my time I will devote to the lesson taught us by the example of the Lord, viz., Submission to God's will; or the subjection of our own will. "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." According to Heb. v. 7, 8, the Lord was actually struggling in the agonies of death, and his own words prove the correctness of it, "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." Here the measure as well as the kind of suffering is set forth. It was sorrow; it was agony, and the measure of it constituted it a struggle with death. But bless his dear name, he said, amid it all, "nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." And brethren and sisters in the Lord, we have been bought with a price, O, such a price! We are the Lord's property, and he requires from us, that his will, not our own, should dominate our lives. Yes; this is required of us. Such self-abnegation is difficult to the natural man. But some natural men attain to it. Yes; it is rare; but there have been men whose will was so powerful and their manner so charming that others have followed them implicitly, even when life and every thing were placed in great jeopardy. When Garibaldi made a call for volunteers to fight for a united Italy, he described the sort of men he needed, depicted the hardships it would surely involve, and very likely death at last. The response was prompt and vigorous: "We are the men you want. We are ready to face those conditions; and they did, too. They delivered themselves over to him, did his bidding—reposed in his judgment,—and had no will of their own. We have voluntarily enlisted under the banner of the cross. And in proportion as we rise to the conception of our true union with him we will do as Garibaldi's men did. To look at the matter from another point of view: "A victorious commander makes his own conditions for the vanquished. They would arrange things differently. They would like to march out with drums beating and bands playing and arms in hand. Not so, are they allowed to do. A full surrender is required. Drums and band silent—arms laid down. They are prisoners of war. So it is with the Captain of our salvation—a full surrender of our will is required of us. We admit that the love of Christ constrained us to take this action; and the test of our loyalty is, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Obedience and love go together; and by force of reasoning, we see love and disobedience cannot co-exist. This will-surrender is, however, only exacted of those who are

IN CHRIST.

It is not exacted of men who love the world, nor the formal professor, who is to be by and by rejected. But of the willing, loving children of God, it is exacted. It is necessary to Christ's honor—necessary to further the work of taking out men to rule the world in righteousness. It is also necessary to the highest personal interests of his loved ones. You all regard the relation of the Church to the Lord, as that of Bride and Bridegroom; having been taught by the Spirit, by means of the marriage tie, that while he vows to love and cherish and protect his Bride, we vow to love, honor and obey our Bridegroom.

This will-surrender must be made to none but God and Christ. To no other must we say "Thy will be done." Our Bridegroom may well be Lord to his bride, as Abraham to his Sarah, because he is perfect, and possesses everything to call forth love, trust, honor and obedience. Certainly our will-surrender should be to him. He is the Head of our Body. The will resides in the head, not the trunk. It is the head which controls the body. So it is his prerogative and privilege, as our head in whom the will inheres to control us as the members of his body.

Another reason why we should surrender ourselves to him, is because our judgment is so faulty. Oh how thick have been the errors along the path we have trod. If we had kept close to the law of the Lord how different the past. Still another reason is, the uncertainty of our wills. Sometimes weak and pliant when they should be strong and firm as a rock. Then again they are dogged and unbending when they should be pliant and yielding. Often saying yes, when no, is alone justified. Often saying no, when yes should be used, and, if need were, ten thousand times repeated with growing emphasis. The words "Thy will be done," should be—ah, must be ours if we obtain the abundant entrance. So chose not Adam. It was God's purpose to crown obedient lives with glory, honor and immortality. It was Adam's will to reach knowledge by a short cut. Alas! He had his own way. So chose not Lot; and his unfortunate experience has been placed as a beacon light and a warning to us. Unlike Abraham his uncle, Lot chose his own way and will. How marked the contrast! Abraham was honored and prospered;—became "the father of the faithful, and the friend of God;" while Lot was stripped and dishonored, although literally pulled out of the fire. How much better it would have been for him to have said, "Not my will, uncle; you do the chosing."

So willed not Peter. Said he, "Not so, Lord" when told to "rise, kill and eat." He wanted only Jews to have access to the covenants of promise,—but was it not a blessed think for us that God's will prevailed over Peter's? Yes; Gentile dogs that we were, God's will prevailed over Peter's. Happily for Peter that he too at last said, "Not my will, but thine be done." The will of God upward is in the gospel, and invites us to the fellowship of himself and truly our fellowship is with the Father, with his Son Jesus Christ. And the apostle adds: "And these things write we unto you that your joy may be full." This, then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. I am anxious all should see what this means. It means to be a fellow of, in the sense of being identical in faith, disposition, principle, practice, taste, intention and relationship. To have fellowship with the apostles is to stand in their position, is defined as one of fellowship with the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ. To call men into this position is the object of the truth; which is impossible if they walk in darkness. By this you must understand that a person who merely knows the truth intellectually, but walks in darkness is none the better, for his knowledge deceives him, if he imagines it exists, constitutes him a son of God. The truth is an agency only; the gospel is only a means,—and unless the end proposed is realized the means are a failure. The end proposed in the first place is to give us fellowship with the Father. To do this it must cause us to walk in the light John speaks of,—God is light and in him is no darkness at all, either physical or moral. What John speaks of is this: God is wise, and holy and righteous and merciful in his methods. And if we traverse the whole circle of nature we will find beneficence the ultimate law of wisdom. But do not forget it, the rules of wisdom are never slackened to give beneficence a longer rope.

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD,

JUSTICE AND RIGHTEOUSNESS

hold the reins with an unflinching hand. The noiseless machinery of eternal, unvarying law is perfect in all its parts; and this reveals to us the character of God, and enables us to make a practical use of Jesus' words, "Be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect." Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. So that although we have an inferior nature which if left to itself will gravitate downward to the earth, we are capable of being made different; capable of becoming new men; capable of approximating to divine things,—that it is possible for us to be drawn up as well as drawn down. We have no impulse within ourselves to go up. It must come from without. But obtaining a lodgment from without, it becomes a power within. This power is the truth. This is the means of our elevation. It is placed in our hands, and we are responsible for the use or disuse of it. This, dear brothers, is the basis of our responsibility. If you are wise you will appreciate and use it. You can only be the children of the light by dwelling in the light; you can only be holy by breathing the holy atmosphere of the Scriptures; none of us can be come righteous without subjecting ourselves to those intellectual and moral impulses that induce righteousness,—and these come from the Scriptures. We have to walk in the counsel of God. It is here in this blessed book

GOD SHINES UPON US!

All his ways of looking at things are shown to us here. And if we are ignorant of them, it is because we have not used the means he has given us of knowing them. It would seem as if there is scarcely a thing that God could say to us but what he has said. Certainly so far as principles are concerned, he could say no more. He has told us enough to make us wise unto salvation. He could tell us exactly what his political programme is between now and the coming of Christ, and the exact date of that event, and such-like facts, but he has not seen it fit to do so;—but as to the principles that should regulate our lives, he has told us everything. O, if we could all say that we walk in the light as he would have us! There are those who attain to a knowledge of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ who do not put themselves into subjection to these divine means of enlightenment, and therefore do not realize their relation to the divine will. Their knowledge is a mere skeleton outline, and is naked and useless—because it is devoid of fruit. A good foundation of spiritual attainment is indispensable,—but the foundation must be built upon; the frame work must be filled up,—the bones must be covered with the living flesh of spiritual life. The truth is intended to make a

CERTAIN KIND OF PEOPLE.

Would it not be madness for a contractor to undertake to build a block according to plans furnished to him,—and dash in and build without consulting the plans and yet expect things to come out all right,—thinks he can persuade the owner it is just as good or a little better than the plans call for. You all agree it would be a mad course to pursue, although it would only be a matter of a few thousand dollars. And I ask would not the madness be far more pronounced in a person who has made some sacrifices with a view to eternal things: and engaged to shape himself as a living stone to fit a place in the vast temple under construction for the eternal God to dwell in, and never consult the plan and the pattern given to guide him? Would not this ultimate issue be ten thousand times worse than the other? You all say, yes; eternal things are involved here! Well, now; it is an undeniable fact that thousands who have accepted the gospel, apparently in the love of it, and obeyed in first principles, are building without regard to the shape or form of the stone called for by the plan. This is a fearful thing to say, but it is a divine rule that compels me to say so. The solemn words,— ye shall know them." There is no room,—no need for surmising; the evidence is furnished by the fruit. Grapes do not grow on thorns nor figs on thistles. I was taught that a human being was worth countless worlds. In all solemnity I say to you God wants something more than men made of dust, he wants those who by the truth are brought into fellowship with himself, and have their minds fashioned after his, and his principles incorporated with their mental being: not only the things of the kingdom and name, but grow up into Christ our living head in all things. We have to become like him. There are several passages in Rom. viii. that will lead us back to the first part of my subject again. One says, "For the mind of the flesh is death, but the mind of the Spirit is life and peace." Another, "If any one have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." And still another informs us that if the Spirit of him who raised up Christ dwell in us, we, too, shall have our mortal bodies made alive through the indwelling of the spirit. "Not my will, but thine," manifests the Spirit of Christ. What progress have we made in that direction? When a cross presents itself to us,—what do we do,—try to get around it or over it, or take it up with divine assistance? The answer will tell us whether we have his mind or not; and remind us of the consequences of not having it! And here I would affectionately remind us all again that Jesus said, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you;" and in order to make sure that we keep them or do them, it is very important to know what they are; you cannot keep them if you

"BY THEIR FRUIT

DO NOT KNOW THEM.

And in this connection I would remind you that Jesus commanded his disciples that when they made converts and baptized them they should teach them to observe all things which he had commanded them to observe. So when we look into the Acts and Epistles to the churches and see all the rules for godly living laid down by the apostles they are in fact the rules of the Lord Jesus which we have to observe, if we wish to be his friends, and he our friend. This shows the necessity of constant attention to the Scriptures—and seeing we have them, there is no excuse. Lukewarm and half-hearted professors do not study the Lord's will,—and when they seldom see the commandments of Jesus they gradually drop out of mind,—and then they do the very things he forbids them to do, without any compunctions of conscience. Under these circumstances they do not regard many of his commands AS commands, or the breach of them as sin. But they are. The Lord God says the heart is deceitful above all things. It cannot be trusted. Take warning. It suggests such excuses, as they that are made up this or that way, and excuse themselves because of infirmities and natural weaknesses which they cannot help, and so call downright sins by other names through natural temperament,—and to my certain knowledge they think they are not to blame, but rather claim sympathy from others; think they ought to be pitied for having such a burden to carry,—yet, this is the commandment "cast thy burden upon the Lord;" but they will not do it. They don't think they are to blame for their cold hearts, although told to love the Lord with all the heart,—and when told to love their enemies and do good to them that despitefully use them and persecute them, they do not regard it as sin, do not regard it as a commandment or as if it was intended to be obeyed—never think of putting themselves in the place of others and then doing to others as they would themselves be treated; or, when reviled not to revile again; or when offended to go to the 18th of Matt. and learn how to rectify,—never think it sin to speak disparaging behind one's back although it is declared to be very hateful to God; or that for want of love of others,—surmise evil things where there is no ground for it,—judge others though they are warned they will be judged themselves if they do; and send back as bad as they receive from others, although commanded to "overcome evil with good." It is not necessary to tell you those who do such things habitually have not the mind of Christ; and cannot say "Thy will, not mine be done, O Lord. They have rejected all the graciously offered assistance and have their own way,—And the End, the end, what will it be? My dear brethren, I implore you by the love of God and Christ seek out the commandments and keep them—watch and pray—be out and out for God and Christ,—and being faithful unto death—then a crown will await you. Brethren and sisters, let us all try to live and act so that the record of each day may show some progress in our efforts to subdue our own wills, and be able to say with the Lord who bought us,—"not my will, but thine be done." Amen.

Biographic.

This article was published in the history of the lower valley of Virginia during the life of Brother N. J. Morgan, and we give it place in The Restitution by request of Sister Morgan.

Elder Morgan, the subject of this sketch was born on March 16th, 1824, at Lexington, Ky., and went with his father in childhood to Tennessee where he attended the district schools, but getting only a limited education until reaching manhood when he completed his studies by books of his own selection. He went to Warren Co., Va., in 1856, being an independent evangelist, and there married in 1859 Sarah Francis Rudesiller. After his marriage he continued his ministerial work for six years before locating, but finally settled in Winchester, Va., in 1873, remaining there 15 years. He then purchased a farm near Highview, Va., which he occupied as his homestead. At Winchester he established the House of the Brethren, where the Association for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge in Virginia had its inception through his instrumentality as an auxiliary to the Church of God, where he then resided, in the midst of one of the first congregations established in the Valley of Virginia. He occupied a general Eldership in this part of the state and such was his Scriptural convictions of Christian character that he refused to take any part in the civil war of this country. This caused him to go through quite an ordeal with the military element of that day. He threw his life on the altar as a sacrifice for his honest convictions of truth. Such were his own words, That a true Christian could not be a Sectionalist; for the saints of the Most High will come from the east and the west, north and south and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God. Such were his weighty and convincing arguments before the civil law-making power, or the court of appeals that a decision was rendered in his favor as representative of the Church of God who holds the same principles which he holds so sacred, and put to record on the civil docket of Virginia for him and all of like precious faith in all time to come, and using his own words again he often said, He left this on record as a legacy for his brethren in case they should have to pass through a like test of faith while in the waiting time.

The Vision.

On Patmos,—desolate, lonely Isle,—
In the wild Ægan Sea,
Wandered an old man in exile—
The last of the twelve was he.

His brow was pale, and his step was slow,
And his beard was long and white;
And his hair, like a fleece of drifting snow,
Was tossed by the winds of night.

And there in that dim, dark solitude,
Alone in his wild despair,
Where the steps of a fine might not intrude,
An angel found him there.

And he said to him, "Write down for me
A message, and send it afar:
The things thou hast seen, and here after to be,
And the wonderful things that are."

Then he carried him away through regions vast,
Where never a man had trod,
And showed him the record of years gone past,
On the marvelous scroll of God.

And Rome with her iron sceptre and crown,
Drifted along on the current's flood;
He saw her battlements crumble down,
And her towers wash'd with blood.

He saw the barbarian's sword unsheath,
Where Gothic arrows sped;
He felt the earth as it shook beneath
The vandals fearless tread.

He saw proud monarchs play with thrones,
In dark and fearful fray,
And heard the nations answering groans,
As empires passed away.

And mingling with that mournful wail,
That worldly's wild debate,
He heard unnumbered voices hail
The coming Prince of Peace.

Then from the east, and far-off west,
Fr. South and of the north,
From myrtle bowers, and ocean's crest,
He saw the dead come forth.

He heard the rustle of garments white,
And saw each radiant face,
As they hurried away to pavilions of light,
In the fair fields of space.

He saw the city where they were to dwell,
Descend through a vapory mist;
Each mansion shone like a citadel,
And its walls were of amethyst.

Its glistening towers pierced the sky,
Its gates were of pearly white;
And the sheen of its splendor arose on high,
In tremulous billows of light.

No tears were there in immortal eyes,
Not a sigh was breathed on the air;
No storms swept over those glorious skies;
Death could not enter there.

And when the vision had passed away,
And he stood alone once more,
And felt the chill of the salt sea spray,
Flung up from the rocky shore,

He bowed his head and prayed as he wept,
For his Master to come again;
While the wailing winds around him swept;
And a voice replied, "Amen."

"Unto Thee Will I Cry, O Lord My Rock." Psalm xxviii.

1. "Unto thee will I cry, O Lord my rock: be not silent to me, lest, if thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit.

2. Hear the voice of my supplications, when I cry unto thee, when I lift up my hands toward thy holy oracle.

3. Draw me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity, which speak peace to their neighbors, but mischief is in their hearts.

4. Give them according to their deeds, and according to the wickedness of their endeavors: give them after the work of their hands; render to them their desert.

5. Because they regard not the works of the Lord, nor the operation of his hands, he shall destroy them, and not build them up.

6. Blessed be the Lord, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

7. The Lord is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped; therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him.

8. The Lord is their strength, and he is the saving strength of his anointed.

9. Save thy people, and bless thine inheritance; feed them also, and lift them up for ever."

At the first cursory reading of this Psalm of supplication, we would not take it to be a prophetic one. It seems to have been written for the especial use of each individual Christian. When we cry to God we want to cry in these very words. We feel that if he is silent; if he does not hear; does not answer; we shall share the fate of the ungodly hypocrites described in the fifth verse, because without the help and pardon of God, we are utterly without hope. We do not want to be drawn away with them to punishment and death no more than did David, and so we make it our prayer.

And yet, reading the Psalm over again, we see it is prophetic; and that David is speaking, not only for himself but for his people; that the Psalm leaps onward to the time when wicked treacherous nations like Turkey, Rome and Russia, who "speak peace to their neighbors," when "mischief is in their hearts," will, "because they regard not the works of the Lord nor the operation of his hands" be destroyed and "not built up." God will not build up such nations as these; he has decreed their fall, and David's prayer, (and ours as well,) will be answered, that they be given "according to their deeds and according to the wickedness of their endeavors," and "after the work of their hands," and thus will receive their deserts.

Turkey, red with the blood of the Armenians, Rome, "drunken with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus," and Russia, crimsoned with the blood of her citizen Jews, will alike meet with the terrible destruction threatened here.

David's prayer for himself and people against their enemies, was a prophecy of what would most certainly come to pass. We see this in the exultant shout that follows the prayer for their destruction.

"Blessed be the Lord," he says, "because he hath heard the voice of my supplication," as much as to say "Thou hast destroyed those workers of iniquity and not built them up," (or made them to prosper as nations.)

Then he goes on singing of the One who has been his strength and shield against these foes, and how in the battle, his heart has trusted in him, and how he has been helped and therefore rejoices and gives praise to the Lord; speaking for his people, as is shown by the 8th verse "The Lord is their strength" the word "their," referring manifestly to Israel, and the latter clause of the verse, "And he is the saving strength of his anointed," also pointing to that same chosen people.

Then comes the prayer that unmistakably puts the prayed for events of this Psalm in the future—"Save thy people, and bless thine inheritance, feed them also (or rule them also, see margin,) and lift them up forever."

God's people, Israel, have not yet been saved, their inheritance has not been blessed, God does not rule over them as a restored and united nation in their own land; he has not yet lifted them up forever, but we can give the same exultant shout that David did—"Blessed be the Lord because he hath heard the voice of my supplication!"

I have not cried in vain, "The Lord will give strength unto his people; the Lord will bless his people with peace." But once more in the Red Sea to be crossed, and the hosts of Pharaoh (this time as the Gog of Russia) to be defeated.

"Blessed be the Lord, because he hath heard the voice of our supplication."

"Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea Jehovah has triumphed his people are free!"

Our King is to reign over the house of Jacob forever.

At the Breaking of Bread.

ABHOR THAT WHICH IS EVIL.

Here are three good rules to observe when reading a portion of Scripture.

First. Who is the writer?
Second. Who is he writing to?
Third. What is he writing about?

In this case there is no trouble about who the writer is, Paul a servant of Jesus Christ, writing to all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints, and writing an earnest exhortation concerning that which is evil. Rom. xii. 9.

The verse reads, "Let love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good."

At first thought, without reflection, it seems strange that Paul should write such an exhortation to those beloved of God, called to be saints.

Would not all such know to, Abhor that which is evil?

Answer. Some would, and some would not. Even in a small church gathering, there are likely to be some "Babes in Christ." It is therefore the affectionate duty of those who do know what evil is—and Paul did know, to instruct, advise and exhort those who do not fully comprehend what evil is. Abhor, detest, loathe that which is evil, bad, vain, worthless, and the question is frequently asked, "What harm is there in it?" or the statement is made, "I dont see any harm in it."

My beloved brethren, those who are rooted and grounded, those who love the truth, because it is God's message, they know what is evil, they do not ask what harm is there in it? Neither do they say, I see no harm in it. They know it and abhor it.

We have many exhortations regarding evil, such as, "Be not overcome of evil," "Eschew evil," "Abstain from all appearance of evil." "Beloved, follow not that which is evil."

But there is so much around us that is evil, that does not have even the appearance of evil, worthless, nay, on the contrary, has the appearance of being worth very much. How then shall we all, beloved of God, called to be saints, distinguish that which is evil, worthless, and abhor it? The Master himself gave a measure, by which even the babes in Christ may detect the evil, worthless, and avoid it, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light." John iii. 20.

Every one that doeth that which is worthless,—worthless for salvation, will not accept the gospel of the kingdom, and brethren, salvation is what we are striving for. Therefore wherever the gospel is rejected, we know without saying, that there is ~~with same~~ worthlessness, let us avoid it. Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good." Observe, the exhortation is not merely to acknowledge that which is good, nor even to admire and endorse that which is good, but to cleave to, to be glued to, to be inseparably joined to that which is good, so that that which is evil will be avoided and abhored. By letting the words of Christ dwell in us richly, we have the ever present power to cleave to that which is good, and the same authorative Word supplies the power to detect that which is worthless for salvation enables us to abstain from all appearance of evil, and to abhor that which is evil. My brethren, let us all have ears to hear this grand exhortation.

Dear Restitution.

Since coming to the Pacific coast, I have felt more acutely than ever before, the difficulty of carrying on the Master's work, because of the fact that the brotherhood are so scattered. There are people of our faith in a large number of the towns and cities of California. There is however enough members in but few places to organize a church. In thinking the matter over it occurred to me that something might be done by correspondence. Why may not any one who is competent to teach, properly instruct willing hearts in the plan of salvation by writing them.

Sometime after we came to California I received a letter from Sister Sarah Huntoon, who at that time resided with her husband and family on a ranch about forty miles north of San Francisco.

In the letter she informed me that she was of our faith, having been baptized by Brother Wagoner when she and her husband resided in Indiana. She also said she had met me at one of our conferences held at Plymouth, Ind. She said her husband and herself came to California nineteen years ago and settled in Sonoma County, where they bought and improved a ranch. They were still residing there at the time she first wrote me. She requested me to visit them and do some preaching for them, saying that she had a son and daughter whom she desired to interest in the plan of salvation. She said they had never heard a sermon preached by one of our faith, all she had, with which to instruct them was her Bible, The Restitution and the statement of our faith contained in the upper right hand corner of The Restitution. She was very urgent that I should assist her in getting her children interested in the plan of salvation. I answered her that I would keep her family in mind and if opportunity offered whereby I could visit them and talk Bible to them I should gladly do so. In the mean time I suggested to the young people a plan of study of the Bible whereby they could take it up systematically and learn from the Bible itself the reward of the righteous and how to obtain that reward.

At the time the correspondence commenced we were residing about six hundred miles apart. Last January, which was long after the correspondence began, I received a letter from Sister Huntoon, saying that she and her family had located in Pasadena, and asked me if there were any of our faith residing in Pasadena or Los Angeles, where I had held services a few times. She said her daughter was very much interested and she thought she would like to be baptized. I wrote her at once saying I would come down and baptize her at any time. In answer to this the daughter wrote me as follows:

Pasadena, Calif. March 20, 1906.

Mr. M. M. Dwiggins, Dear Brother:

I guess I had better introduce myself before commencing my letter. I am the daughter of Mrs. Sarah Huntoon, who wrote to you a short time ago from Pasadena. I have studied portions of the Bible, your letter and also the articles of faith as given in the right hand corner of The Restitution. I think I can answer the questions that would be required of me if I were baptized by the Church of God. Will you please send me a list of the questions I would have to answer, and if possible state a time and place in the near future that I might be baptized. I feel that I want to be immersed soon.

Yours in the Blessed hope.
Miss Cora Huntoon.

P. S. Please answer by return mail.

In answer to the foregoing letter I wrote Sister Cora at once that I would make arrangements with the Pastor of the Christian Church, at Pomona, Calif. to baptize her in that church, immediately after the morning service, ~~Sunday~~ Sunday. I said to her I would invite some of our faith to be present at the baptismal services. I requested her to invite her mother and brother to be present. Instead of sending her a list of questions to be answered by her, I gave her a list of Scriptures which I requested she would carefully study before her immersion.

In answer to this letter Sister Cora wrote me as follows:—

"I received your welcome letter last evening, and was very glad that you had made arrangements that I might be immersed so soon. I think everything is satisfactory as I intended to go to Pomona Sunday any way. I think a friend of mine will be immersed also. I have given him my opinion on the subject, and let him read for himself. I wish my brother might be also but I dont know whether he can be persuaded or not. I think Mamma and my brother will both be there.

Your Sister, in the hope of eternal life.

Cora Huntoon.

P. S. I am glad that you invited those members of the faith to be present next Sunday.

On the following Sunday I went to Pomona and attended Sunday School and preaching services in the Christian Church, met the Pastor, was introduced for the first time to Sister Huntoon, her son Jesse and daughter Cora and Bro. M. M. Kunkle. Sister Huntoon, when I met her said she guessed her son would not be immersed, but when we went into the dressing room Brother Jesse came in with Brother Kunkle and was baptized.

Sister Huntoon has a Sister residing in Pomona. We all went there and enjoyed a good dinner and best of all a good talk on the subject nearest our hearts, the great plan of redemption. It was a day never to be forgotten by me.

May the Lord bless and keep these dear ones.

Announcement.

The 48th Annual Conference of the Churches of God, in Michigan, will be held at Dutton, Kent Co. Michigan, commencing Thursday evening, May 31, 1906 and continue over the following Sunday. (June 1, 2, and 3.)

It is the desire of all who have been in the habit of attending these gatherings that all the churches send delegates to this meeting.

A cordial invitation to attend is extended to all and particularly the brethren of this and adjoining states.

A programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

Once again the invitation comes from Dutton, the dear old gathering place, to have the Annual Conference at their place. There has been many good and profitable meetings held at Dutton, it always seemed like a family reunion. Let us show them our appreciation of their invitation by our presence.

If you have some good news of what the Lord has done for you tell us of it, it will cheer us on our way. If trouble has been your portion and the load heavy, tell us, perhaps we can aid you, our prayers will be for you at least.

Jesus is coming, will the Annual Meeting of 1906 be the last? Come work while the day lasts.

L. D. Decker, Pres.
Emma Jackman, Sec'y.

Religion, in its purity, is not so much a pursuit as a temper; or rather it is a temper, leading to the pursuit of all that is high and holy. Its foundation is faith; its action, works; its temper holiness; its aim, obedience to God in improvement of self, and benevolence to men.—Tryon Edwards.

"Holy War" Bogy.

London, April 28.—Although the sultan has given way at the last moment in every serious dispute in the last twenty years, there is a feeling of grave uneasiness in government circles over the present Egyptian boundary crises.

The Turkish attitude is one of determined aggression, and the British authorities have no option but to resort to the prompt use of military and naval measures to drive the sultan from his present position.

Whether the display of force will result in the usual retreat depends entirely on what is behind the Turkish policy. The Sultan deliberately has opened the whole Egyptian question and done it in a manner which leaves only two possible issues of the crisis, he must either push his claim to Egyptian sovereignty to the logical conclusion, which means war with England, or back down and virtually recognize British dominion in Egypt. Then the present farce of the khedive's vassalage and England's "temporary occupation" will come to an end.

Whatever may be said of the sultan he is too shrewd a man to raise this issue lightly and without some great plan and motive regarding future developments.

The idea which naturally seizes the British mind is that the kaiser, out of revenge for Algeciras, is making Turkey a catspaw to annoy Britain. There is strong reason for disagreeing with this view, but there is no doubt one of Germany's most effective moves against England in case of war between those countries would be to arouse the Moslem war against Britain, both in Egypt and India.

German influence at Constantinople is perhaps great enough to secure Abdul's cooperation in such an emergency. It is obviously not to Germany's interest, however, to provoke a conflict between Turkey and England when the latter is free to turn the whole of its energies against the ottoman empire. The German intrigue in the present movement, therefore, could only be accounted for by the kaiser's purpose to begin a struggle himself against England as soon as the present crisis has developed.

Nobody seriously believes any such movement is contemplated in Berlin. The most reasonable supposition is that the sultan is acting on his own initiative. His design, some argue, is merely attempting to put pressure on Britain is to gain its consent to increase in the Turkish customs or to pay an indemnity for disputed territory. Most diplomatists regard this motive as wholly inadequate, but there are others who see in this maneuver the culmination of a great plan to open the long threatened "holy war."

It is only a serious view of this nature which can explain the great alarm in Downing street and the hurried return of King Edward to England.

A careful examination of the technical rights involved in the disputed territory shows that, despite the sweeping claims of the British press, the sultan has a strong case. Even English maps and charts in the British museum as late as 1880 show the Egyptian boundary to run direct from the Suez end of the canal to El Arish, on the Mediterranean. Taba is well outside this line, and the rights of Egypt in the disputed territory are only administrative ones granted by firman in 1840 and designed to secure the protection of the old pilgrim road to Mecca through Akabo.

The essential point involved in the Egyptian question, as a whole, is whether that country, before the British possession, was a vassal state paying tribute to Turkey, or was a "privileged province" of the Turkish empire. The British claim to the country is based on the former assumption. The sultan, on the other hand, outpoints all the firmans and other records describe it as a privileged but integral part of the Ottoman empire.

This question of technical rights is not of much practical consequence, for all the world knows that Egypt to all intents and purposes is now part of the British empire, and it would be defended with as much determination as any of the colonies. There are no two opinions on this point in England, and the present government will resist the sultan's encroachments with as much vigor as would its predecessors. That is what makes the situation serious, and Turkey's purpose is inscrutable.

No previous quarrel with the sultan has involved such a grave issue, and in none has he laid himself open to such a decisive rebuff as he must now receive. The chief danger now lies in the great unrest of the whole Moslem world, and the fact that the "holy war" which narrowly was averted in December may burst upon the world at any moment.—Chicago Tribune.

God Near.

"For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Rom. viii. 38, 39.

The thought that God is near, is, to the soul that is reconciled to him, unspeakably precious. He whom angels adore, who is the light of the universe and the glory of heaven, who can fill the soul that loves him with joy and praise—has verified to his saints the assurance, that if they draw nigh to him, he will draw nigh to them. In gloom, his presence has cheered them, and in trials they have found refuge in his strength. In solitude, in calamity, in prison, when heart and flesh fail, he is near. Though riches take to themselves wings and fly away, though friends prove faithless, though earthly hopes wither, the heart may still stay itself on him. What heroism the martyr has shown, sustained simply by the sense of a present God! How heaven has seemed to stoop to earth and embosom the lowliest dwelling, if only beneath its roof the prayer of faith was uttered, or the heart opened its doors to welcome the great, divine guest! How the darkness of the valley of the shadow of death has vanished, as the saint leaned upon the rod and staff of a present God.

God In Christ.

"Seeing it is God that said, Light shall shine out of darkness, who shined in our hearts, to give the illumination of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. iv. 6, R. V.

We must look on that whole career, from the cradle to the cross, from Calvary to Olivet, if we are to know its deepest tenderness, and catch its gladdest notes. That such a man has lived and died is beautiful, and the picture may stand forever as the fairest of the children of men. But, in that life and death we have our most authentic knowledge of what God is, and that all the pity and truth, the gentleness and the brotherliness, the tears and the self-surrender, are a revelation to us of God; and that the cross with its awful sorrow and its painful death, tells us, not only how a man gave himself for those whom he loved, but how God loves the world, and how tremendous is his law—this is good news of God indeed. We have to look for our truest knowledge of him, not in the majesties of the starry heavens, nor in the depths of our own souls; not in the intuitions of the wise; but in the life and death of his Son, whose tears are the pity of God, as well as the compassion of a man; and in whose life and death the whole world may behold "the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person," and be delivered from all their fears and their doubts of an unknown God.

Here and Hereafter.

"Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." 2 Cor. iv. 17.

It is a sweet and pleasant thought that when all these days of pain and sorrows and work are ended—these days of contending and unrest—there will come a folding of hands. It is sweet, when sorrow and weariness are our only companions, to remember that the hour is not far away when the Father will fold the tired hands of his only child in his, will seal the aching eye with sleep, and breathe under its trembling lid the sweet dream of heaven. Weary not, faint not, the Father sees you, and you know his hand leads you. A little pain and a little labor he metes you for your good; be patient, and when the night comes he will give you rest.

Speak kindly in the morning; it will lighten all the care of the day, turn sorrow into gladness, make household, professional and all other affairs move along more smoothly, giving peace to the one who thus speaks, and grateful joy to him who hears. Speak kindly at the evening hour, for it may be that before the dawn of another day some tenderly loved one may finish his or her span of life for this world, and then it will be too late to retract an unkind word, or even to seek forgiveness for an injury inflicted upon the heart of a loved friend departed.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 31.

1. To Mooab. In this wise hath the Lord said; Woe unto Nabau, because it hath been destroyed; Kariathem hath been taken; Amath and Agath have been put to shame.

2. There is no longer healing for Moab; an object of open-mouthed wonder is it in Eseboon; calamities have been reasoned in respect to her; (the Mooabites) we have cut her off from being a nation, and she will cease. After thee a sword is walking.

3. Because there is a voice of those who have shouted from out Oroconaim, destruction and a great crushing blow,

4. Mooab hath been crushed. Tell in Zora,

5. That Alooth hath been filled with mourning; one who lamenteth will go up by the highway to Oroconaim; hear ye the clamor of a crushing-blow;

6. Flee and save your souls, and ye will be even as a wild-ass in a wilderness.

7. Since thou didst trust in thy walled- place, thou also wilt have been taken; and Chamoos will go out in removal, and his priests and his rulers at the same time.

8. And a destroyer will come against every city; he shall not be saved, and the pasture land will be lost, and the plain will have been utterly destroyed even as the Lord hath said.

9. Give signs to Mooab because she will have been touched with contagion, and all her cities will be a trackless-waste; whence will she have an inhabitant?

10. Accursed is he who doeth the Lord's works carelessly, who taketh away his sword from blood.

11. Moab from boyhood gave himself rest and trusted in his glory; he did not pour out from one earthen-vessel into another earthen-vessel, and he went not into colonization; therefore his taste stood in him and his smell did not fail him.

12. Therefore, lo, days are coming, saith the Lord, and I shall send unto him those who incline away and they will incline him and his utensils away and they will make fine dust of them and they will break his horns in pieces.

13. And Mooab will have been put to shame by reason of Chamoos even as a house of Israel was put to shame by reason of their hope in Baitheel, because they trusted in these things.

14. How will ye say we are strong and that a mere man is strong in the things of war?

15. Mooab's city hath perished, and his chosen young men have gone down to slaughter.

16. Mooab's day is nigh to come and his wickedness very swift to come.

17. Move against him all ye round about him, Give out his name all ye; say how hath a truly-renowned prophet's-wand been broken, a sceptre of majesty?

18. Go down from glory, and seat thyself seated in moisture. Daiboon will be crushed out because Mooab hath perished; one who ravageth thy walled-place hath gone up against thee;

19. Stand in a highway and see it thou who art seated in Areer, and ask one fleeing and saving himself, and say, What hath occurred?

20. Mooab hath been put to shame, because she hath been crushed. Olo-lu and cry; tell in Arnoon that Mooab hath perished,

21. And a crisis is coming into the land of Melcoor upon Cheloon and Hrephas and Moophas,

22. And upon Daiboon and upon Nabou and upon the house of Daithlathaim,

23. And upon Kariathaim and upon the house of Gaimool and upon the house of Maoon,

24. And upon Kerlooth and upon Bosor and upon all the cities of Mooab far and near.

25. Mooab's horn hath been broken and his instrumentality crushed.

26. Make him drunken because he hath magnified himself against the Lord; and he will smite Mooab with his hand, and he also will be an object of laughter,

27. And if Israel had not been an object of thy buffoonery and had not been among thy things stolen, yet because thou didst war against him would this be.

28. Those who inhabit Mooab have left its cities behind and taken up their abode in the rocks; they have become like pigeons that nest in rocks at the mouth of a pit.

29. And I heard Mooab's insolence; he showed exceeding insolence and supercilious pride, and his heart became lifted up.

30. And I know his works. Do they not suffice him? Did he not do in this wise?

31. Therfore raise the ololu for Mooab from every side; call for men, shearers of squalidity.

32. I shall lament for thee as with a lamentation of Jazeer, O thou vine of Asseremma; thy branches went through a sea; they clung fast, O thou city Jazeer; upon thy autumn fruits and thy vintners destruction hath fallen.

33. Harmony and rejoicing have been swept out of the Mooabites; and there was wine in thy wine-presses; at dawn they have not trodden them nor at even have her women made it.

34. By reason of the shouting-cry of Eseboon their cities even unto Aitam have given their voice; from Zogor unto Oroconaim and the news to Salasia, because even the water of Nebrein will be in a scorching-heat.

35. And I shall destroy the Mooabite, saith the Lord, the Mooabite who ascendeth the altar with steps and burneth incense to his gods.

36. Because of this Mooab's heart will sound hollow even as do flutes; my heart even as a flute will sound hollow on account of men-shearers; because of this, things which he hath saved for himself, have been lost from mankind.

37. Every head in every place will they have shorn, and every beard will have been shaven off, and all hands will beat their breasts, and upon all loins will there be sackcloth.

38. And upon all the house-tops of Mooab and in her public-squares will it be, because I have crushed it like an earthen-vessel for which there is no further use.

39. How hath Mooab changed; how hath she turned her back? She hath been put to shame, and Mooab hath become an object of laughter and grudging-hatred for all those round about her.

40. Because in this wise hath the Lord said.

41. Karlooth hath been taken and the walled-places have been taken possession of.

42. And Mooab will lose its mixed-multitude because she magnified herself against the Lord.

43. A snare and fear and a pit for thee, O thou seated Mooab.

44. The one who fleeth from the face of the fear will fall into the pit, and the one who goeth up out of the pit will have been caught also in the snare, because I shall lead these things upon Mooab in a year of their visitation.

COMMENT.

What purports to be this same prophecy addressed to Mooab or Mooabites, the first as a man, the second as a woman the reader will find in the 48th chapter of the C. V. and R. V. from the 1st to the 44th verses both inclusive. He will also find three verses more the 45th, 46th and 47th that are not in the text and unaccounted for. The variations are too numerous to call special attention to in our limited space; but this the reader will do well to compare and note them as they are important and vital to the scholarly truth-seeker. For instance the inculcation of the wisdom of colonization on the part of any growing nation, under the figure of pouring out of one earthen-vessel into another, utterly obscured in the reading of the R. V. Who would recognize the Chamoos form of idolatry in the "Chemosh" of the versions moreover?

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope,

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if printed will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Send your pledges but no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 42' N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Notice is given that the brethren at Foothill, Ontario, expect to have a special gathering—an all-day meeting on Sunday, May 27 next. We invite all lovers of truth to meet with us on this occasion. We expect three or four speakers. Any further information in respect to this meeting can be obtained by corresponding with the undersigned.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshal., Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

The Things Above.

"Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth." Col. iii. 2.

'Tis well for us that ties which bind the heart
Too strongly here are rudely snapped apart,
'Tis well the pitcher at the fountain breaks,
The golden bowl is shattered for our sakes,
To show how frail and fleeting all we love,
To raise our souls to lasting things above.

Notes by the Way.

Having concluded the work, and taken leave of the dear ones in Christ at Iota and Crowley, Louisiana, I took the train for Hammond, Louisiana, in order to visit my Pine Woods Bible Class, and preach the gospel of the kingdom to the people. I arrived at Hammond, at about 9:30 P. M. Bro. Albert was at the depot to meet me, and took me to his home.

Right here I will mention that since I was at Hammond two years ago, Albert has married a young lady of Hammond, and established a home of his own. He consequently was proud to take me to his home and introduce me to his young wife. She gave me a hearty welcome to their home. I made my home there and visited with Arloa, Ella, Bessie, George and wife, Lud, Carrie, etc., and had such a happy and pleasant time among them all.

At this place spring time had passed, and the summer season had set in. Strawberries were being shipped north by the car loads. Quite a large dairy business is carried on at Hammond. Albert has nearly sixty head of cattle, and Lud nearly one hundred. I enjoyed the fresh strawberries, asparagus, new potatoes, and fresh green peas. Many of the strawberries are too large to eat unless they are sliced, indeed they are too large to sweeten unless they are first cut.

The Christian church was engaged in which to hold meetings. After holding meetings in the city, we went west about two miles into the Pine Woods, called Happy Woods, where a number of rich people have established homes. This is where Lud and Carrie live. It is at this place, where Pine Woods Bible Class was started, and Lud and Carrie were the first converts that I baptized at Happy Woods. I baptized two more while at this place on this trip one was Frank, a son of sister Arloa, and the other was Albert's new wife. She was a member of the Christian Church at Hammond. They baptized her, four years ago. At that time she did not understand the glorious gospel of the kingdom, or know how to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, as required by the Scriptures; consequently she saw that her former immersion was not a genuine gospel baptism. Her mind having now become enlightened, she perceived that the three facts of the death, burial and resurrection of Christ was not the entire gospel as is preached by those who follow the teaching of Alexander Campbell. Remove the promises from the gospel, and you have no genuine saving gospel left.

On Sunday morning we all took a drive to "Piney Villa" owned by Mr. Humiston. Mr. Humiston has constructed a fish pond, where the water from an overflow well, keeps it well supplied with clear fresh water. Mr. Humiston has built steps down into the water, so that it could be used for baptisms. It was at this place where I baptized these dear ones into the sacred name of the Lord Jesus.

The re-baptism of Albert's wife naturally raised some feeling among some of the members of the Christian church, because a cloud obscures their vision, and while the mist is before their eyes, they cannot see the light of the glorious gospel of the Son of God. I sometimes think their preachers see more than they are willing to admit, as in the case of the pastor of this church.

On the Saturday night I preached a discourse, entitled: "How to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?" While giving that sermon I quoted, what Philip preached when he preached Christ: "Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them.  But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women." I emphasized this as a sample of "preaching Christ," and also as the Bible statement of the belief of those who were proper subjects of a true gospel baptism. On Sunday night the pastor referred to this passage, and quoted as follows: "Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them, that is he preached the gospel,—the death, burial and resurrection of Christ." That is the way he put it. Now, it is quite evident, that he was fully aware that the record did not read that way. Why did he do so? Why, simply because he saw clearly, that it did not support the unwritten creed of Campbellism.

My interviews with these loved members of my Pine Woods Bible Class were indeed sweet and encouraging. We communed together concerning the blessed Christ, his coming again in glory, the bringing to pass of those happy things our Blessed Hope encourages us to expect, long for, and anticipate with so much pleasure.

"Why should not believers when they meet,
Not speak of Christ the Lord they own,
Who gives them hope that they shall sit
With him forever on his throne?
In any other name so great
As his, who bore the sinner's load?
In any other subject half so sweet,
So blessed as the love of God?"

Albert told me that they had been strengthened, built up and encouraged. The time came that we should part. We said our farewells, and I boarded the train for my home at Chicago, by way of New Orleans.

I had to spend most of the day at New Orleans, waiting for my train. When I arrived at New Orleans, the Confederates were holding a three days session of the Confederate Reunion. The city buildings were beautifully decorated, mainly with Confederate flags, emblems and bunting, with here and there a United States flag was thrown to the breeze. Canal street is the main business street, this was profusely decorated.

These veterans of many bloody battles, like the veterans of the Grand Army in the North, are drawing near the bounds of life. Not many more re-unions can they hold. Many who met this time will never meet again. So many whose heads were whitened with the frosts of many winters, had bent forms, and trembling steps.

I conversed with a number of them. They were very social and friendly. The bitterness of the dreadful strife of over forty years ago, seems to have passed away. One asked, "Where are you from?" I replied, "Chicago." Then, says he, "Then you are not a Confederate veteran?" I replied, "No sir," "well says he, that does not make any difference we love you all the same—the war is all over."

Another asked, "Where are you from?" "Chicago," I replied. He replied, that in the sixties we exchanged bullets, but now we can meet as friends?" This illustrates the existing feeling. The train in my homeward trip was crowded with veterans, and others, who took the opportunity of cheap rates, to visit the quaint old city of New Orleans.

I arrived home after a wearisome trip of two days and two nights. I was so pleased to meet my loved ones at home, after an absence of nearly three months, proclaiming the message of life to the perishing.

The "out post" work is an important work neglected by the Church of God. As far as gain to the cause of Christ is concerned, the trip just ended, has been satisfactory; in most places the audiences have been large, and the interest fine. Being new fields not many baptisms could result, but if followed up the fruitage must be large. Our evangelists as a general thing will not visit these "isolated out-posts," because there is but little money in it. Isolated poor people can do but little in recompense. Money raised by State Conferences is used mainly for their own State work, not one cent ever reaches the evangelist who works among the isolated ones in the out-posts.

On this trip the Word of the kingdom has found lodgment in many hearts. I am also pleased to say, that I have baptized six, who have confessed the faith once delivered unto the saints. These six I commend to the keeping and guarding care of our heavenly Father.

"Gracious Father, guard them well,
From the [illegible]
Save, O save them, Lord, from falling,
In this dark and trying hour.
Thou wilt surely prove thy people,
All our graces must be tried
But thy Word illumes our pathway,
And in God we still confide."

With regard to Pine Woods Bible Class book, I would say that some have promised a little financial aid toward the printing of the book. As soon as that arrives, the printing will begin.

Dear ones in Christ, do not the storms, cyclones, volcanic eruptions, fearful earthquakes in divers places, unite with other signs in proclaiming the closing up of this age? Oh, let us awake from sleep, and press with vigor on. The King's business demands prompt attention. While at home I can attend to special calls in towns, cities and states in and around Illinois.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

The Little Horn of Dan. viii.

In order to approximate the truth in making an application of the symbols of Daniel and John, we must read carefully, and study every item of information noted by the prophet. It will be noticed by the student that the visions touch only on important events, passing over in silence many things that we in our little sphere of observation would think important. The truth of the foregoing is apparent if we consider that the metallic image and the four beasts touch upon events covering a period of nearly three thousand years, reaching down the stream of time to the establishment of the kingdom of God. In short, Daniel deals in long range foretelling of future events. A failure to comprehend the construction of the prophecy has led many to suppose that Antiochus the great is the one symbolized by the "little horn" of chapter viii. In the reading of the Septuagint it is a "strong horn" which agrees with its actions better than does a little horn.

Now to be brief I will take the position that the little horn of chapter viii. represents Rome, the fourth beast of chapter vii. including the little horn that came up among the ten; and for the following reasons, first, because in the order of events it follows Greece in chapter viii. as does Rome in chapter vii. Second, in character and in its acts it is like the fourth beast of chapter vii. or the fourth division of the metalic image of chapter ii.

In noting the character and acts of the "horn" of chapter viii. I expect to find the same character and acts in the vision of the fourth beast, or fourth division of the image, (first) the horn waxes "exceeding great," chap. viii. 9. The fourth beast is said to be "strong exceedingly" chapter vii. 7. Now if this exceeding quality is not spoken of the same party, who can inform us which of the two exceeds the other? Second, The horn "waxes exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land, (Palestine). Now the question, which exceeds the other, Antiochus who stopped the offering and desecrated the city and temple for 3½ years; or the Romans who destroyed the city and the sanctuary A. D. 70, and trod it down until it was taken by the Mahommedans in A. D. 637? Third, The horn verse 11, "Magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down." It should here need no argument to prove that it was the Romans and not Antiochus, nor yet the Arabs or Turks that did the work here assigned to the "horn" of Dan. viii. The words of Christ in Matt. xxiv. 15 are to the point. "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand.) This could not be Antiochus whose desecration was nearly 200 years in the past. [illegible] that [illegible] Jerusalem before they came A. D. 687 Jerusalem was destroyed and her people in captivity.

In viii. 23 when the vision is being explained to Daniel we read of the horn as "a king of fierce countenance. How well this agrees with the description of the little horn of chapter vii. 20, "Whose look was more stout than his fellows." Verse 24 of chapter viii. should not be overlooked in this investigation which reads, "And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power." Whose power will fit this description as Rome does in might and in the duration of its might, it is the iron of the image that, "shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces. Chap. vii. 23. In chapter viii. 24 speaking of the might of the "horn" it reads, "but not by his own power." How can we find a fulfillment of this description of the "horn" exercising mighty power but not his own; turn to Rev. xvii. 13, speaking of the ten kings, we read, "These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast." Thus we see according to the prediction the beast exercising mighty power not his own, but that of the ten kings. The beast here is the papal or eighth head of the fourth beast. One more finger post pointing to Rome is found in verse 25 of chapter viii. We read, "but he shall be broken without hand." Now according to the Bible testimony, Who is it that is to be broken without hand? And when does the breaking take place? And how is it done? The hands of the Medes and Persians broke power of Babylon. The hands of Greece broke the power of Medo-Persia; and Rome absorbed the territory of Greece; but who without hands breaks Rome? Dan. ii. 45, "For as much as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the clay, the silver and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter." Here we have found that the breaking "without hand" takes place at the time when God sets up his kingdom. How is it done without hands? Read Lam. iv. 6, "For the punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her." So this horn being broken without hands is evidence that he and the fourth beast of Daniel are the same power. Another evidence is the time of the vision 2300 days or as the Septuagint reads 2400. There should be no question as to the nature of the time, in connection with symbols, the time is always symbolic—a day for a year. So the vision covers a period of time 23 or 24 hundred years, that fact rules out Antiochus, and as for the Mahommedans they have no standing in the question. They came to Jerusalem too late in the day, and had no hand in the taking away of the daily sacrifice, nor in destroying the city and the sanctuary. Most all the finger posts here erected point to Rome. I say most all because there is one exception. That is that the horn came out of one of the four divisions of Alexander's empire.

Bro. O. R. L. Crozier says, "It could not be Rome, because it sprang out of one of the four horns of the Grecian goat." This is the only objection that can be urged against Rome. I notice that in the explanation of the symbols to Daniel, verse 23, the statement of his coming out of the horns is omitted. I am inclined to think there must be some mistake in the statement that the horn came out of one of the four divisions of Alexander's empire. The fact seems to be that Rome had its origin outside of one of the four divisions of Alexander's empire. We all know that mistakes and interpolations do in someway creep into the text, for instance the 2300 days, in the Septuagint reads 2400.

The Triumph of Life.

Death is swallowed up in victory. 1 Cor. xv. 54. And death shall be no more . . . the first things are passed away. Rev. xxi. 4.

That in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things on earth and things of the world below (margin) and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is the Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Phil. ii. 10, 11. R. V.

I have placed together these passages of Scripture in order to suggest the strongest possible contrast between what I believe to be the truth, and the prevailing doctrine, viz: that instead of there being no more death, in the final future, death becomes established and eternal, having an everlasting life of its own parallel with the true life of the blessed.

Of course it will be claimed that the promised disappearance of death refers only to the body, and the resurrection of the just; but many students of the Scriptures are beginning to discern that this traditional understanding fails to harmonize the Divine Word. Paul in the verses quoted, makes his language as strong and comprehensive as possible; and he was no mean master of speech. If words can exclude the conception of a permanent world of sin, his do it. Every knee is finally to bow to Christ, and bow, not in rebellious rage, when crushed, but to him as its Lord, to the glory of God the Father. There shall be no knee left not bowing in loving obedience. And this passage is only one of several in Paul's writings that point to this result. Col. i. 20; Eph. i. 10.

The Bible interpreted in harmony with this idea, shows death temporarily victorious over the race, in bringing it under the law of spiritual depravity and animal decay, and exhibits the bringing in of the higher spiritual life by the Giver of life as a new stage or unfolding of life conditioned upon the consent and co-operation of man himself.

This is a triumph to which we are brought by the Incarnate Son, the Captain of our salvation. It is the gift of our Father, "who always leadeth us in triumph in Christ." "Nay, we are more than conquerors through him that loved us." Love, life, joy and service triumph together. With worship they shall make up the fulness of our being in thee forever and forever.

The above are extracts from the concluding chapter of a book entitled "The Triumph of Life" by T. S. Potwin. Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory (triumph) through our Lord Jesus Christ, the Life-giver.

Songs in the Night.

"In the night his song shall be with me." Psa. xlii. 8.

"Who giveth songs in the night." Job xxv. 10.

Very many of the sweetest joys of Christian hearts are songs which have been learned in the bitterness of trial. It is said of a little bird that he will never learn to sing the song his master will have him sing while it is light in his cage. He learns a snatch of every song he hears, but will not learn a full separate melody of his own. And the master covers the cage and makes it dark all about the bird, and then he listens and learns the one song that is taught to him, until his heart is full of it. Then, ever after, he sings the song in the light. With many of us it is as with the bird. The Master has a song he wishes to teach us, but we learn only a strain of it, a note here and there, while we catch up snatches of the world's songs and sing them with it. Then he comes and makes it dark about us till we learn the sweet melody he would teach us. Many of the loviest songs of peace and trust sung by God's children in this world, they have been taught in the darkened chamber of sorrow.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 9, 1906. NUMBER 18.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Youth's Column.

A Teacher's Prayer.

Up to me sweet childhood looketh,
Heart, and mind, and soul awake,
Teach me of thy ways, oh, Father,
For sweet childhood's sake.

In their young hearts, soft and tender,
Guide my hands good seed to sow,
That its blossoming may praise Thee,
Wheresoe'er they go.

[illegible]
Give to me a cheerful spirit,
That my little flock may see
It is good and pleasant service—
To be taught of Thee.

Father, order all my footsteps,
So direct my daily way,
That in following me the children
May not go astray.

Let thy holy counsel lead me;
Let thy light before me shine,
That they may not stumble over
Word or deed of mine.

Draw us hand in hand to Jesus,
For his word's sake—unforgot—
"Let the little ones come to me
And forbid them not."

A Rich Treasure.

There was a little Prussian girl who had kind Christian parents. Her father was a gardener to Elizabeth Christina, the queen of Prussia; and his daughter was so remarkable for her gentleness and wisdom that the queen had become greatly interested in her, and often talked with the child in her garden walks. One day as the queen was about sitting down with her ladies to eat, the gardener's daughter was brought into the room. Being curious to know what impression would be made upon the little girl by the sight of the dazzling gold and silver table ornaments, Christena ordered her to be placed by her side at the table.

The child looked all around her in silent amazement; then after a moment, she folded her tiny hands across her bosom, and in a modest but steady and clear voice, repeated this verse:

"Jesus, thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress;
'Midst flaming worlds, in these arrayed,
With joy shall I lift up my head."

No one had told this blessed child of the motive which the queen had in causing her to be set at her table. But the gardener's little daughter possessed Jesus Christ. To her he was a "Pearl of great price," and the "One altogether lovely." So as soon as her eyes rested on the beautiful and costly things which were the queen's treasures, she was reminded of her own precious possession that was so much better than all these; and the thoughts of her heart found utterance in such sweet and holy words.

The ladies at the table were moved to tears, and one of them exclaimed, "Oh how much higher than all of us she is!"

My little friends you have some beautiful treasure. If it be something that belongs to this world, it will only please you for a little while. Should you lose it, or grow weary of the sight of it, it would no longer make you happy. But if you have Jesus for your beauty, your righteousness, and your treasure, he will last forever. And then though you prize and love him all that you possibly can in this world, yet when you come to be like him, and dwell with him in his glory, you will find that you hardly began to know the exceeding preciousness of the treasure.

"How far the heavenly robe exceeds
What earthly princes wear!
The ornaments that Jesus gives,
What shall with them compare!"

"Put Yourself In His Place."

Suppose a child does not sit straight as a ramrod at the table; suppose a cup or tumbler slips from its little fingers, and deluges the plate of food below, and the goblet is smashed, and the table-cloth ruined, do not look a thousand scowls, and scare the poor thing to the balance of its death, for it was scared half to death before. It "didn't go to do it." Did you never let a glass slip through your fingers since you were grown? Be as generous to your child as you would be to an equal or superior guest, to whom you would say with a most obsequious smile, "It's of no possible consequence."

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 9, 1906.

WE have received word from Cleveland, O. of the sudden death of Brother Wm. Pate of that City. A few weeks ago he had gone to England in the hope of bettering his health, being accompanied by his daughter, Sister Hattie Pate. It is supposed that he was stricken with apoplexy. Brother Pate will be missed by the community, the church, but by his family most of all. He was a most companionable and sociable man—loved by every one—almost idolized by his family and intimate associates. His was a nature rare to find. He was perfectly free in his association with the people with whom he came in contact—making friends of all. Even the little children took to him instinctively, and when you saw Brother Pate it was rare indeed when some child was not hanging to him. We met him at the Ohio Conferences, and esteem him highly. May his dear family have strength from the Father in this sad hour, and may the loving daughter with him be especially blessed.

THE Douma is the name of the new Russian Parliament which holds its first meeting tomorrow. A representative body chosen by the people is what the Russian reformers have long asked for, and now they are actually to have it.

FOR many years an Englishman has been employed by the Chinese government to manage its customs. In line with the cry of "China for the Chinese" two new officers have been created, and natives put in the positions, which virtually annuls the office held by the Englishman.

Selected.

The Precious from the Vile.

In a world of sin, the policy of the evil one is to confound all moral distinctions, and to lump together in one indistinguishable mass all things, good, bad, or indifferent, whether sacred or profane, divine or devilish. This is the world's style of religion, and the Church where God's friends and his enemies can meet together on a common footing, joining in worldly amusements and gay hilarity, and questionable business transactions, is the devil's ideal of a church. The divine principle of procedure has ever been the principle of separation,—of selection. He has been continually calling out from the surrounding multitude, the men whom he chose for his own. Noah was separated by the ark and by the deluge from the world around him. Abraham was separated by a life-long pilgrimage, not only from his father's house but from all the nations among whom he dwelt. He had no opportunity to form local ties, or to affiliate with the people around him. He was to walk before God in singleness of heart and blamelessness of life, a pilgrim and a stranger in all the lands where from time to time he sojourned. From the land of Egypt where they had dwelt as separated strangers for many years, Israel came forth to spend a lifetime in a waste and howling wilderness. They entered the land of promise under the solemn charge that they were to make no treaties or covenants with the people there. They were separated by manners, customs and usages, as well as by express laws, from association and communication with the nations around them.

The closer man's fellowship becomes with God, the more isolated he is, even though surrounded by a multitude. The lofty mountain peaks blaze in the sunshine or whiten with eternal snows, but they stand separate and alone; and so those men, whose brows shone with the light of God, and who, climbing above all the fogs and mists of earthly ambition, looked out through the clear blue and read the signs of the times, and saw the outworking of divine purposes while they were yet invisible to human eyes, were called to separation even from Israel, and were made to endure an intenser loneliness than that which fell to the lot of most of the Lord's peculiar people.

The tabernacle built by Moses was pitched outside the camp, far from its polutions; and so Christ, dying a sacrifice for sinners, suffered without the gate, and to us the invitation comes, "Let us go forth therefore unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach."

No nation or country has been regenerated en masse by divine power. There has been illumination, and in some instances a general acceptance of the divine message, followed by formality, and secret and open apostasy, and finally by decay. The divine method of saving men has not been so much by casting out evil from among the good, as by bringing out good from among the evil; calling forth those men who respond to the divine invitation, bidding them be like their Master, "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." When the prophet Jeremiah had witnessed and rebuked the iniquity and apostasy of Israel, and had experienced in consequence the pain and persecution which comes upon the faithful servant of the Lord, until he had desired to escape his responsibility and no more make mention of the Word of the Lord, the Lord said to him, "If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before me; and if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth; let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them. And I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen wall; and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee to save thee and to deliver thee, saith the Lord. And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible." Jeremiah xv. 19-21.

The work which the prophet was commissioned to do, was to take forth the precious from the vile. The nation had departed from God, and were thronging the broad road; it was for him so to speak the words of truth and righteousness that the honest should turn to God, and turning to God should forsake their idols and devote and consecrate themselves to his service. In many instances, at this time, the work that is to be done is, to take the precious from the vile. Worldliness spreads, hypocrisy is contagious, iniquities, covered and cloaked, break forth into open ungodliness. There is no sin nor sinner without apologists and abetors, even among those who profess to name the name of Christ. The name of God is blasphemed on account of the iniquitous courses of those who profess to be followers of the Lord Jesus. Wealth too often rules; principle is held in abeyance. Every effort is made to conciliate the rich and honored, even at the sacrifice of principle and of right; and above it all sits the supreme Judge who is of purer eyes than to uphold iniquity; who desireth truth in the inward parts; who hates robbery for burnt offering, and who knows no man after the flesh.

The work that God seems to point out to his faithful servants to do, is the work of taking the precious from the vile. There is need of a proclamation of the truth so simple and so mighty that men's consciences will be quickened, and whole lives moulded anew by the divine power. The work is to be effected not by the power of human eloquence, not by the words of human wisdom, but by the words of the ever-living God, finding their root in the hearts of men, and bringing forth their fruit to the glory of his great name. "The world lieth in the wicked one." The precious and the vile are strangely mingled in neighborhoods, families and communities; they are joined together in nations, in associations, and in churches. The world draws its bands closer and closer with each departing day, and seeks unbroken fellowship with the Church for whom Christ shed his blood. But the approval of God attends no such unholy union. Over and over again the divine voice repeats the solemn challenge, "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." This is the issue we must meet. We cannot have the friendship of earth and heaven. We must choose one or the other. If we choose the world we must abide the issue in that day when all earth's glory shall flee away, and we shall stand alone without a helper or a friend. But if we take the Lord to be our portion, in poverty, in sorrow and in tears, however lonely and desolate our earthly lot may now be we shall find that we have made no foolish choice; that the friend whom we have chosen sticketh closer than a brother; that he to whose keeping we have committed our all will never leave us nor forsake us, but will go with us in sickness and in health, in sorrow and joy, in pain and poverty and toils and tears, will bring us finally to a better land, the home and palace of our God.

Let this be the watchword in the Church, Separation! Let us learn to take the precious from the vile, and to so consecrate ourselves to God and to his work, that the world shall neither love us nor own us, but that God shall count us among his chosen ones, his friends being our friends, and his enemies being our foes. Happy shall they be who shall come at last with robes unstained, to dwell with the precious ones forever separated from vileness, sin and shame.—The Christian.

Like Christ.

No man's example will precisely fit his fellow man, but there is this strange virtue about the character of Christ, that you may all imitate it and yet be none of you mere imitators. He is perfectly natural, who is perfectly like Christ. There need be no affectations, no painful restraint, no straining. In a life thus fashioned there will be nothing grotesque or disproportionate, unmanly or romantic. So wonderfully is Jesus the second Adam of the new-born race, and that each member of that family may bear a likeness to him, and yet exhibit a clear individuality. A man advanced in years and wisdom may put him on, and so may the least instructed, and the freshest come among us. Please remember this: we may not choose examples, but each one is bound to copy the Lord Jesus Christ. You, dear friend, have a special personality; you are such a person that there is not another exactly like you, and you are placed in circumstances so peculiar that no one else is tried exactly as you are; to you, then, is this exhortation sent: "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ." It is absolutely certain that for you, with your personal singularity and peculiar circumstances, there can be nothing better than that you array yourself in this more than royal robe. You, too, who live in ordinary circumstances, and are only tried by common temptations, you are to "put on the Lord Jesus Christ;" for he will be suitable for you also. "Oh," cries one, "but the Lord Jesus never was exactly where I am!" You say this from want of knowing better, or from want of thought. He has been tempted in all points like as you are. There are certain relationships which the Lord Jesus could not literally occupy; but then he took their spiritual counterpart. For instance, Jesus could not be a husband after the flesh. Does any one demand how he could be an example for husbands? Hearken! "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." He is your model in a relationship, which, naturally, he never sustained, but which, in very deed, he has more than fulfilled. Wherever you may be, you find that the Lord Jesus has occupied the counterpart of your position, or else the position is sinful, and ought to be quitted. In any place, at any hour, under any circumstances, in any matter, you may put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and never fear that your array will be unsuitable. Here you have a winter and a summer garment—good in prosperity as well as adversity. Here you have a garment for the private chamber or the public forum, for sickness or for health, for honor or for reproach, for life or for death. "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ," and in this raiment of wrought gold you may enter into the King's palace, and stand among the spirits of just men, made perfect.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Whosoever Will Let Him Come.

Turn to Isaiah 55th chapter. "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the water, and he that hath no money, come ye and buy and eat, yea come buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, come unto me and hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David."

You see, dear friends, that these most excellent things are for those who thirst, who hearken, and who come; the "sure mercies of David" promise life and honor in the kingdom of God, to believers everywhere, and that sublime sentence in Revelation from the lips of Jesus himself, the "bright morning star," invites you to come. "Whosoever will!" Not only the Jew, but the Greek; the bond, the free, all being made one in Christ will be blessed with everlasting life.

You observe the blessing is free. Without money, and without price. The honors of this world are not free. No money, no entrance to its high seats. Tennyson's lines describe it—

"Every door is barred with gold,
And opens but to golden keys."

But there is one door that opens differently. To poor, to rich, to great, to small, to all conditions and classes of men, who will knock, swings back the door of life. What a grand system! How many would be excluded if it took gold to open the door! How many worthy men and women would be cast upon the barren charity of the world. To one who offered to buy the wondrous privileges and powers granted by Christ, Peter said "thy money perish with thee; thou hast no part or lot in the matter!" Not all the riches of the earth can purchase life. Its high stations heaped up cannot lift one above the gravel. Alas! for him who gives his life to the world. He is profited nothing. He dies, his sons come to honor or dishonor; he knows it not; and he awakes to the miserable poverty of everlasting shame and contempt.

But, dear friends, we will not look only on the "dark side." You will come! you will open your hearts to the light! At first one slender ray stealing through the cloud, then another, and another, until the whole east glows in the kingly splendor of the sun; so ray by ray light will fall upon you, purifying and vivifying, until you stand in the everlasting glory of the "Sun of Righteousness." Amen.—W. I. Crockett.

The Promised Land.

So numerous are the Scriptures respecting the earth, as the residence of the redeemed, that the apathy and the indifference which many manifest respecting it, not to say opposition, is really surprising. Have not such reason to pray that the rebuke to Israel may not be said to them?—"Yea, they despised the pleasant land, they believed not his Word; but murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the Lord." If angels desired to look down upon earth when Christ came to suffer, will they not do so when he shall come to reign? Many prophets and righteous men desired to see the days of the mere gospel dispensation; and shall any of the righteous have no longing anticipation respecting the most glorious of all dispensations, the regeneration? Shall the earnest expectation of the creature wait for it?—shall the spirit and bride invite to it? and shall there be Christians who have no earnest expectation, no groan or emotion, nor any desire respecting it? Shall the representatives of the redeemed, in the symbolic vision shown to John of Patmos, sing, "We shall reign on the earth," and that song of the restored earth awaken no response in the breast of those who hope to join in the song of the redeemed?

Lying to Children.

One of the most villainous tricks a grown-up bully can be guilty of, is lying to frighten innocent children; yet this is often done, until they lose all confidence in human testimony, believe that others will lie, and become liars themselves.

The most frequent form in which offences against the truthfulness of children are cast is like that of which the Rev. Wm. Arnot gives us an account in his excellent work, entitled "Laws from Heaven for Life on Earth." He says: "A lie told by seniors for their amusement threw a dark shadow over my childhood, and took much of the sunshine out of it." Some person in a military dress, interested in the child for his father's sake, took me fondly in his arms when I was between four and five years of age, and slipped a shilling into my hand. I either never knew, or have long since forgotten, what his name was, and what relation he sustained to the family, but the instant he passed, older children and grown-up people told me, with an air seriousness, that I was enlisted, and that when I should be old enough the officer would return and take me off to the wars. This intimation sank into me, and lay at my heart like lead, all the period of my childhood. I was afraid to speak of it and suffered in silence. The terror was never taken away by a serious explanation, for no one knew how great it was. I obtained no relief until my understanding gradually outgrew it. That lie wrought grievous harm to me. Besides overclouding life at its very dawn, it left within me when it departed a general grudge against mankind for wantonly wounding the helpless. When the boy was big enough to shake off the phantom, he was full of indignation against the world for torturing a child."

Thousands will read this who cannot remember so vividly the occasions of their suffering in a similar manner, nor state so definitely the result on their subsequent life, but who will feel this picture is all too true to nature. It would be a matter for thanksgiving that William Arnot suffered so, if this pathetic account which he gives of the cruel injury might result in preventing other young hearts being so unkindly served.

For Special Service.

No one man can do all work, or all kinds of work. A crow-bar could not do the work of a darning needle, nor could a handspike fill the place of a telescope. In the Lord's service there are men of various classes to do work of various kinds.

Sometimes persons see mainly the importance of their own special work; the value of others' work they do not so well comprehend; and this may be in the divine order, for the Lord who gives to each man his work and lays it on his heart, of course desires that he should feel a greater interest in that than in any other work.

Yet there are broader views and it is important that we take broad views of the work which God is doing in the world. He is doing much that we do not see, and much that we cannot know. His eye takes in the whole; we see but little. Faith in our great Commander helps us to believe that the battle goes well on the whole, though in our own particular sphere we may seem to encounter difficulty and defeat.

If God gives us to comprehend something of the breadth of his great plans and purposes, we shall not only work ourselves, but we shall have deep sympathy with other workers, and our prayers will reach out for those whom we have never seen in the flesh. Some are in the thickest of the fight; some stand lonely on the watch-tower; some are exposed to storms and tempests; some have trials and conflicts more than they can tell. In all these cases men may be doing the one thing which the Master has given them to do, and though they may be judged and doubted by other men, they have the approval of the heavenly Father. There are diversities of gifts and diversities of duties: some must wield the trowel, some must hold the sword; some must plunge into the thickest of the fight, others must stand still, though with throbbing hearts, and await the orders of the great Commander. Some must meet the enemy, defiant, impudent, and blasphemous, put to flight the armies of the aliens, and smite hip and thigh the powers of darkness and the hosts of hell; others must comfort mourners, bind up wounds, and open prison doors.

Let each man seek to know his own place and his own work; let him count his chiefest joy that he is under orders from the great Captain of Salvation. He is not without direction, though he seems to go unguided; he is not without company, though he seem to walk alone; he is not without help, though he seem to be surrounded by embattled hosts. He has the presence, the blessing, the encouragement of the Most High, and the Strength of Israel is his portion and support. Let those who know the Lord see to it that they stand ready to do whatever he bids them, and to receive with thankful hearts whatever he bestows. —H. L. Hastings.

A Scientfic Prophecy.

Sometimes a scientific Saul gets in "among the prophets," and it is amazing to see how he goes on with his predictions.

Camille Flammarion, the French scientist, thus expresses himself in La Correspondance Scientifique, regarding the ultimate fate of our globe:

"The earth was born; she will die. She will die either of old age, when her vital elements shall have been used up, or through the extinction of the the sun, to whose rays her life is suspended. She might also die by accident, through collision with some celestial body, meeting her on the route; but this end of the world is the most improbable of all.

"She may, we repeat, die a natural death through the slow absorption of her vital elements. In fact, it is probable that the air and water are diminishing. The ocean, like the atmosphere, appears to have been formerly much more considerable than it is in our day. The terrestrial crust is penetrated by waters which combine chemically with the rocks. It is almost certain that the temperature of the interior of the globe reaches that of boiling water at a depth of about six miles, and prevents the water from descending any lower; but the absorption will continue with the cooling of the globe. The oxygen, nitrogen and carbonic acid which compose our atmosphere also appear to undergo absorption, but slower. The thinker may foresee, through the mist of ages to come, the epoch, yet afar off, in which the earth, deprived of the atmospheric aqueous vapor which protects her from the glacial cold of space by preserving the solar rays around her, will become chilled in the sleep of death. As Henri Vivarez says: 'From the summit of the mountains a winding-sheet of snow will descend upon the high plateaus and the valleys, driving before it life and civilization, and masking forever the cities and nations that it meets on its passage.' Life and human activity will press insensibly toward the intertropical zone. St. Petersburg, Berlin, London, Paris, Vienna, Constantinople and Rome, will fall asleep in succession under their eternal shroud. During very many ages equatorial humanity will undertake Arctic expeditions to find again under the ice the place of Paris, Lyons, Bordeaux and Marseilles. The sea coast will have changed, and the geographical map of the earth will have been transformed. No one will live and breathe any more except in the equatorial zone, up to the day when the last family, nearly dead with cold and hunger, will sit on the shore of the last sea in the rays of the sun which will thereafter shine here below on an ambulant tomb, revolving aimlessly around a useless light and a barren heat."

These gentlemen have not the slightest fear of being laughed at for their mistakes, for they fix the fulfillment of their predictions so far off through "the mist of ages" to come, that both prophecies and prophets will be forgotten long before the period of their fulfillment arrives. But what do they know about the matter? They speculate as crickets might about an earthquake, or as bugs might about the history and destiny of some giant oak. Quite probably there may have been savans as wise as these in Noah's time who propounded similar theories, and who perished outside the ark. Well, let science shiver and chatter her teeth in fear of the final "freeze out" of the human family, "Nevertheless, we, according to his promise look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." The day of the Lord will come; the heavens pass away with a great noise, the elements melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up. But beyond all this there is a brighter future than scientists have fancied or sages have dreamed, when the world renewed and redeemed shall reflect the glory of its Creator, and God shall be all in all.—Safeguard.

Obituary.

Louisa J. Owens was born May 2, 1831, in Bartholomew Co., Ind. She was married to William Osborn Feb. 11, 1849. To this union were born seven children, of whom six are living. She leaves beside her husband and six children, eighteen grand children and 1 great grand child. She united with the Church of God, Jan. 28, 1890, of which she remained a member until the time of her death.

She died Monday, April 30, 1906, lacking two days of being 75 years of age.

May she quietly sleep until the trump of God shall call the dead in Christ to consciousness and reward. Funeral services by,

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

WE wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

Trust in Jesus.

"Savior, happy would I be,
If I could but trust in thee;
Trust thy wisdom me to guide,
Trust thy goodness to provide,
Trust thy saving love and power,
Trust thee every day and hour;
Trust thee as the only light,
In the darkest hour of night;
Trust in sickness, trust in health,
Trust in poverty and wealth;
Trust in joy and trust in grief,
Trust thy promise for relief;
Trust thy blood to cleanse my soul,
Trust thy grace to make me whole;
Trust thee living, dying too,
Trust thee all my journey through;
Trust thee till my feet shall be Planted on the crystal sea;
Trust thee ever blessed Lamb,
Till I bear the victor's palm;
Trust thee till my soul shall be Wholly swallowed up in thee."

Obedience.

Our subject is obedience, but what does it mean to obey and whom should we obey? The Word of God says we cannot serve or obey two masters, for either we will hate the one and love the other, or we will hold to one and despise the other, we cannot serve God and mammon. Those who have searched the Word of God, and sought with their whole heart to know the truth, know to whom they owe obedience. He has showed them what is good and what he requires of them; how they may live godly and humble themselves to walk in all his ways; and to love him and obey him with their whole heart and soul. Yes, the fear of the Lord or obedience to his will is the beginning of wisdom. A good understanding have all they who do his commands.

We cannot be surprised that those who neglect the study of the Scriptures or reject it entirely are today serving mammon or the pleasures of the world. But we who have obeyed the truth surely something far better than this should occupy our thoughts. Paul says, "Am I now seeking to please men or God? If I were still pleasing men I should not be the servant of Christ." We ought to obey God rather than men. It is very plainly set forth, that if we please men we will not be pleasing to God. We know this and happy are we if we choose that better part which shall never be taken away from us. Blessed are they who hear the Word and do it with the whole heart, for they shall be called the peculiar treasure of God and shall be numbered among the priceless jewels which the Savior gathers into his kingdom. Jesus says, "If any man love me he will keep my words and take up his cross and follow me, where I am there shall also my servant be. If any man serve me him will my Father honor. Know ye not to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey; his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness. Thanks be to God that whereas we were servants of sin, we have become obedient to that form of doctrine which has been taught us from God's Word; and now being made free from sin we have become followers of Jesus. We ought then to take no pleasure in unrighteousness, but consider ourselves dead unto sin and yield ourselves unto God as those who are alive from the dead. We arose from the watery grave of our past sin to walk in a new life of righteousness. Believing that in this way alone we could become united to Christ, and if faithful receive a crown of eternal life when Jesus comes to claim his own. How then shall we live any longer as before. Indeed it was better we had never known the way of life than to turn again into the path that leads to death. If we belong to Jesus we are not of the world, even as he was not of the world. But as we are in the world let it be our constant prayer that we may be kept from its evil ways and learn how to obey in spirit and in truth, and live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. Proving to ourselves and others what is the good and acceptable will of God. That we may know what the hope of his calling and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what the exceeding greatness of his power to usward, who believe, according to that working of the strength of his might, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead and made him to sit at his own right hand in the heavenly places. We who have been united to Christ have been builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit. We are his workmanship created in Christ Jesus for good works. If we have the Spirit of Christ we will let the glorious light of the gospel of life and immortality shine forth that others may see and that we may be known as a peculiar people, zealous of good works. God has raised us up and made us to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and in the ages to come he will show the exceeding riches of his kindness to us when we enter into the joy of our Lord. When we behold clearly the things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man those things which God hath prepared for them that love him. It is true we know something now of the blessedness of that time. We have the first fruits of the Spirit. When we believed and obeyed the Word of truth we were given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts, which is the pledge of our inheritance until the redemption of God's own possession. Even now if we are living in touch with him we are acquainted with some of the fruits of the Spirit. Love, joy, longsuffering, kindness, humility and faith. But now we know only in part; we see as in a mirror doubly; but when we awake in his likeness, when we come forth to reign we shall see all things clearly and know all things fully even as we have been fully known. Then the fight of faith will end in sight and a glorious victory be ours. But are we all ready, are our lamps trimmed and burning, or are they just flickering and ready to go out. We cannot follow Jesus unless we are walking in the light. O what an awful thought! To be outside the circle of the light of his love when he says, Gather my saints unto me; those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. We indeed have need of patience, for the cross bearers of Christ must also be acquainted with sorrow and grief even as he was. Yet we must follow on, not alone when the path is bright, but when sorrow and pain and grief lay hold on us and our burden seems more than we can bear. Then too we must follow on. But O thank God, we need not carry the load alone, we have one who is able to help. One who says, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." The Lord chasteneth every one whom he receiveth, but he has promised that our burden shall never be more than we can bear with the help of Jesus. Our chastening seems grievous now, but when it yields the peaceful fruit of righteousness, even eternal life, then we shall be glad we were able to say, "Thy will be done."

"For they shall reap who sow in tears,
Rich gladness through eternal years."

The Promise to the Children of God.

"I will give unto thee and thy seed after thee the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession," is a promise that should greatly interest each of us, although it was promised away back, to the fathers. In Genesis xvii. this promise was made to Abraham, and in the 26th chapter we read, The Lord appeared to Isaac and said, Sojourn in this land, for unto thee and thy seed I will give all these countries and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father, and in the 35th chapter we find the Lord also appeared to Jacob saying, The land which I give to Abraham and Isaac, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed after thee will I give the land. Now as God sware that he would give the land for an everlasting inheritance and as a necessity to inherit the land forever it would include the promise of everlasting life, to possess it forever. Brothers and sisters, is it not worth striving for? Should we not labor without ceasing when such a promise as this is in view? This includes an inheritance in the kingdom of God as kings and priests of God. Yes, this is a very important promise and we should ever bear it in mind for it is part of the gospel of Christ, of which Paul says he was not ashamed, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes, to the Jew first and also to the Greek. These same promises and this same gospel of which Paul was not ashamed have come to you and I. May we ever pray to God and give thanks, that our understanding has been opened that we know the greatness of his love and power to usward, who believe. May we ever be faithful to our calling. Exhort and build each other up in the most holy faith; for never was there a time when we need more constant labor, and to ever bear in mind those precious promises that we may not lose sight of the goal.

These promises include the vision of John on the Isle of Patmos, who saw the great city New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a Bride adorned for her husband. This will be the fulfillment of the promise to the fathers that they should have the land forever. Then is when that everlasting life begins. O brothers and sisters, may we be of that happy band that shall arise to meet the Lord in the air and reign with him forever, when this sin-cursed earth is made as the garden of Eden, when sickness, sorrow and death is removed, when in Abraham and his seed all the nations of earth shall be blessed.

The Clash in Egypt has Bad Aspect.

Any tendency that there may be to minimize the importance of the dispute that has cropped up between Great Britain and the sublime porte, in connection with Akabah and the Sinai peninsula, is disposed of by Great Britain's ultimatum to Turkey.

If Lord Cromer has asked for troops, it is partly on account of further Turkish aggression in Egypt, and, partly, too, in consequence of the unrest of the native Moslem population in Egypt, arising from the boldness of the Sultan's defiance of Great Britain's protests. In spite of all that the English have done toward restoring the prosperity of the land of the Nile, in diminishing by three-quarters the former burdens of taxation of the people, and in assuring to them the security of life and property, British rule is not popular in Egypt. This is because it is the rule of people of an alien race, professing an altogether different creed, and imbued with an ill-concealed sense of superiority. Those who have lived longest in the orient have often been forced to confess that in their opinion a native would prefer tyranny and oppression on the part of a fellow countryman following the same religion, to the just, liberal, and kindly rule of a foreigner.

In the eyes of most of the Moslems in Egypt the sultan holds the position not only of temporal suzerain but of caliph—that is to say: of spiritual head of Islam, a title to which he has no real right. In any dispute between the padishah and a Christian nation, such as, for instance, the English, all the sympathies of the natives of Egypt would naturally be with the Turkish ruler. And were any such thing as an Ottoman invasion of Egypt to take place it is extremely probable that the natives would rise against the English, making common cause with the Turkish troops. The sultan maintains a whole horde of agents, ecclesiastical and secular, at Cairo and elsewhere in the land of the Nile for no other purpose than to intrigue against the English, and, by reason of their community of race and creed with those of the people among whom they labor, their work creates a number of difficulties for the British administrators of the former empire of the Pharaohs.

It may be asked what motive the sultan can have thus to render himself objectionable to the English in Egypt. The reason is a simple one. Whereas in former times the sublime porte was wont to look upon Great Britain as its most loyal friend and most powerful protector—in fact, as the principal safeguard of the integrity of the Ottoman empire—today it regards Great Britain as its most dangerous enemy. The sultan has never forgotten or forgiven England's seizure of Egypt and the part which she played in depriving him of Cyprus, Crete, and other portions of his empire. He bitterly resents England's intervention in behalf of the Christian populations of Macedonia and of Armenia, and what disturbs him more than anything else are the maneuvers which he ascribes to the English in Arabia.

At the present moment there are nearly 500,000 Arabs in open insurrection against his sovereignty in the Yemen, and the most capable of his generals and the finest troops of his army have found it quite impossible to suppress the rebellion. The sultan is absolutely convinced that the latter was started and is fomented by the English, with the object of eventually depriving him of the supremacy of Islam and of establishing the grand shereef of Mecca in his stead as caliph of the Moslem faith. In fact, England has altogether supplanted Russia as the sublime porte's most bitter foe in the eyes of the Turks, and especially in those of the sultan.

Time and again since 1882 has Abdul Hamed endeavored to invoke the intervention of the great powers of Europe against England in connection with the military occupation of Egypt, and no international congress has ever been held without the Ottoman delegates making a determined effort to submit this phase of the eastern question to the conference. There is reason to believe that his present active aggression on the peninsula of Sinai has been devised in the hope of, in some way or another, bringing the alleged illegality of the presence of the British in Egypt before the powers.

It is understood that the Sultan, after allowing the Akabah difficulty to reach the brink of war with Great Britain, will at the last moment, in the interests of peace, humanity, and civilization, suggest that the matter be submitted for arbitration to The Hague tribunal or else to an international congress similar to that recently held at Algeciras on the subject of Morocco.

It will be difficult for England to refuse the proposal of submitting the problem to The Hague tribunal, which, if it judges the matter upon a purely legal basis, must necessarily decide against Great Britain, since the only excuse which she has for being in virtual possession of Egypt is, first, the necessity of safeguarding her line of communications with her vast dependencies in the orient, and, secondly, the moral and material benefits which she has conferred on Egypt by her rule. Once the Sinai peninsula difficulty is brought before The Hague tribunal, the entire Egyptian problem will have to be thrashed out.

Of course an international conference, similar to that which has just dealt with the Morocco question, would be more to the sultan's taste. He has recently seen how the English agreement with France, assigning to the latter the virtual protectorate, and eventual possession, of Morocco, has been rendered valueless by the Algeciras congress, which not only assures the integrity of the Moorish empire, but likewise deprives France of exercising the same control over Morocco which England maintains over Egypt. Abdul Hamid feels that if he can only cause another Algeciras conference to assemble for the purpose of settling the Sinai peninsula problem, it would not be allowed to separate without taking up the entire Egyptian question, and, ignoring that agreement by means of which France accepted English supremacy in Egypt, would put a period to Great Britain's privileged position there, and place all foreign nations on the same footing, just as in Morocco.

There seems to be a widespread impression among the public that Emperor William whom the Sultan looks on as his most powerful protector and champion, and who has known how to turn his friendship for the sultan to such great industrial, commercial, and political advantage to the German empire, is backing and encouraging Abdul Hamid in the matter, and that the padishah relies on the kaiser to assume the same role in behalf of Turkey as that which he has lately been playing with so much success in behalf of Morocco. The idea is a plausible one. But the English government has gone out of its way to repudiate and deny the suggestion that the kaiser has anything whatsoever to do with the matter, and there is no doubt that the British authorities are justified in acquitting the German monarch of any responsibility in the affair.

For while the emperor may occasionally be exasperated by the persistent attacks upon him in the English press, he remains the best friend of Great Britain in all Germany. He showed this at the time of the Boer war, and also on several other occasions, when, in defiance of public sentiment in his country, he virtually stood between his subjects and Great Britain. Popular feeling in Germany, however, is decidedly hostile to England, and it is probable that while the sultan has received no encouragement either from the kaiser or his government, he is relying on the German people's approval of his projects against England.

With regard to the Sinai peninsula, which is just at present the principal point at issue between Abdul Hamid and Great Britain, it is necessary to call attention to the fact that although half of it belongs to Egypt, pure and simple, and the other half to Turkey, yet for seventy years the khediviate, by virtue of an agreement concluded in 1841 with the sublime porte and reaffirmed in April, 1892, has enjoyed control of the peninsula. Now this was all well before the sultan conceived the project of constructing the railroad from Damascus to Mecca, and connecting at the former place with the railroad system of Anatolia and Asia Minor. This railroad, which is now about two-thirds completed, with American rails, Italian engineering talent, and German capital, is destined to strengthen the sultan's hold upon Arabia and the holy places of Islam, thus consolidating his position as commander of the faithful and as caliph. But, for a considerable stretch, the railroad will be entirely at the mercy of the power that controls the Sinai peninsula, and the sultan is too much imbued with the sense of England's enmity to relish the idea of her possession thereof in the name of Egypt.

It is on this account that he has not only dispatched some 5,000 soldiers to occupy Akabah, the port at the head of the Red sea gulf of that name, but has also seized the Egyptian town of Tabah, and other places within the purely Egyptian portion of the peninsula, actually imprisoning the khedive's English officers, who protested against this piece of high handed aggression. In fact, the developments of the last week, as acknowledged by Sir Edward Grey, the secretary of state for foreign affairs, in the house of commons two or three days ago, indicate that Turkey is in the act of extending her grasp over the whole of the Sinai peninsula.

To the demands made for the withdrawal of his troops the sultan offers an unqualified refusal on the ground that Egypt, being merely a province of his empire, enjoying certain privileges of self-government by grace of the sublime porte, there can be no question of trespass on Egyptian territory, since he has a sovereign right to dispatch his troops to any portion of his dominions. With a view of emphasizing this contention his military forces stationed in the provinces of Tripoli have recently established themselves in several Egyptian villages lying well within the western boundary line of the khediviate.

Moreover, he has intimated his intention of reviving all the former glories of Akabah as a seaport. In the days of Solomon it was known as Elath, and it was there that his argosies unloaded the treasures which they had brought from the Indies, from far Cathay, and from the land of Ophir for conveyance to Jerusalem. Abdul Hamid intends to connect it by a short branch with the main line of the Damascus-Mecca railroad, only a few miles distant, and to establish there, with the help of Teuton capital, not only a great commercial seaport but also a powerful naval stronghold, and an important German firm, the Deutsches Kohlen-Depot, is already in the act of opening a branch house there.

That England which has spent so much blood and treasure in securing her line of communications with her great dependencies in the orient, can submit to this, appears impossible. The creation of a great Turkish seaport at Akabah, fed by the Damascus-Mecca railroad, would destroy the supremacy which she now exercises in the Red Sea for the benefit of the entire civilized world, and would place the sultan and any European power with which he might be allied, in a position to strike a blow at one of the most vulnerable points of her line of communications with India and Australia, besides exposing Egypt to the constant danger of an armed descent by Turkey.

One word in conclusion. It is unfortunate that the proposal made some time ago by Lord Cromer for the capitulations and of the consular courts in Egypt, and the subjection of all foreigners to the Egyptian tribunals, should have been brought forward in Parliament at Westminster just at the present moment. Lord Cromer proposes to substitute for the present troublesome arrangement a scheme whereby a council, composed of legal representatives of the great powers, preferably the foreign judges of the so-called international tribunals of Egypt, should have a voice in the devising of any new laws. But this is a matter which could best be settled by one of those international congresses, which the sultan by his acts of armed aggression on the Sinai peninsula is endeavoring to obtain for consideration of the entire Egyptian question.—Ex-attache in Chicago Tribune.

A Considerate Son.

Dama was the chief jeweler of Ascalan, and eminently distinguished for his exemplary life and many virtues. On a certain occasion a committee of the elders called upon him for the purpose of purchasing precious stones with which to ornament the ephod of the high priest. Diamonds were the stones they sought, and having thus informed the jeweler, they offered him what they considered a fair price for the gems. Dama told them he could not at that time attend to them, and bade them call again later in the day. The elders did not wish to be thus put off; and persisted in their demand for immediate attention, and they offered double and triple the price they had at first proposed. But Dama was immovable, and they finally went away greatly disappointed, not to say wrathful.

Later in the day the elders called again, and Dama placed before them the diamonds they desired, and when they had made their selection they tendered to him the higher price which they had just offered.

"No," said the jeweler," "Your first offer was all the stones are worth, and that only will I take." "Why, then," exclaimed the chief of the elders, in astonishment, "did you not close with that offer this morning?"

"Because," answered Dama, "My father had the key of the chest in which the diamonds were deposited, and he was at that time asleep. He is aged and infirm, and his short hour of sleep was of more worth to him than was your increased offer of price to me. My father has not so many comforts that I can knowingly deprive him of a single one."

The high priest, when he had heard the story, came to the jeweler's house, and laid his hand upon Dama's head, and said: "Blessed be thou by him who hath said, 'Honor thy father and thy mother;' and in the time to come may thy children honor thee as thou hast honored the author of thy being."

Living Oracle.

"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Matt. xxiv. 35.

You never get to the end of Christ's words. There is something in them always behind. They pass into proverbs, they pass into laws, they pass into doctrines, they pass into consolations; but they never pass away, and after all the use that is made of them, they are still not exhausted.

Announcement.

The annual meeting of the North West Conference will convene at Felida, Wash., on the evening of the 15th of June and hold over the following Sunday.

Teams will be at the Riverview hotel close to the Ferry landing at Vancouver, Wash. Those wishing conveyance out should write in time that the brethren will know how many teams to send out. Address P. G. Woolt, Vancouver, Wash. R. F. D. No. 3.

Now brethren, all are invited to come and give their aid for a good meeting, both by their presence and a good word for the truth. Come, all speaking the same thing. Paul in writing to Titus says, Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine. If we all do this we will have a meeting long to be remembered.

Yours for the truth.

One Hundred Years Since Pike's Peak Was Discovered.

Elaborate plans are being made at Colorado Springs to celebrate in truly western style the Centennial of the day when Lieut. Zebulon M. Pike first sighted the famous peak, which was afterwards the landmark of the hardy pioneer whose wagon train wended its slow way across the plains.

The Chicago & North-Western Railway announces extensive preparations for this event on the part of Colorado Springs and Denver, as well as on behalf of the various railway lines.

It is understood that the last week in September is to be devoted to a round of festivities to be participated in by ten thousand United States Regulars and a concourse of Indians, representing the various tribes with which the intrepid explorer came in contact on his toilsome march of discovery.

The national Guards, cadets, veterans, cowboys, pioneers, patriotic societies, fraternal societies and citizens generally will also take part in the program, which will include drills by the troops, war dances by the Indians, cowboys' sports, parades and tournaments.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 32.

1. In this wise hath the Lord God of Israel said; Take the cup of this unmixed wine out of my hand, and thou shalt give to drink unto all the nations unto whom I am sending thee;

2. And they shall drink and vomit and get crazy from before the face of the sword which I am sending into their midst.

3. And I took the cup out of the hand of the Lord, and I gave to the nations to drink, the nations unto whom the Lord had sent me;

4. Namely to Hierousalem and the cities of Jouda and the kings of Jouda and his rulers, to make them (the cities) a desolation and a trackless waste and a hissing;

5. And to Pharaoo king of Aigyptos and his courtiers and his great men;

6. And all his laity, and all his mixed multitude, and unto all the kings of the other tribes, and to Askaloon and to Geza and to Akkaroon and the rest of Azootos;

7. And Idoumaia and the Moonbites and the sons of Ammoon;

8. And kings of Turos and kings Sidoon and the kings in the country across the sea;

9. And Daidan and Thaiman and Roos and all the country that hath been sheared before his face;

10. And all the mixed-multitudes who camp in the wilderness;

11. And all the kings of Ailam, and all the kings of Persians;

12. And all kings from the rising of the sun those afar off and those nigh at hand; each one against his brother, and all the kings upon the face of the earth.

13. And thou shalt say unto them; In this wise hath the Lord said, an All-controlling Lord; Drink, and be drunken and vomit and fall; and ye shall not arise from before the face of sword which I am sending into your midst.

14. And it shall be when they are not willing to accept the cup from out thy hand so as to drink, thou shalt also say, In this wise hath the Lord said, drinking shall ye drink it;

15. Because in a city upon which my name hath been named I am beginning to afflict, and ye shall not be cleansed because I am calling a sword upon all who sit idle upon the earth.

16. And thou shalt prophesy unto them these words, and thou shalt say, The Lord from on high will speak oracularly, from his sacred place will he give his voice, a word will he oracularly deliver concerning his place, and they there will be like vintners have made answer, and destruction is coming to those who sit on the earth idly,

17. On a portion of the earth, because the Lord's judicial-procedure is with the nations; he will judge in relation to all flesh, and the irreverent have been given to a sword, saith the Lord.

18. In this wise hath the Lord said; Lo, calamities are coming from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind is going its way out from a farthest of the earth;

19. And there will be those wounded by the Lord in a day of the Lord from a portion of the earth even unto a portion of the earth; they shall not be buried in the earth for manure; upon the face of the earth shall they be.

20. Lament ye shepherds, cry and mourn ye rums of the sheep, because the days for your slaughter have been fulfilled, and ye will fall like the chosen rams;

21. And flight will leave off from the shepherds and salvation from the rams of the sheep.

22. A voice of the cry of the shepherds and a bleating of the sheep and of the rams, because the Lord hath destroyed their finding-places;

23. And the residue of the peace will cease from the face of the wrath of my anger;

24. He hath left even as a lion leaveth his remnant, because their land hath become a trackless-waste from before the face of the great sword.

COMMENT.

The reader will find what purports to be this same prophecy (chap. 32) in the C. V. & R. V. chapter xxv. 15-38 and he will do well to compare verse by verse as there is not time or space to do it here. The giving of "the cup" is the second step in this connected "Allam" prophecy, and any proper understanding of the prophecy depends largely upon keeping this connection clearly in mind; and this as I have already said has been utterly destroyed in the shuffle of the versions. Read and see for yourselves. Observe the reference in the 20th verse R. V. to "All the kings of the land of Uz" for instance—not in text at all—and "Thaiman and Roos" in the text omitted, and "Zuari and all the kings of Elam" substituted in place of it in the 25th verse and "Medes" for "Persians" in the 26th verse—and no "king of Sheshach" in this verse—in the true text. Observe "ye principal o the flock" instead of "ye ruins of the sheep" in the 34th and 36th verses.

Announcement.

The 48th Annual Conference of the Churches of God, in Michigan, will be held at Dutton, Kent Co. Michigan, commencing Thursday evening, May 31, 1906 and continue over the following Sunday, (June 1, 2, and 3.)

It is the desire of all who have been in the habit of attending these gatherings that all the churches send delegates to this meeting.

A cordial invitation to attend is extended to all and particularly the brethren of this and adjoining states.

A programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

Once again the invitation comes from Dutton, the dear old gathering place, to have the Annual Conference at their place. There has been many good and profitable meetings held at Dutton, it always seemed like a family reunion. Let us show them our appreciation of their invitation by our presence.

If you have some good news of what the Lord has done for you tell us of it, it will cheer us on our way. If trouble has been your portion and the load heavy, tell us, perhaps we can aid you, our prayers will be for you at least.

Jesus is coming, will the Annual Meeting of 1906 be the last? Come work while the day lasts.

EMMA JACKMAN, Sec'y.

The next annual Conferences of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

WE wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

"The Baptism with the Holy Spirit" a 10-page booklet with cover, printed in large type on fine paper. This pamphlet is a reproduction of a series of articles which appeared several years ago. Price 5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen. Send orders to the author, A. H. Zilmer, at Plymouth, Indiana.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J Daniel affirms. Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Notice is given that the brethren at Fonthill, Ontario, expect to have a special gathering—an all-day meeting on Sunday, May 27 next. We invite all lovers of truth to meet with us on this occasion. We expect three or four speakers. Any further information in respect to this meeting can be obtained by corresponding with the undersigned.

IMPORTANT NOTICES

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshal., Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

At Sea.

To the Editor of the Ontario:

A few days ago there appeares in two issues of The Ontario a couple of letters from Mr. A. Robinson criticising two sermons preached by Mr. Blagrave, on the Intermediate State, in those letters Mr. Robinson made some bold statements, one of which was that the immortality of the soul is nowhere taught in the Bible. I have been looking for a reply to those letters from some one but have not seen any. I am at sea in this matter and so are a good many others. Will no one come to our rescue?

Yours,
METHODIST.

AT SEA.

To the Editor of the Ontario:

I am sorry that a "Methodist" has been loosened from his moorings by the vaporing we have had recently on the spirituality and immortality of the human soul, and is drifting. His knowledge of the Bible and the teachings of his church ought to have secured him against that, but his cry for help has touched me and I hasten to the rescue. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Gen. ii. 7. Christ said, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see Me have." The attributes of mind are essentially different from those of matter. The body has extension, figure, solidity, divisibility, etc. Our intellectual and moral nature has consciousness, conscience, understanding, judgment, memory, reason and volition, as distinct and different from the properties of the body as it is possible to be. And from the vast capacities and wonderful developments of the human soul we infer its spirituality and immortality. And hence its value "What would it profit a man if he gained the whole world and lost his soul?" Abraham lived as a stranger and sought a better country, that is an heavenly one, and the splendor of Egypt's palaces paled before Moses' visions of a better world. The dying thief was assured that he would be with Christ in paradise, and Paul expected to depart and be with the risen Christ, not a dead Christ. "Indeed, God is not a God of the dead, but of the living, for all live unto him." Luke xx. 38.—R. N. Adams.

ROBINSON'S REPLY.

To the Editor of the Ontario:

In Monday's issue of the Ontario I noticed a communication, signed "R. N. Adams," in answer to a short letter which appeared in a recent issue of your paper, signed "Methodist," and as Mr. Adams characterizes my efforts (manifested in two letters which appeared in the issues of The Ontario dated March 3 and 12) as "vaporing" I trust you will allow me space for a rejoiner. In those letters I quoted several passages of Scripture bearing on the subject of the intermediate state and incidentally on the nature of man, showing that the being called "man" is wholly "mortal" and is in an unconscious state between death and the resurrection. Does Mr. Adams attempt to refute the deductions made from the many passages quoted and referred to in those letters? No, not he! And it is the opinion of the writer that Mr. Adams has very little chance of convincing "Methodist," or any others (who will exercise their reasoning powers in an unprejudicial manner) by simply calling those productions "vaporings." If Mr. Adams desires to make an impression on Methodist or any others who may be "at sea" in respect to these subjects let him take up the passage quoted by me scientific, and show conclusively that my deductions were not warranted by the language contained in the Scriptures brought forward. But instead of meeting the issue squarely he comes to the "rescue" of Methodists by quoting a few passages which are not at all to the point, as I shall now proceed to show as briefly as possible. His first is Gen. ii. 7, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." If Mr. Adams will come to the Word without prejudice or preconceived opinion he will see that it was the thing formed of the dust of the ground that became a living soul—not an immortal soul. Neither does it read that "God breathed" an immortal soul into the "man." Hesimply breathed breath into the man with the result that he "became a living being"—Leeser's translation. He next quotes the declaration of Christ that "a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." Griesbach gives phantasma as the proper word in the original instead of pneuma, which is here translated "spirit." Cruden also endorses this. The disciples thought they saw a phantom—apparition, or ghost. This, evidently, is why "they were terrified and affrighted." If Mr. Adams could find some passages which include the phrase, "immortal spirit" or "immortal soul" they would have weight in this discussion, and would be convincing to even the writer of this. But as there are none such in the Bible Mr. Adams has probably done as well as could be expected, and consequently to quote his own words: "From the vast capacities and wonderful developments of the human soul we infer its spirituality and immortality." That is, we must infer the truth of this doctrine seeing that the Bible does not declare it. Mr. Adams then quotes Matt. xvi. 26 to show the great "value" of the soul. The same Greek word which is rendered "soul" in this verse, is twice rendered life in the previous verse, and the R. V. translates the word 'life' instead of soul in verse 26. Dr. Adam Clark, the great Methodist commentor says, in his remarks on this verse, "On what authority many have translated the (original) word in the 25th verse, life, and in this verse, soul, I know not, but am certain it means life in both places." As to the dying thief, I refer Mr. Adams to my previous letter (March 12) for a Scriptural exposition of this in harmony with Christ's other utterances. Mr. Adams next says, "Paul expected to depart and be with the risen Christ." I doubt this very much because the general tenor of Paul's teachings were contrary to this idea. For instance see Phil. iii. 20; 1 Thes. i. 10; iv. 16, 17. It will be seen here that Paul taught that Christians are to wait for the Son of God to come from heaven. See also Acts i. 11. The word translated "depart" in Phil. i. 23 is rendered return in Luke xii. 36 and reads, "Be you like men waiting for their master when he will return," etc.—Diaglott version. The emphatic Diaglott gives this version of Phil. 23: "I am indeed, hard pressed by the two things;—(I have an earnest desire for the returning, and being with Christ, since it is very much to be preferred" to the other "two things." Mr. Adams' last quotation is, "God is not a God of the dead, but of the living, for all live unto him." Luke xx. 38. Jesus used this language to prove there would be a future life from the dead through a resurrection, but Mr. Adams quotes it to prove that man possesses an immortal soul. If Mr. Adams is right the language has no force whatever in proof of a resurrection. This is plain to any one who has any logic or reasoning capacity. All live to God because he has it in his mind to make them alive in the resurrection. "He makes alike the dead and calls things not in being as though they existed."—Emph. Diaglott Rom. iv. 1.

I trust, Mr. Editor, that if Mr. Adams write on this subject again he will try to demolish my arguments and pay some attention to the Scripture quotations brought forward in my previous letters, otherwise his own efforts might very appropriately be called "vaporings." Mr. Adams being a Methodist minister of considerable experience, he should be qualified to grapple with these subjects in a masterly manner. The writer of this thinks he is of the opinion that the Bible should be allowed to be its own interpreter, and that it should be expounded in such a way that it will be harmonious with itself, so as to avoid contradictions.—A. Robinson.

MR. ADAMS' REPLY.

To the Editor of The Ontario:

In reply to Mr. Robinson I would say that nine of the 23rd inst. was not written for his benefit, which I presume would be quite useless, but to save another from the malign influence of his teaching. A man who will attempt to degrade the human soul by saying that man is "wholly mortal" and that what God breathed into him is the same as what he formed of the dust of the ground, might as well say that when Christ breathed on his disciples and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," that he breathed on them the dust of the ground. The attributes of mind and matter are wholly distinct (as I showed in my letter) and must not be confounded together. The poverty of the ancient languages may have required the same terms that stand for "air, breath and wind to be applied to our spiritual part, but the spirituality of God is expressed by the same terms, and God is a spirit, and such also is the human soul made in his image.

A man who "doubts" that Paul expected to be with Christ when he departed this life and believed that to be absent from the body was to be present with the Lord (2 Cor. v. 8) evidently regards the apostles desire and delightful anticipation as a hallucination—a pleasant dream that will soon vanish into thin air—and all there is of the man will go down into the dark grave. It is marvelous the capacity some have for doubting. Some have doubted their own existence. If I should say that Stephen expected his requests to be granted when he looked up into heaven and saw its glory and Jesus standing on the right hand of God and said "Lord Jesus receive my spirit," I suppose Mr. Robinson would doubt the statement. If I should make the statement that when Moses and Elijah appeared in glory on the Mount of Transfiguration (Luke ix. 31) and talked with Jesus they brought the glory with them from heaven, not from below the surface of the ground, Mr. Robinson would doubt it. If I should affirm that Abraham's bosom and the place of torment where we find Lazarus, and the rich man immediately after death, are in the spirit world (and Christ never spoke a parable to mislead us) and that the conversation across the great gulf was not carried on in some sepulchre or cemetery, I suppose Mr. Robinson would still be able to doubt. There is no Scriptural or rational remedy for such doubting. The doubter is incorrigible, and perhaps the less notice taken of his doubts the better. It is better to pray for his salvation. This concludes my part in this correspondence.—R. N. Adams.

MR. ROBINSON'S REPLY.

To the Editor of the Ontario:

I trust you will allow me space for a few brief remarks in reference to Mr. Adams' last production, which appeared in The Ontario of the 2nd inst. He says his "of the 23rd inst. (ult. I presume he means) was not written for my benefit * * * but to save another from the malign influence of my teaching." To this I must say, that if Mr. Adams had not thrown any dirt in my direction I probably would not have given any attention to his letter alluded to. But the fact is this "Reverend" gentleman seems not to be able to discuss the question at issue, without slinging mud at his opponent, which is again made evident by the tone of his last letter; and the probable reason is that he has no better material or method at hand with which to bolster up unscriptural doctrine. Mr. Adams not only throws mud at his opponent, but he also tries to throw dust into the eyes of your readers by attributing statements to the writer which he never made. This is [illegible] when he (Mr. Adams) says is the statement "that what was formed of the dust of the ground." To this it must be said that I never uttered any such an absurdity. What I did say (in part) was, that it was the thing formed of the dust of the ground (man—Adam) that became a living soul—being—not an immortal soul as Mr. Adams would have it. Mr. Adams also intimated that I and I doubted Paul. This is also incorrect for what I doubted was that Paul expected to depart and be with Christ at death, and I gave abundance of Scripture evidence from Paul and others to warrant this doubt, all of which Mr. Adams ignores and does not attempt to refute. In fact this minister who came to the "rescue" of "Methodist" (who wrote that he was "at sea") has utterly failed to provide a sea-worthy vessel for the purpose of bringing "Methodist" safely ashore. No doubt Mr. Adams' intentions were of the best, but the fact is he could not build the boat on account of the scarcity of material. In my previous letters I quoted and referred to a considerable number of Scripture passages and made deductions therefrom which neither Mr. Adams nor any other person has attempted to overthrow. Instead of doing this Mr. Adams has brought forward a few passages (very few) which are supposed to support the popular [illegible] of the soul's immortality, none of which have been to the point and consequently do not conflict with those I quoted which were plain and emphatically against the popular doctrine. Mr. Adams in his last letter mentions three other passages which I will treat in another letter if allowed by the Editor. I would do so now but it would make the communication so lengthy that I fear space would not be allowed for it. It can be shown that there is no support for Mr. Adams in the passages alluded to.—A. Robinson.

To the Editor of The Ontario:

Mr. Adams in his last letter, which appeared in The Ontario of the 2nd inst, refers to 2 Cor. v. 8 as proof that the soul is an entity which can survive the death of the body and, in the case of the righteous, goes to be present with the Lord in heaven, etc. Now anyone reading this chapter can readily see that neither the soul nor spirit of man is once mentioned, and instead of Paul desiring to go to heaven he "earnestly desired to be clothed upon with our house which is from (comes from) heaven." "For," says Paul, "we that are in this tabernacle (temporal state) do groan, being burdened; not for (or because) we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." For "this corruptible (body) must put on incorruption, and this mortal (body) must put on immortality." So, when this takes place, "Death is swallowed up in victory." The righteous will then be "absent from the (mortal) body and be present with the Lord," on earth (not in heaven) in the incorruptible body, when "it will be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body." See 1 Cor. xv. 37-58; Phil. iii. 20, 21; Col. iii. 4; 2 Thes. ii. 1; Rev. xxii. 12; John xiv. 3. Instead of Paul teaching that he or any others would personally be present with the Lord immediately after death he taught, on the contrary, that the righteous must wait here for the coming of the Lord (1 Cor. i. 7; 1 Thes. i. 9, 10); and the true attitude of the genuine church of Christ is, to be anxiously looking for the Lord's coming from heaven; and the crown is to be given to those only "who love his appearing" and to those that are his it will be a glorious appearing. See Phil. iii. 20; Heb. ix. 28; Titus ii. 12, 13. Instead of Paul teaching that the righteous would be saved, and go to glory at death, he taught that the followers of Christ would be saved and appear in glory when Jesus comes the second time to judge and to set up his kingdom on earth. Col. iii. 4; 2 Tim. iv. 1-8; Heb. 28; Matt. xxv. 31-34. If the real Paul was an immortal soul which could, separated from the body, exercise all the functions characteristic of the soul and body combined, and could depart [illegible] at death, why was he so anxious to "attain unto the resurrection of the dead"? Phil. iii. 8-11. Well, we will have Paul himself throw some light on this question. In discussing the subject of the resurrection, in 1 Cor. xv., he says, "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain: ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep (dead) in Christ are perished." Paul's conclusion based on this is (if the dead rise not) that "in this life only we have hope in (or through) Christ." He further says, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Epheaus, what advantageth me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." If this language means anything it certainly forces one to the conclusion that if there be no resurrection there can be no future life for the dead. But it had been verified by over five hundred witnesses, that Christ had "risen from the dead, and became the first fruits of them that slept;" therefore the resurrection of the dead had been demonstrated; and this being the only channel for dead people to future life, Paul was naturally very anxious to "attain unto" it. It will be seen then that, unless we wish to set Paul against Paul, we must conclude that when we read, "Absent from the body and present with the Lord" it could not mean that Paul expected to be present with the Lord in heaven immediately after death.

Mr. A. next refers to Stephen's dying prayer—"Lord Jesus receive my spirit"—as proof that the spirit is the real man and goes to heaven at death in the case of the righteous. The "spirit" here could not have been Stephen for "he fell asleep" (died); "and devout men carried Stephen to his burial." Please note that it does not read Stephen's remains, or Stephen's body; but that which died and was buried was "Stephen" if we are to believe the record. See Acts vii. 60 and viii. 2. The "spirit" was something that was no part of the man called "Stephen," but was something that martyr possessed and was about to loose or part with, namely, his life, or that which caused Stephen to live, that is, the "breath of life;" this he committed to the care of the Lord Jesus that he might receive it again in the resurrection. The word translated "spirit" in Acts vii. 59 is rendered "life," (marginal reading, "breath") in Rev. xiii. 15. See also Luke viii. 55 and Jas. ii. 26, and note the marginal reading. The fact is that the ruach (spirit) of all mankind (wicked as well as righteous) "returns to God who gave it." Ecc. xii. 7. And we learn from Ecc. iii. 21, that the beast possesses this spirit as well as mankind, and "that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they all have one ruach (breath or spirit), so that a man (in this respect) hath no preeminence above a beast." "All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all return to dust again!" Another passage says, "If God set his heart upon man, if he (God) gather unto himself his spirit and his breath—all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." Job xxxiv. 14, 15. But, as has already been shown, man can look forward to future life through a resurrection from the dead. John v. 28, 29. If the term "spirit" here means an immortal entity it would involve the absurdity that animals are likewise endowed.

Mr. Adams next alludes to the transfiguration on the Mount, and intimates that Moses and Elijah brought the glory with them from heaven. To this I must say that in making this statement Mr. A. is "wise above what is written," for the Word does not say so, and moreover, there is no proof that Moses ever went to heaven, in fact there is abundant evidence to the contrary. And if Elijah went to the place of God's throne he went bodily, and this is the manner in which Christ went (bodily) and we have no account of any one ever going in any [illegible] 2 Kings ii. 11. Besides this there is nothing [illegible] account about either souls or spirits, and it is pure assumption for any one to affirm such. And as to going to heaven, we read that no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man." Jesus also said, "Where I go ye cannot come." John iii. 13; xiii. 33. And Peter told his audience that the patriarch David "is not ascended into heaven," but "that he is both dead and buried." Acts ii. 29, 34. Now, Jesus called this appearance on the mount a "vision" (Matt. xvii. 9), and we learn from Peter that a vision is something not real or true. Peter went out and followed the angel, without knowing that what was happening under the angel's guidance was real, but under the impression that he was seeing a vision. Acts xi. 9 Twentieth Century Testament. To those not befogged with popular superstition in matters of theology, further comment on the passages referred to by Mr. Adams is unnecessary. In all this discussion my opponents have failed to bring forward one plain passage to the point in proof of man being an immortal entity, whereas, on the contrary, I have quoted and referred to many plain passages showing that man is mortal and dependent [illegible] for future life and immortality. So it remains true that Jesus is "the resurrection, and the life" (John xi. 25); and that he will bring his reward with him, when he comes to reward his saints and to "give every man according as his work shall be:" Rev. xxii. 12. The righteous in the meantime will be looking for the Savior to come, "who will change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Paul and his faithful brethren will then be absent from the vile or mortal body and present with the Lord, being clothed with immortality or the house from heaven, and mortality will then be swallowed up of life, and "so shall we (then) be ever with the Lord." 1 Thes. iv. 17.

A. ROBINSON.

P. S. Mr. Adams also brings forward the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. As I have already given a brief exposition of this parable in one of my letters criticising Mr. Blagrave's sermons, which no doubt those of your readers who are interested in this discussion have seen, it will not be necessary to take up more of your valuable space for the purpose of treating this again, although the exposition of this parable given could be greatly enlarged to much better effect than has been manifested in the treatment given in the letter referred to. What I have said here also applies to the other passages that have been presented by Mr. Adams in support of the popular view. It is very hard to get space for even short expositions in any of the newspapers on matters pertaining to unpopular theology. A. R.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Bible "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The article by Brother Goss is the report of a discourse delivered by him at the Cleveland Church a short time ago.

Brother Joblin has been quite feeble again, and Brother P. Neill has been assisting in the work at Cleveland, Ohio.

Brother Zilmer was called to go to Grand Rapids, Mich., one day last week, and attend the funeral of Sister Simonds, the widow of Brother Joel A. Simonds, who died some years ago. We trust some one who has data will give our readers an appropriate obituary notice.

Two articles on our first page were sent by Brother A. Robinson, of Belleville, Ont., and are part of a sort of discussion he got into by the publication of certain sermons. Our Brother writes that his last communication was declined by the Editor, as his readers were not interested in the subject further.

Bro. Wm. Pate's Death.

The following details regarding the sudden ending of Bro. Pate's life are clipped from the Cleveland Evening News of the 16th inst, and which doubtless, many brethren and sisters will be interested in knowing:

A letter written by Miss Pate from Buxton Springs, England, on the day of her father's death, describes the manner of ending of William Pate, Sr.'s life. The letter reached Cleveland Monday. The attack which ended Mr. Pate's life was apoplectic in character.

Miss Pate was in her room at the hotel where they were stopping, when her father rapped at the door and asked her if she were ready for breakfast. Less than 10 minutes afterward Miss Pate went downstairs and saw her father sitting in a chair, his head supported by his hands. She stooped to him and placed her hand on his shoulder. He made no response. She shook him and still he was silent. A moment afterward she made the discovery that he was dead.

A powerful lesson of mortality surely; our constant prayer should be the words of the Spirit in the Psalmist, "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." Psa. xc. 12.

THE WORD.

"The Word of the Lord endureth forever and this is the Word that by the gospel is preached unto you." 1 Peter i. 25.

What is the difference between the Word and the gospel? When any one heareth the Word of the kingdom and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. This is he which receiveth seed by the wayside. Matt. xiii. 19. And straightway many were gathered together insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no not so much as about the door, and he preached the Word unto them. Mark ii. 2. Is there a blessing for those who study the Word? Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walketh in the law of the Lord. Blessed are they that keep his testimonies and seek him with the whole heart. Psa. cxix. 1-2. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. Rev. xxii. 14.

THE BURNING DAY.

Dear Bereans scattered abroad, grace and peace be multiplied unto you. As I never had the pleasure of meeting any of you, I will write to you. I have read some good articles from some of the Bereans, in the dear old Restitution.

As I have been requested to write, I have selected for my text 2 Peter iii. 7, 10, 11, 12. I pray God's blessing upon all. I believe we, who are now witnessing the last signs foretold by the Lord and his prophets, shall soon see and pass through this ordeal. The world is at the same stage of wickedness as it was just before the flood. There was a time when it repented God, that he had made man. Gen. vi. 5, 6. And the Lord said I will destroy man, whom I have made. And so we read that he did with water. And God established his covenant with Noah, that he would no more destroy the earth with the waters of a flood. Gen. ix. 11. But dear Bereans, there is to be another destruction, because wickedness is great on the earth. Jesus Christ tells us in his great prophecy in Matt. xxiv. 37, As it was in the days of Noah, so it would be when he came back to earth. We need not ask how it was in the days of Noah, he tells us plainly, and all we have to do is to read the Word, and compare the ages then and now. I ask when has there been such a time of feasting and marrying since then, until now. Think of the number of divorces and marriages that have been in the last few years, but to the text. I wish to show from words of Peter and other Scripture, that the old earth is indeed old and tottering, like an old man, and that it is reeling to and fro like a drunk man.

You have all heard and read of the sad fate of the city of San Francisco. It has been said by people who escaped from the terrible destruction of that city with their lives, that San Francisco was one of the wickedest cities in the world. The statement I do not doubt, for there was in that town one of the worst cut throat gangs in what was known as China Town, that ever inhabited a town. No man who ever went into that den ever came out to tell the story, but after the fire had burned everything away, there were caves and holes one hundred feet deep, where bones of men and women were found. This may be a special judgment sent upon the people. It is one of the signs of the times which shall come in this generation. And the same hour was there a great earthquake. Rev. vi. 12; viii. 5; xi. 13; xvi. 18; Matt. xxiv. 7; Acts xvi. 26.

When we read the statements of Prof. Hays and other scientists concerning the fire in the interior of the earth and compare them with God's holy Word, we can see that that may be God's plan of keeping the fires in store, reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. Prof. Hays says the earth is in a condition of unstable equilibrium in the interior, and is liable to be burned up at any time, others whom I might mention have given the old earth but a few years in which to be dissolved, but God holds the reins of government yet, and will steer it through safely, but must shall be a cleansing by fire. Beloved think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened you. 1 Peter iv. 12; Psa. xxxvii. 20; Mal. iv. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness.

Alex Stephens.

Dear Bereans:

"Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." Rev. iii. 11.

The above Scripture teaches there is a crown of life to be given to all those who are faithful when Jesus comes. Not only have they believed and obeyed the gospel, but they are found also to be carrying out Christ-like principles in their daily lives. The passage quoted above also teaches there is a possibility of one losing his or her crown, for Jesus says: "Hold that fast which thou hast."

It is not enough that we believe the gospel of the kingdom of God and obey all the requirements thereof, the hardest part is yet to come, that of practicing in our every day life, the principles laid down in the gospel. The Apostle Paul in the first chapter of Colossians, exhorted his disciples thus: "For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness.

This applies just as much to us in these last days as it did to the Colossian brethren in Paul's time. We must stand firm and unshaken, holding fast to the Word of God, and practicing, or living its teachings from day to day. If we do this we know we will have a crown. On the other hand if we think we have done all when we have believed and obeyed the gospel, and after a while begin to grow careless, and neglectful of our duties to Christ, go in with the world and its affairs, if we do these things and continue in them, we stand in great danger of losing our crown. They, only, will be saved, who continue unto the end to hold that fast which they have received. So it was that Paul, at the close of his grand and eventful life, could say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." May each of us be able to say this at the close of our lives.

They don't keep late hours, for they've always been told
'Twould injure their voices and make them look old.
They invite you to come, if you have a fleecar,
To the garden or grove, their rehearsals to hear;

Dear Restitution.

If you have room will you publish the following essays which were written for our Sunday School by children whose ages were thirteen and fourteen years.

There are others who might do equally as well at that age, but when we take into consideration that the writers of these had never attended a Sunday School until only a few months before these were written, and neither had possessed a Bible written in the English language before we began our Sunday School, we think them very good.

Job.

There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job.

This man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God and eschewed evil. He had seven sons and three daughters. His substance was seven thousand sheep, three thousand camels, five hundred yoke of oxen, five hundred asses and a great many servants. He was the greatest of all the men in the East.

Satan appearing before God obtaineth leave to tempt Job. One day there came messengers unto Job, one after another and told him they had stolen the oxen and asses. There came a great storm and killed his sons and daughter. Then Job arose and rent his mantle, and fell down upon the ground and worshipped the Lord, and said, "The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

Job got sick with sore boils so that he cursed the day of his birth. He complained of life because of his anguish.

Elihu accuseth Job of charging God with injustice. Job humbleth himself to God. God stirreth him up to shew his righteousness, power and wisdom, and the Lord turned the captivity of Job, and he prayed for his friends, also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before. So the Lord blessed the later end of Job more than the beginning. After this Job lived an hundred and forty years and saw his sons and son's sons, even four generations. So Job died being old and full of days.

THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL.

Abraham was Isaac's father. Isaac did not want Jacob to get a wife of Canaan, but to go to Padanaram, to the house of Bethuel and get a wife of the daughters of Laban. He went and got two wives whose names were Rachel and Leah. On his way home he met a man that wrestled with him. It was an angel. He asked Jacob what his name was? He told him and then he said that his name should not be Jacob any more, but Israel.

Israel had twelve sons and he loved Joseph the best. When his brothers saw that their father loved Joseph more than he loved them they threw him in a pit. Then some merchants passed by and bought him for twenty pieces of silver. He was brought to Egypt and was sold to Potiphar an officer of the king, and was made overseer of his house. Pharaoh had some dreams and Joseph could tell what they meant, and he was set over all the land of Egypt.

There came seven rich years and after that seven poor years. The people of Canaan had to go to Egypt for food. Israel sent his sons to buy corn in Egypt and Joseph was governor of the land and they had to buy from him. He knew them but they did not know him. They came a second time and Joseph told them who he was, and to bring their father and live there. Jacob and all of the children of Israel, which were seventy, moved to Egypt.

When the children of Israel had come to Egypt Joseph presented his father and some of his brothers to Pharaoh. Pharaoh told them that they could live in the land of Goshen, which is part of Egypt.

There was no bread in all the land so the people had to give cattle in exchange for bread to Joseph. But when money and cattle were gone they wanted Joseph to buy all their land for Pharaoh and they would be Pharaoh's servants. Joseph bought all the land of Egypt except the land of the priests. Joseph gave them seed to sow the land.

Before Jacob died he called his sons together and blessed and commanded each of the twelve tribes of Israel what to do. Israel lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years and died at the age of one hundred and forty-seven years. He told his son Joseph not to bury him in Egypt but to bury him in Canaan.

Joseph lived till he was one hundred and ten years of age. After Joseph and his brethren and all that generation died there arose a new king over Egypt. He thought that when the children of Israel were so many they might fight against the Egyptians, so he decided to have all the male children killed.

Once when Pharaoh's daughter and her maidens went to the river they found an ark hid among the flags of the river; they opened it and found a baby. They took it out and got one of the Hebrew women to take care of it. She was his mother. The child grew and she took him to Pharaoh's daughter and he became her son. She called him Moses. When Moses was grown he went to his brethren the children of Israel and saw that they were oppressed and abused by the Egyptians. God told Moses out of a burning bush that he had seen the affliction of his people and would deliver them out of the hands of the Egyptians and let them go to Canaan. But Pharaoh did not want to let them go so God sent ten plagues upon the Egyptians and every time God hardened Pharaoh's heart so he would not let them go till at the night of the passover after living there 430 years they were delivered out of Egypt.

God went before the children of Israel by day in a pillar of cloud to show them the way, and by night in a pillar of fire, so they could go both night and day. The Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart and he got his army, chariots and horses and started after the children of Israel. He was sorry that he had let them go so he was going to try to get them back again. They overtook them encamping by the Red Sea. The Lord told Moses to stretch his hand over the sea. He made the waters to go back by a great east wind, so the children of Israel walked on the bottom of the sea on dry ground. The Egyptians went too but when the children of Israel got to the other side, the Lord made the water go over Pharaoh and all his army.

The Lord called Moses and told him to come up on Mount Sinai. God gave Moses two tables with the ten commandments, and he gave him some other laws. When Moses stayed so long on the mountain the children of Israel wanted to get another God, so Aaron told them to get all their jewelry and he would make it into a golden calf. When Moses came down from the mount and saw the god they had made he got angry and broke the tables that God had given him but he gave him two more like them.

Announcement.

The annual meeting of the North West Conference will convene at Fallda, Wash., on the evening of the 15th of June and hold over the following Sunday.

Teams will be at the Riverview hotel close by the Ferry landing at Vancouver, Wash. Those wishing conveyance out should write in time that the brethren will know how many teams to send out. Address P. G. Woolf, Vancouver, Wash. R. F. D. No. 3.

Now brethren, all are invited to come and give their aid for a good meeting, both by their presence and a good word for the truth. Come, all speaking the same thing. Paul in writing to Titus says, Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine. If we all do this we will have a meeting long to be remembered.

Yours for the truth.

Almira Brooks, Sec'y.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of the Abrahamic Faith, will be held at the Antioch meeting house, five miles south of Plymouth, on the Michigan road, commencing on Friday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., June 8th, 1906, and continuing over the following Sunday. We urge that every church of our faith that possibly can, be represented by duly appointed delegates, as there will be some business to be considered at this meeting and we therefore desire a full attendance. A program will appear later. For over forty years our people have been holding what is called the "June Meeting." In this period many changes have been wrought, some of them sad ones. Nearly all the members of the local church who met here the first time for meeting, after the house was erected, have fallen under the power of death, and are awaiting in silence the trumpet call to the resurrection of life. Indeed there remains but the merest remnant of the pioneer church in Indiana. Nearly all are gone but still held in sacred memory by those of us who knew them. Will you of the present generation of believers in the risen Lord be as zealous for the truth as they? Then lay aside the common cares of life, and attend another "June Meeting" on the spot rendered sacred by the faithful of other days. Who would miss the Antioch meeting? Able speakers will be present to proclaim the truth.

By Order of Committee.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the Camp-grounds at Waterloo, Iowa, from Aug. 18th to 26th inclusive. Programme will be announced later.

O. J. Allard, Pres.

Mrs. Eva L. Stearns, Sec.

The 48th Annual Conference of the Churches of God, in Michigan, will be held at Dutton, Kent Co. Michigan, commencing Thursday evening, May 31, 1906 and continue over the following Sunday, (June 1, 2, and 3.)

It is the desire of all who have been in the habit of attending these gatherings that all the churches send delegates to the meeting.

A cordial invitation to attend is extended to all and particularly the brethren of this and adjoining states.

A programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

Once again the invitation comes from Dutton, the dear old gathering place, to have the Annual Conference at their place. There has been many good and profitable meetings held at Dutton, it always seemed like a family reunion. Let us show them our appreciation of their invitation by our presence.

If you have some good news of what the Lord has done for you tell us of it, it will cheer us on our way. If trouble has been your portion and the load heavy, tell us, perhaps we can aid you, our prayers will be for you at least.

Jesus is coming, will the Annual Meeting of 1906 be the last? Come work while the day lasts.

Obituary.

Died Friday morning April 20th, 1906, Genevieve M. Overholt, of bronchitis. Infant daughter of Rufus and Ida Overholt, aged 7 months, funeral conducted by writer. Text 2 Kings iv. 26, Is it well with the child, and she answered, It is well. Sister Overholt and family greatly miss the dear little baby face, but they feel it is indeed well with the child, and some day their grief will be turned to joy in beholding their children again.

"That they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. v. 16. Some clocks do not strike; you must look at them if you would know the time. Some men do not talk of their Christianity; you must look at their lives if you would know what the gospel can do for human nature. But a clock need not be incorrect because it strikes; a man need not be inconsistent because he speaks as well as acts. —Joseph Parker.

Millions of dollars are poured into our colleges and universities to educate the brains of America, while almost nothing is done to educate the heart.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "The Restitution," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

The Church's Cry.

All down the ages, Lord,
Thy church has looked for thee,
According to thine ancient word,
To come in majesty.

"I quickly come, behold,"
Such was the promise dear,
But centuries have since been told,
Nor dost thou yet appear.

Still do thy people hope,
Still for thy coming cry,
Still with the powers of evil cope,
And wish the day-dawn nigh.

What can thy "quickly" mean?
Our weary hearts would know:
Why so long absent hast thou been?
Why dost thou linger so?

Thou Sun of Life, arise,
With healing in thy wings,
Till earth beneath unclouded skies
Thy worthy praises sings.

What God Offers Men.

Your attention is asked this evening in considering the question: What has God offered to man in comparison with what man has offered, and what is desired by men?

By reading between the lines of daily papers and the higher class of periodicals the great and crying needs seem to be for good government,—honesty in political offices and both public and private morality. In fact, in many of the public prints you need not read "between" the lines, for the growing demand is boldly made in black and white.

The growing sentiment—the greater volume of protest against these evils, is but one evidence of the continually increasing need of reforms demanded.

What wonder that thoughtful men, as well as many wild theorists, have come to the front with plans and theories for the removal or abatement of these evils, some attacking one particular evil and some another, while others provide schemes so broad and elaborate that all that man could naturally desire would be brought about, including not only good government, clean politics, social reforms, business reforms and all, but the lifting of mankind to the highest physical perfection as well.

Yet in spite of much teaching along these lines, the conditions go on from bad to worse, and the cry for these so much needed reforms is still unsatisfied and their achievement as far away as ever.

Studies on Socialistic lines picture a golden age—a time of peace and prosperity for all—of universal brotherhood of men; and all brought about by education and the enactment of wise laws which will prevent dishonesty by depriving men of the opportunity for the selfish enjoyment of their unjust gains; would prevent poverty by furnishing work for all who work; and humanely caring for all who could not at public expense.

But by a human short-sightedness, the large and ever growing class who can but will not work are lost sight of. The social reformer thinks he will make true socialists of all this class under his social co-operative community plan of government, and in time evolve a community devoid of selfishness—in a word ideal men.

He teaches that men, taught by the bitter experiences of the present, can and will by legal means deprive themselves of all incentives to selfishness and all the benefits derived from greed and love of pleasure and social power.

And having developed to this high standard, all forms of crime and oppression resulting from conditions now existing will have vanished forever; thus allowing the race the free and full opportunity to develop the better, nobler and higher faculties of their being—and finally become both morally and physically a perfect race of men.

Dear friends, this is the best that man has to offer his fellow men. And who would think of saying that it is not much? But try to think of men making laws against themselves and the detail of this plan so altogether admirable for completeness, and the one end most heartily desired by all good people, seems hopeless of attainment by human powers. And when we look at the present conditions which surround us, is it any wonder we find men who clearly seeing the hopelessness of the weak and the recklessness of the strong; and knowing that history repeats itself, believe that these things must and will come to an end. Is it any wonder that some, at least, are seeking to stay the mad rush for wealth and the unrelenting scramble for gain of this world's goods, and turn the thoughts of thinking men to a better condition.

But before leaving this man-made plan of government and society, let us see if we can find what is the matter with it.' Is it not a vast improvement upon present conditions which they offer? Yes! yes! That is true. But we who have heard God's plan and have hope for its being brought about by his divine power are not going to take any thing less glorious, less certain, or less enduring for any of man's poor substitutes

Then we would liken the socialist's hope to the theory called in honor of Prof. Darwin—the "Darwinian" theory. Thousands profess to believe that man's origin was by a process of development or evolution from the lower orders of animal life, until his present physical type was evolved or developed. (This is a kind of creation with the Creator left out.)

Not unlike it is this scheme of the social reformer. He conceives that moral, social and political conditions will be changed by natural development or advancement, and that finally perfection reached, when men may enjoy the dreamed of peace and contentment. They truly voice the desire of countless millions of their fellowmen, a desire seemingly implanted in the very nature, so deep rooted is it.

But, as we know, the theory of creation with the Creator "left out" is false and robs Him of the glory of his own handiwork, so too we know as false the other theory—that which presumes that any man or men can deliver humanity from its present bondage of sin and oppression which binds them as in fetters of brass. The Allpowerful, Omnipotent Jehovah will do that in his own way—not by evolution, but by direct and mighty intervention.

The second criticism we can fairly make of social reform schemes is that there is no place or room in them for the exercise and development of religion. The mental faculties of veneration, or worship, and spirituality, or the perception of spiritual things, are not called into use in man's model society. And when we know that these faculties are implanted in men by his Creator to be used, (with all due respect to Darwinism,) we know also that there is something wrong with the model which man furnishes.

The social reformer's scheme or plan fails just where God's plan is strong. The reformer would reform the race by appealing to the mass of mankind, while God on the contrary appeals to the individual. His proposition is intensely personal and correspondingly powerful, for it offers each and every one to whom it comes, a certainty of obtaining all and more than all which hath "entered into the heart of man" to devise for the blessing of the people.

The man-made plan offers nothing—can offer nothing to the individual, for which he can personally look forward to and hope for. And now I want to give you just a glimpse of what God offers men to hope for, so that you can compare what man offers man with what God offers man.

Being firm believers in the truth and authority of the Holy Scriptures we cannot find that man has any hope of perfection by the development process or any prospect of attaining his ideal "golden age" of peace. We believe that man was a special creative work of a personal Being—a supernatural First Cause. Being fully persuaded of his truthfulness as well as his power, we begin at the first verse of his Book to believe. What is there said: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." And when we find that God afterward told his faithful servant Moses, as recorded in Num. xiv. 21, that "the earth shall be filled with his glory"—we believe that also. Having this fair start, we are encouraged to search for further particulars as to the how and when of this grand consummation.

Following up the beginning, we also find another of his inspired spokesmen has given expression to the same idea in the 72nd Psalm, "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name forever. And let the whole earth be filled with his glory. From which we must conclude that it is a definite and fixed purpose in his plan to have it so.

As we continue our search of the Scriptures we find this purpose more and more unfolding in details until in the Prophet Isaiah we find one speaking for God in these words: "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But ye shall be glad and rejoice forever in that which I create, for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people, and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Isa. lxvi. 17-19.

These expressions are not mere figures of speech about whose meaning men may speculate at will. You can build upon them as upon the Rock, and your faith will never be shaken.

The next chapter more than confirms it—it adds to what has just been quoted regarding future things, saying, "Rejoice in Jerusalem and be glad with her all ye that love her." Rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn with her and be delighted with the abundance of her glory. "For thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream. For as the new heavens and the new earth shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Isa. lxvii.

This is that time referred to by David in 37th Psalm, saying: "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." And to which Jesus refers in Matt. v. 5, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."

And now listen to the voice of Zechariah as he sees with the eye of faith that age of glory now almost ready to be ushered in. "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for lo, I come, and will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord. And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people; and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee." Zech. ii. 10-12. How beautifully this harmonizes with Micah where we read: "But in the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the house of the Lord (Israel) shall be established in the top of the mountains (figurative of kingdoms) and shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountains of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, Unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." iv. 1, 2, 8.

These things are what Peter calls a "more sure word of prophecy whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place." 2 Peter i. 19.

Friends, are any of you in the dark concerning God's purposes in the earth? Are you seeking the light of truth? Then turn to the Scriptures as the only source of sure guidance—a lamp to your feet and a light to your path. As we turn to the New Testament, we find record of how the things of which we have read influenced the faithful prophets and patriarchs of old and moulded their lives.

In commenting upon the effect of faith in them in the 11th chapter of Hebrews, the writer, after enumerating a long list of their faithful works, makes this statement: "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise"—but he goes on and explains the reason for the postponement of the promise or reward of their faith thus: "God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." What the "better thing" was which is here referred to can only be learned through understanding the gospel. Those ancient worthies are said to have "died in faith"—in "the faith" it should be, (for there is only "one faith" made known in the Scriptures—see Eph. iv. 5) and they have not received that which their faith taught them to hope for, seeing them afar off and being persuaded of them and embraced them and confessed themselves pilgrims and strangers on the earth. What did they hope for, does some one ask? Let the same inspired Penman tell us. He goes right on to tell us in these words: "For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly if they had been mindful of that from whence they come out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now (it is evident) they desire a better (than that from whence they came out) that is, an heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city." Did the early church believe the promise and look for a "better country" as the patriarchs of old? Just the same exactly, for does not the last verse of the chapter quoted show that they and the faithful of the apostles' day would be "made perfect" together. And did not Jesus give assurance that many should come from the east and from the west, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in his kingdom? That "heavenly country" can be no other than that which was promised to Abraham and his Seed—as it will be in the kingdom of heaven for which we pray—"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth."

Surely God is not ashamed to be called their God who take him at his word, and if we read the 21st chapter of Revelations we find that this heavenly country and city will be in the new earth—Paradise. The Revelator John "saw a new heavens and new earth" which is yet future, and the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride for her husband."

But let us not overlook the One in whom all the blessings, honors and glories of that age will center and radiate from, whose rule and authority will go forth to the whole world.

Hundreds of years before the birth of Jesus Christ the Psalmist was inspired to write of him—"Ask of me (the Lord), and I shall give thee the heathen (nations) for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

Over 700 years before his birth the prophet Isaiah foretold his coming in these words: "For unto us a child is born; unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the Father of the everlasting ages, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end; upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

Turning to the 32nd chapter of Isaiah we read of this Prince of Peace: "Behold a King shall reign in righteousness and princes shall rule in judgment. And the work of righteousness shall be quietness and assurance forever." In Acts xv. we have the connecting link showing what this all has to do with the gospel call in this present age.

"James answered saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me: Simeon hath declared how God at the first (for the first time) did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name."

It is easy to identify the "princes" who are to "rule in judgment" as the same class as those called through the gospel—a people for God's name, his name bearers are the same as "the saints" whom Daniel says shall "take the kingdom and possess it."

In Gal. iii. 26 Paul tells us they are children of God by faith in Christ Jesus—and so bear his name. In the 4th chapter of the same Epistle he tells them—"And because ye are sons (by faith of course) God hath sent forth his Spirit, (which is elsewhere called the spirit of adoption) into your hearts, crying Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ."

What this sonship and heirship implied to them is clearly shown by Jas. ii.: "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen (you) the poor of this world (age), rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him." Which just agrees with what Peter says in addressing them as "the elect; who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time—an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled and that fadeth not away."

How beautifully these passages agree with each other and with the words of Jesus himself in Matt. v. 5, "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." "Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the children of God." And so with these glorious and soul inspiring prospects ever before them through faith in the promises God has made, the faithful have never ceased to pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

It was this yet future day of Christ which Abraham saw—saw by faith, for Jesus says in John viii. 56, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day, and he saw it and was glad." Is it any wonder he "rejoiced" seeing the promises God had made, and seeing his faith in those promises was counted unto him for righteousness? Gen. xv. 6. And do not all who believe God see Christ's day now and rejoice in the ever nearing prospect of his coming in fulfilment of his Word?

But Paul says: "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth (is delayed or withheld) for the manifestation of the sons of God"—(those same ones he calls sons and heirs through Christ). And then it goes on to tell why, "Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Romans viii. 19-21.

Dear friends, the gospel is the call or invitation to all who hear it to have a part in the eternal glory and blessedness of Christ's heavenly kingdom on earth. The gospel which Jesus preached was the glad tidings of that kingdom. Those who believed this good news knew that it concerned a literal kingdom on earth with a real King, real rulers under him, with a capital city and other territory—in fact a restoration of the kingdom to Israel in fulfilment of the prophecy of Ezekiel xxi. 26. And while they knew this, they did not know the time, and therefore when Jesus was about to leave them and go to heaven we find them asking with deep concern: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? But it was not for them to know the time though they already knew the fact. And so they have to be content with the assurance of the angels that this same Jesus whom they had seen go up into heaven "shall so come in like manner as they had seen him go."

We see that they who received this angelic message handed down to those who afterward believed by their preaching, the very same hope of his coming again. Paul, in 1 Thes. i. 10, speaks to those who had turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven. And this only echoes the words of Jesus himself, as found in Luke xii. 40: "Be ye therefore ready also; for the Son of Man cometh at an hour when ye think not." If we are waiting for him we must be prepared to see him—we are "ready" in the best sense of the Word then.

But not many are ready to meet him. Not many believe the Scriptures which tell us he is coming to set up his kingdom so that "the law shall go forth from Zion and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem;" and hence they do not hope for any such thing.

If there be any here to whom these things are new and strange let them search the Scriptures like those noble Bereans to whom Paul and Silas came with this same gospel call—"they searched the Scriptures daily whether these things were so" and the result is stated in the next verse thus, "Therefore many of them believed." Acts xi. "God has opened a way through the belief of the gospel that the believer can obtain all that is desirable and not for a little life time such as we now have, but a more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And God commendeth his love toward us in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us—every one of us. This is the way which never fails.

His word is "Come now and let us reason together, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Do you hear and recognize him by these words so gracious and loving?

Listen again while we read his words sent back from heaven to the beloved John, "Behold I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." The invitation to share in the eternal glory and honors of this kingdom is still open to all who hear and will accept the loving offer, but we cannot tell when the Master may rise up and shut to the door. Come while it is yet called today. Put your trust in him as the way, the truth and the life whom God hath crowned with glory and honor and who even tasted death for all.

He is able to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. Heb. vii. 25. His Word to his faithful has never failed and he says: "Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and my new name." Rev. iii. 11-12. Amen and amen.

A Man and a Christian.

The following is said to have been found in an old manor house in Gloucestershire, England, written and framed and hung over the mantelpiece of a sitting room. It gives a pretty good description of the characteristics and duties of an English gentleman:

THE TRUE GENTLEMAN.

The true gentleman is God's servant,
The world's master and his own man;
Virtue is his business,
Study his recreation,
Contentment his rest, and happiness his reward.
God is his father,
Jesus Christ his Savior,
The servants his brethren, and all that need him his friends;
Devotion is his chaplin,
Chastity his chamberlain,
Sobriety his butler,
Temperance his cook,
Hospitality his housekeeper;
Providence his stewart,
Charity his treasurer,
Pity his mistress of house, and discretion his porter to let in or out as most fit.

This is his whole family, made up of virtue, and he is the master of the house.

He is necessitated to take the world on the way, and he walks through it as fast as he can, and all his business by the way is to make himself and others happy. Take him in two words—a man and a Christian.

Obeying the Captain's Orders.

"I have stood," said Mr. Scott, "on the deck of a ship while it was tolling up stream, both wind and water strong against her, and I have gone up to the man at the wheel and said: 'Jack, why don't you ease her off a point or two? You see how it would relieve her.' But the answer was: 'No, I can't luff; that is the point of the compass the captain gave me, and I must keep her to it.' 'But man,' I remonstrated, 'If you keep her as she is, soon the bulwarks will be stove in, and there is every chance that under this fearful strain she may spring a leak.' 'That is none of my business; it is the captain's lookout. All I have to do is to obey his orders,' was the man's answer.

"Christian friends, we have the orders of our Captain plainly given to us in the Bible, and may know exactly the course he would have us steer. Yet, sometimes, if we do exactly as Christ commands, it appears as if our business would be ruined, our reputation lost,—as if indeed we should be totally wrecked. That, however, is the Captain's lookout. All we have to do is to implicitly obey. He will surely bring us safely into the harbor."

A Word to Mr. Elijah.

The Baltimore Methodist tells a story of a hand-bill tract, with the title, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" which came into the hands of a German reformed clergyman in Maryland, who was so much pleased with it that he determined to translate it into German, for the benefit of a part of his congregation. He had only commenced translating it when he was called out, and a Mr. Elijah, coming in during his absence, was so much struck with the title that he took it up and carried it away with him. The clergyman came in, and learning from his wife who had taken it, went in pursuit of him, being desirous to finish the translation. As he passed a certain house, he saw him, through an open window, engaged with some ungodly game of chance. The clergyman, thrusting his hand into the window, gently struck Elijah on the shoulder, saying, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" It proved a "word in season," and was the means of calling him from the devious paths of sin and folly into the "narrow way."

There are several other persons besides Mr. Elijah who would be startled if the question "What doest thou here?" was put to them in various positions which they may chance to occupy. It is well for Christians to always hold themselves in readiness to give an answer to the question "What doest thou here?"

Sorrow for sin is the golden key that opens the palace of eternity.—Milton.

"And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." Mal. iii. 17.

In analyzing this text the first question that comes to our mind is what is meant by "And they shall be mine." The preceding verse of this 3rd chapter of Malachi will help us to a very clear answer. It reads, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." So we learn that they that are to be his "Feared the Lord and spake often one to another." It is this class that are to be his. They desired to commune with all who were of like precious faith. They loved the brethren and naturally longed to be with those they loved and to speak to them. Yes, they longed and were anxious to fellowship with those who had faith in the same precious promises, those who were endeavoring to be overcomers and make themselves proper persons for a place in the kingdom of God.

Our Lord declared that those who love the light come to the light. All those who love the light will not sit in darkness, but will come to the light at every opportunity. They that are to be the Lord's spake often together and we naturally inquire what was the topic of their conversation. It is not stated in this chapter, but you can depend upon it their conversation was not on what they should eat, or what they should drink, or what they should wear. That was very severely condemned by our Lord Jesus. Neither could it have been on pleasure, earthly pleasures. This is also condemned in the Scripture, for we learn that living in pleasure is sin. Moses would rather suffer affliction with the children of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, and also, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." 1 Tim. v. 6. So that these subjects are not what they that are to be the Lord's discussed when they met together. Then what did they speak about?

Paul speaks of those who mind heavenly things and seek a heavenly country or city whose builder and maker is God. Then undoubtedly they that are to be the Lord's spake on these things when they met together. These things are what their hearts were set on, these things were uppermost in their minds and therefore would be the topic of their conversation.

"And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts in that day." Then the Lord has set a day when they are to be his. It is generally supposed that the Lord has been gathering his people to him in heaven for 6000 years; but that is not according to Scriptures. He has set a time in which he will gather his people from the four corners of the earth; and the time will be when the Lord Jesus returns. As we read in 1 Thes. iv. 16. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

"And they shall be mine saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." The they in our text are likened unto jewels. The definition of the word jewel is a precious stone. The word is derived from the Italian, gioia, joy, whence gioiello, a jewel, such ornaments being indicative of pleasure. The Lord's jewels which are to be gathered at the end of the age will give him great joy or pleasure. The Lord likens his people to jewels or precious stones, and it signifies that there is a value and beauty about them which he appreciates. Valuable because in comparison to the number of people who live or have lived in the world very scarce, a little flock. Beautiful because they have obeyed his commandments, made themselves white by putting on the garment of righteousness. The stone in its rough state must be cut and shaped and polished, in order to be of much value, so those whom the Lord is selecting, and preparing as his jewels must undergo similar treatment in order that they may develop characters well pleasing in his sight. It is characters that will count in that day when he makes up his jewels. Characters that have been developed according to his plan. God cannot make jewels of any who are not willing to become Christ-like and therefore righteous.

"And all that will live Godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." 2 Tim. iii. 12. When we are being persecuted for righteousness sake we should rejoice, for God allows us to be persecuted in order that we may be tried, and purified; if we endure to the end we will be among the jewels at the end of the age.

In Hebrews xii. 5, 6, 7 we read, "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him, for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons, for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons."

Our text after speaking of the gathering of the jewel class refers to the same class as God's sons, saying, "I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

We read in Romans viii. beginning with the 15th verse, "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry abba Father. The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. And if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." The wise, loving Father not only chasteneth his sons when they do wrong, but also trains and disciplines them, for they are his representatives and heirs.

Brothers and sisters, there is a glorious time coming, and if we will be in that jewel class spoken of in our text we must suffer. "He will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able to bear, but will with the temptation provide also a way of escape." We should rejoice in tribulation, knowing that all things work together for good to them that love him. God help us to appreciate our exalted position and endure unto the end, and be his in that day when he makes up his jewels.

One Hundred Years Since Pike's Peak Was Discovered.

Elaborate plans are being made at Colorado Springs to celebrate in truly western style the Centennial of the day when Lieut. Zebulon M. Pike first sighted the famous peak, which was afterwards the landmark of the hardy pioneer whose wagon train wended its slow way across the plains.

The Chicago & North-Western Railway announces extensive preparations for this event on the part of Colorado Springs and Denver, as well as on behalf of the various railway lines.

It is understood that the last week in September is to be devoted to a round of festivities to be participated in by ten thousand United States Regulars and a concourse of Indians, representing the various tribes with which the intrepid explorer came in contact on his toilsome march of discovery.

The national Guards, cadets, veterans, cowboys, pioneers, patriotic societies, fraternal societies and citizens generally will also take part in the program, which will include drills by the troops, war dances by the Indians, cowboys' sports, parades and tournaments.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had to [illegible] and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. This is Not Home.

Whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord. 2 Cor. v. 6.

He looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Heb. xi. 10.

As stranger here in foreign lands we roam,
O, why should not the exiles sigh for home?
A thousand snares beset our thorny way,
And night is coming on—why not wish for day?

The storm is high, beneath its wintry wing;
The blossom fades—O, why not watch for spring?

The waters roll o'er treasures buried deep,
And sacred dust, the kindly clods hands keep—
Homes are dissolved and ties are rent in twain,
And things that charm can never charm again,
On every brow we mark the hand of time,
O why not long for the celestial clime?

Correspondence.

My dear Sister:

Your paper duly received and contents carefully noted. My first objection to that kind of teaching is, salvation by water, which is contrary to the divine Word, for an instance Eph. ii. 8 would be made to read, Through the water are ye saved; instead of, By grace are ye saved through faith. Quite a difference in the reading you see. Also by reading the blessed Word you will see God only commands Christians to be baptized. Acts ii. 41; x. 47, etc. Again in Rom. vi. 4, baptism is represented as a burial. People are not buried to kill them, but because they are already dead. Baptism then being a Christian ordinance can only be administered in the Scriptural sense to those who are saved by grace through faith, and destroys the heretical idea of salvation by water.

My second objection is the erroneous idea of soul sleeping, soul sleeping like the ruinous heresy of materialism, restorationism and annihilationism is closely allied to water salvation; and not only the acme of egotism, but is the fruits of rank infidelity gone to seed. No, no sister, God breathed the breath of immortality into man and he became a living soul, hence the immortality of the soul. The rich man died and was buried, and in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torment. Hence you see his immortal soul went to torment while his body awaits the resurrection, to wit the redemption of our bodies spoken of by Paul in Rom. viii. 23. Lazarus died and was carried to Abraham's bosom, no soul sleeping there. So you see the gospel plan of salvation by grace and growth in grace from the spiritual birth. John iii. 5 to next stage, 1 Peter ii. 2 till we come to the full stature of the man in Christ. Eph. iv. 13, then clothed in the Christian armor Eph. vi. 10-17. You will then be able to refute the silly twaddle of the theological tinkerer who vainly tries to destroy the Bible doctrine of immortality of the soul.

G. W. WALDREN.

My dear brother:

You say you object to my faith (Abrahamic). You say it is salvation by water; well no, I can't see it that way, for instance Eph. ii. 8, says, "for by grace are ye saved through faith." If we have the faith we will do just as the Word of God directs, we will believe God and take him at his word. I believe he says what he means and means what he says. If we are Christians we have put on Christ, and to put on Christ we must throw off this old life of sin, be buried with him in baptism and rise to walk in a new life. When we are baptized we through faith, by grace take upon us the name of Christ—Christians. We have come to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus—we desire to share in the promises made by God to the fathers, that promise that he confirmed by his oath. Spoken of in Heb. vi. 12-20. In Matt. iii. 15, Jesus says in his own words, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness," we are no better than he was, he is our example, and if we have the true faith we will follow him. I don't think he was like a Baptist preacher I heard of once, who said, "one didn't have to be baptized to get into heaven, but one did to get into the Baptist church."

Next you object to soul sleeping—well that is a nick-name like "hard shell," "close-communion" "Campbellites" and so on. But if it will do any one any good they are welcome to use the term as far as I am concerned. I defy any one to prove the contrary (according to the Word of God). In the first place what does the word soul mean? The common Hebrew for soul is Naphash and is applied to "any being or thing that has life." The common Greek for soul is "psuche" and means "living thing," so now we must find what a "living soul" is. We find in Gen. ii. 7, that God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a "living soul." Now what did he breath into his nostrils? Breath of life, that is what the Word says. What became a living soul? Why man; that is what the Word says, so here we have a living soul—man. Before he was a lifeless soul, now he is a living soul. But he is to die, for we read in Eccl. iii. 19, 20, 21, he is a mortal man or soul. I can't find the term immortal soul in the Bible nor anything else to prove that man is a double creature. And now honestly, brother, can you tell me where this "immortal soul" idea started? I can tell you, you can find it recorded in Gen. iii. 4, and the serpent said unto the woman, "Ye shall not surely die." Now the Word tells us that Satan was a liar from the beginning, a liar and the father of it. John viii. 44. So I for one cannot believe a liar, and now dear brother, is not this the tap root of the immortal soul theory? Think so. Next comes this, in advocating such a theory you destroy the hope of the resurrection, for if Christ never died, he could not rise from the dead. And Paul says, If Christ be not risen, ye are yet in your sins; your faith also is vain. So if your idea is correct we have no Savior—no hope—and are in a deplorable condition. We find in Gen. iii. 23-33, that God drove our parents out of the garden of Eden lest they should eat of the tree of life and live forever—so they never got immortality there sure, and we could not inherit something from our parents which they never had. Immortalists claim we have immortality now in this dying age, but we find in Tim. vi. 6 that God only hath immortality. And Rom. ii. 7 tells us to seek immortality. Cor. xv. 53 tells us that this mortal must put on immortality. Now brother, would it be a sensible thing for a sane person to do—hunt or seek for his hat, if he knew he already had it on his head? Job iv. 17 says, Shall mortal man be more just than God? Jesus himself spake of death as a sleep, for we find in Jno. xi. 11-14, Lazarus was sleeping the sleep of death, that was a fair example, and was for the glory of God. Jesus said Lazarus was sleeping, then he spoke more plainly and said he was dead. We will sleep the sleep of death until the resurrection, then this mortal will put on immortality and death be swallowed up in victory. You say God breathed the breath of immortality into man, well if he only breathed the breath of it, you haven't got it yet, although you seem to think you have.

Next comes materialism—well, I am very material myself. If I were an immaterialist I would deny the existence of a God. The Word tells us that we are created in his image—so he is in a form. I for one believe in a real personal God, some believe in a God without parts, but that would be rank infidelity for it would be no God at all. So you object to restorationism—how can you deny it when the Bible is full of it from Genesis to Revelations. God in Genesis xii. 1-3 promises restoration to Abraham, and it runs like a gold thread all through the blessed book. The glorious gospel of the kingdom which Jesus commissioned his disciples to preach and which shall be preached through all the world for a witness, then shall come the end. And Paul says if any preach another gospel let him be accursed.

In that restoration age, death itself will be destroyed, sorrow and sighing shall flee away—God himself shall be with us. Rev. xxi. 3. Also Rev. v. 10; Rev. xxi. 1-5, and hundreds of other references which proves this all through the Bible. This is to be a very material restoration, for verse 26 says that they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it (the capital city), I can give you plenty of references both in the Old and New Testament. You have doubtless seen them. Now if you would read them you couldn't really object to restorationism. And so far as annihilation is concerned I don't believe I ever met any one who believe that way unless it be immortalists, they sift every thing down to an immaterial nothing, and that is about as near annihilation as I can see. And now poor Lazarus and the rich man, they are picked at so much they couldn't rest if they wanted to, but if it was the beggar who died, it was the beggar who was carried. If he had an immortal soul, that could not die at all and couldn't be carried to Abraham's bosom. Abraham was dead, and his bosom was buried in the cave of Machpela. What would an immortal soul want in any one's decayed breast? horrible thought, or was it an immaterial beggar, carried by immaterial angels to an immaterial bosom? If so, it wasn't any thing after all. And I will tell you what it was—it was a parable used to represent the Jewish nations. The rich man, the Jewish nation, Lazarus as the beggar, was the Gentile nation, the beggar dies—the Gentiles were dead in sin. Col. ii. 13. The rich man dies, the Jewish nation died (Rom. xi. 15) and was buried as a nation. A. D. 66-70. Abraham's bosom—the Gentiles made members of Abram's family or taken into bosom, becoming heirs of the Abrahamic promise. Gal. iii. 27-29; Rom. iv. 11-19. The meaning of angels is messengers or carrier of news. And applies to all who carry the gospel message of the kingdom to the Gentile world. Hell spoken of here is the national grave of this once favored people, the five brethren, the priesthood-brethren to represent tribes. I will give you more on this important subject if you will accept it. I love to search out and see if these things are so, we are to study and grow in the knowledge and love of God.

Evangelizing Trip.

On the 21st of April, I got away from Berkley and Oakland. I was really glad to get out of the rush and turmoil of the thousands of refugees from the stricken, suffering city. We had become so accustomed to the expressions "earthquake, fire, suffering" and words of like import, had been looking at so many scared and excited faces, that getting away would have been a source of relief if the same conditions had not existed in the train, at the stations, everywhere! At Sacramento many hundreds awaited the train watching many of whom with anxious gaze, to see if any of their loved ones had escaped on this train, as they had before watched train after train, some to have their hearts quickened with a glad welcome, others to turn away with hearts of lead, to wonder whether they would be numbered with the crushed, and burned, or yet come home safe.

At Sacramento I stepped out on the car steps, with a tin cup, looking for a place to secure a cup of coffee, I soon had a personal demonstration of the anxiety of the relief committee to help the refugees; a waiting maid called kindly, "Are you hungry?" I truly answered, "Yes, I would like to have a cup of coffee." Without question as to whether I had escaped from San Francisco, I was led into the depot, where provisions for hundreds were being handed out indiscriminately to the passengers, and thus for the first time I was benevolently fed as among the destitute.

In our run through the San Joaquin valley to Oakland, and from there through the Sacramento valley to Sacramento, we saw a much more beautiful scene than last winter, as now the face of the country was carpeted with varied green, and the trees in full leaf, showing that we live in a beautiful world, though marred and rent by the curse. As we neared Sacramento, we passed through a stretch of low country, for several miles, completely covered with water, with here and there a slight elevation, just barely above the expanse of submerged flat. Thousands of acres of this part of the country are rich in sod, but too low for assured farming. After we passed Sacramento, we took a northeastern course to Auburn into a high, hilly, almost mountainous country. At Auburn I met Bro. B. F. Cook with team and spring wagon, to take me 15 miles farther into the hills, to talk to the people of the coming King, and his promises and requirements.

This is a wonderfully picturesque country. A rolling and hilly landscape covered with scattering oaks, white oak, and live oak, with a carpet of green grass, mingled with flowers of varied colors covering the ground. As these are the first live oaks I had ever seen, my curiosity was greatly aroused at seeing evergreen trees called oaks, with some similarity to the oaks of my boyhood, but the everlasting green foliage of the fir, pine and cedar.

I had reached the mining region of the early historic rush to California. Here are the hills where thousands were prospecting for gold fifty years ago, and while some were successful, more were disappointed with failure. Is it not much the same in all the walks of life? Oh! how many things [illegible] of our ambitions and aspirations, how many events are turned aside from our expectations and desires. We are in a region, where over an area of perhaps a dozen square miles there is not a church building, or a church organization, or regular preaching. Surely this is the place to do good. This a place where the Word of the kingdom may find good soil. Only two or three sermons advocating our system of faith have ever been given in this entire region, and that many years ago. Bro. Benjamin Wilson gave one discourse in the locality nineteen years ago; L. J. Kimball, two talks eleven years ago. Surely this is an open field. One need not build on the foundation of another, save Christ.

With all this lack of religious work, and organizations, it seems to be a moral community, and despite our notions that a mining region must be made up of rogues and toughs we are not seeing drunks or forming the acquaintances of the blasphemer, but men with honest faces and lives. But little mining is done at the present time. There is a mine and stamp mill here that has been in active operation until recently, but is now in litigation between contending companies.

I added another novel event to the variety of the last six months by visiting the mine, and assay office, and receiving from the manager an explanation of the method of assaying metals, and an explanation of the process of pulverizing the ore, and extracting the gold, silver and copper. I also walked into the shaft as far as we cared too. As there has been over thirty slight earthquakes during the last four weeks, since the heavy shake of April 18th, we could not avoid thinking of the possible results should one come at this time, and when one of the party suggested that we should return to the surface, I readily consented.

These were pleasant attractions in the passing days, while spent with Bro. Cook's agreeable family, and visiting with the honest neighors, and spending the evenings in earnestly teaching the interested and attentive, regular attendance, at our evening meetings, "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and name of Jesus Christ." The people seemed to drink it in like famished souls, and it tended to lift life's weight from the speaker as well as hearers. "Take my yoke, my burden upon you." Oh, if we could unload our own burdens for only his; if we could take off the yoke that so galls and wearies us just for his, how many weary hours and unhappy days would be left out of the life that is passing by.

Saturday May 12th the people gathered at a pretty stream in the hills, and three willing believers were "buried with Christ in baptism." Others seem almost persuaded. The community generally seem to be accepting "the glad tidings of the kingdom;" but only theoretically or they would be ready to obey it. Much good may be done here in future work. On Sunday we held two meetings with basket dinner, and closed the work with the Lord's Supper.

We have given twenty-four discourses in twenty-two days. The people proved their interest in the work by liberal donations to the cause at this place. Appointment is posted ahead at Central Point, Oregon, for Thursday night, May 17th. We will be with old acquaintances, but still 325 miles from our destiny, Portland, Ore. Eugene, Ore., is the next place on the line of work, after Central Point.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 33.

1. In the reign of Jooakeim, son of Joosias, this word occurred from the Lord,

2. In this wise hath the Lord said; Stand in a court of the house of the Lord, and thou shalt speak oracularly (or be inspired to speak) to all the Joudaians, and to all those who come to worship in the house of the Lord, all the words which I have arranged for thee to oracularly speak unto them; thou shalt not omit (lit. take away) an oracular word.

3. Perchance they will hearken and turn away each one from his wicked way, and I shall cease from the calamities which I am reasoning to do to them on account of their wicked devices.

4. And in this wise shalt thou say; The Lord hath said; If ye do not hearken to go your way in my laws which I have given before your face, to hearken to the words of my servants the prophets whom I am sending to you at dawn and have sent, and ye have not hearkened to me;

6. I shall also give this house to be even as Seeloo and this city I shall give for a curse to all the nations of all the earth.

7. And the priests and the false-prophets and all the laity heard Hieremias talking these words in the house of the Lord.

8. And it came to pass when Hieremias had ceased talking all the things which the Lord had directed him to talk to all the laity, that the priests and the false-prophets and all the laity seized him saying, thou art amenable to death,

9. Because thou hast prophesied in the name of the Lord, saying, even as Seeloo will this house be, and this city will have been laid waste of inhabitants; and all the laity called a church-assembly in respect to Hieremias in the house of the Lord.

10. And the rulers of Jouda heard this word, and went up out of the house of the king into the house of the Lord, and seated themselves in the front-door-way of the new-gate-way.

11. And the priests and the false-prophets said unto the rulers and unto all the laity, it is a judgment of death for this man, because he hath prophesied against this city even as ye have heard with your ears,

12. And Hieremias spake unto the rulers and all the laity saying, The Lord sent me to prophesy against this house and against this city all the words which ye have heard;

13. And now may ye have made your ways and your works better, and may ye have hearkened unto the voice of the Lord, and the Lord will cease from the calamities which he hath talked in respect to you.

14. And lo, I am in your hands, do unto me as is befitting and as is best for you.

15. But ye will know and be aware that if ye take me away, ye are giving innocent blood to be on you and upon this city, and upon those who dwell in it; because in truth the Lord did send me unto you to talk in your ears all these words.

16. And the rulers and all the laity said unto the priests and the false-prophets, There is no judgment of death for this man, because in the name of the Lord our God hath he talked unto us.

17. And prominent men of the elders of the land arose and said unto all the synagogue of the laity,

18. Michaias the Moorathite was in the days of Ezekias, king of Jouda, and he said unto all the laity, In this wise hath the Lord said; Sioon will have been ploughed as a field, and Hierrousaleem will be a trackless waste, and the mountain of the house a forest of wood.

19. Ezekias and all Jouda did not take him away, did they? Was it not because they feared the Lord and because they besought the face of the Lord? And because the Lord did cease from the calamities which he had talked in respect to them? And we have done great evil-things to our souls.

20. And there was a man, who was prophesying in the name of the Lord, Ourias, a son of Samalos from Kariathiarm, and he prophesied concerning the land according to all the words of Hieremias;

21. And the king Jooakeim and all the rulers heard all his words, and they sought to kill him; and Ourias heard, and went into Alguptos;

22. And the king sent out men of influence to Alguptos;

23. And they led him out from there and led him unto the king; and he smote him with a sword, and cast him into the memorial-tomb of the sons of his laity.

24. However the hand of Achelkain son of Saphan was with Hieremias not to deliver him into the hands of the laity to destroy him.

COMMENT.

This 33d chapter corresponds or is supposed to correspond to the 26th in the R. V. and C. V. which is also called "the Hebrew text," and the "Hebrew" 33d corresponds to the 40th in the true text.

Observe the idiom "en archee" again in the opening verse of this chapter, translated C. V. and R. V. "In the beginning," as a matter of fact it was not in the beginning of the reign of Jooakeim that this prophecy occurred, but some time "in the reign," etc. The name twisted into "Jehoiakim" by vicious vowel-pointing. And "Seeloo" into "Shiloh"—bear in mind this is the same place called "Siloam" elsewhere in C. V. and R. V. and made familiar in the old hymn "By cool Siloam's shady rill, etc." Observe also that the "Michaias the Moorathite" here referred to and called Micaiah the Morashtite" is the same person who gives the name "Micah" to one of the old covenant prophetic books. Observe also that "Ourias son of Samalos from Kariathiarim" is called in the R. V. "Uriah son of Shemiah of Kirjearim" and "Achelkam son of Saphan" is called "Ahikam son of Shaphan." "How is he who sits in the seat of the unlearned to say amen" to such mystifying blunders as these?

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. Dead X PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MAY 23, 1906. NUMBER 20.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Plymouth, Indiana, May 28, 1906.

As there are five Wednesdays in this month, and we only issue four papers every month, our next number will be dated June 6. Please make note of this and do not write asking for issue of May 30.

The announcement is made for the Indiana Conference at Antioch the second Sunday in June. The programme so far as meetings are arranged is given. The sermons will be by Bro. and Sister Woodward of Michigan, Bros. Zilmer, Wagoner, Halstead, Wince and others from this State, so that the preaching is sure to be of the best quality. All attend who can, and have a good meeting once more at old Antioch before the Lord comes.

Christ in You.

We read that every Word of God is pure; and that all Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for teaching, for conviction, for correction, for that discipline which is in righteousness, so that the man of God may be complete, thoroughly fitted for every good work; but while we believe this with all our heart there are passages which at times impress us more than others,—because they are more than others adapted to our present state of mind or circumstances. This morning I have chosen Gal. i. 15, 16, in which Paul the Apostle says: "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my birth, and called me by his grace to reveal his son in me; that I might preach him among the Gentiles,—immediately (without any hesitation whatever) I conferred not with flesh and blood;" there are many striking lessons for us in this Scripture. We are often both astonished and gladdened while reading the record of Paul the apostle,—what a noble soldier of the cross he was. How faithfully he defended the faith,—how truly he represented the religion of Jesus! With what fortitude did he endure the cross and despise the shame attached to it,—as did his Lord! And after the marvelous record of suffering, he could call them "light afflictions" and declare that none of these things moved him; as they were but light afflictions for a moment comparatively, and not worthy to be compared with the glory to be revealed in us, if faithful to the end. A wonderful record surely,—the apostle of the Gentiles left behind him after, like his Master he resisted sin to the death. What a blank the New Testament would contain if the writings of Paul were wanting. But the verse read to you, shows the

ALMIGHTINESS OF OUR GOD

and Father, as well as his love and compassion and foreknowledge, in selecting one in whom it was his good pleasure, Christ Jesus, his Son should be revealed to us Gentiles. And what impresses me is the fact that Paul was not called to merely reveal the truth concerning the Son of God in all his offices and work, but to exhibit his character, disposition, spirit, purpose and purity in a pardoned sinner—one who styled himself the chief of sinners, because he once persecuted the Church of God. Of course he fell far short of the perfect pattern,—but we doubt if an adopted child of God ever more faithfully copied the only begotten Son. Before God and the Lord Jesus Christ he was able to invite others to follow him, as he had followed Christ. And what does this mean, but that all who name the name of Christ are expected to reveal the Anointed one as he did; not only disseminating the truth as it is in him theoretically; but by acting so that others by comparing those acts with the life of Christ would know what school they had graduated in, know what company they had been trained in, know that they had been with Jesus and learned of him,—know that if Jesus were here he would do the same. What impresses me again is the fact that if we take upon us the name,—or the profession only and do not take upon us his character and spirit,—we misrepresent him, we are religious frauds, and cause his name to be blasphemed, and deceive our own selves. What profit would there be to us if we only accepted the historic Christ of the Scriptures as true, without having ensured our lives with him and

SECURED AN HEIRSHIP

with him in the kingdom and glory promised, and had no communion with him and with the Father now? The point I want to make is that no amounth of ear-say, or second-hand knowledge, or intellectual attainments regarding Christ will avail anything, unless, the Spirit of the Truth be so imbibed that the Christ be formed in us. It is cause for profound gratitude to God that there are those amongst us constantly exhorting us to cultivate within us, the Spirit of Christ. But I want to say to you, it is a solemn fact that it must first be implanted there, before it can be cultivated. And I believe this explains why so much exhortation seems to be thrown away. It makes me tremble when I realize the full meaning of it, but I see no other reasonable explanation of it, than that the Christ-Spirit has never been planted in the hearts of such. I believe I am looking into the faces of many whose meat and drink it is to do the will of the Father, and although conscious that it is imperfectly done, yet through God's favor they maintain a

JUSTIFIED STANDING

before him that they would not exchange for anything, even the whole world: and even now can rejoice with joy unspeakable. And to me it seems quite unthinkable for them tomorrow, or next week or next month, to realize that they had none of that blessedness they once enjoyed, and come in and go out amongst us as if there was nothing the matter, but doing nothing, and of course enjoying nothing. It seems to me it would make them so miserable to see others in the full enjoyment of what they themselves once enjoyed,—a well grounded hope of glory, that they would be almost as desperate as Judas was, and would keep away from the tormenting presence of those who live in the atmosphere of the Age to come. I do not know how you think of this matter,—but I am persuaded you would act about as I suggest. The old man would want other food and other society, and make big fuss if he didn't get it; and this throws us back on my first supposition, those who can swing to and fro amongst us like doors on their hinges, and never move forward or upward in the divine life, have never experienced the transforming power of the truth except intellectually; I mean that the moral force, —the spiritual regenerating power of

GOD'S ETERNAL TRUTH

has not been experienced. And the words of the Spirit explain why: They say it is with the heart or affection, man believes unto righteousness. In baptism they died to a false theory, and were resurrected in a new theory, —but did not die to sin, and rise with Christ to a new life; they did not put on Christ as his sin covering; but they know that those who have gone through the motion required of believers have to live what is considered good, decent, moral lives, and they were required to observe certain rules as members of a religious society whose tenets they have adopted, and in this company they feel religiously most at home, and is perhaps willing to help support it. You must not think I am accusing such of hypocrisy—I am not! Through moral insensibility or obtuseness they failed of heart-work; failed to transfer their affection; and Christ was not formed in them; they do not have Spirit mind, or disposition of Christ, although professedly belonging to him, and this shuts them out, if they do belong to the church. I am not making fancy sketches. I am afraid you will be reminded of such sad cases. And as a man cannot reveal to others what he has not himself, in none such can God reveal his Son. The very light in them becomes darkness under such circumstances. But what an awful condition to be in! When those who are alive to God dwell upon his goodness and mercy and the exceeding riches of his grace, and the vastness of his love, it sets their hearts on fire,—but the class we have been speaking of remain unmoved under circumstances where one would think if they had

ONE SPARK

of spirituality it would be formed into a flame. I have known people of this stamp aroused for a time, and they resolve to do better and be better,—but like the morning cloud and the early dew their goodness disappears, and the badness is again on top. There is only one remedy for this condition, but it is one that cures, because it is divine! Such an one needs to be rebuilt from the ground up! The old fabric must come down and its rubbish cleared away or destroyed. If they are ever saved they will have to believe with the heart the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ,—turn away from sin, turn to God with full purpose of heart, and then put on Christ by baptism, and then and there

BEGIN TO LIVE GODLY

yes; begin to live godly by observing the commandments of Jesus. To think because they have once been immersed in water, that they have a title to a mansion in the Father's house by commencing to live better today or tomorrow is an awful mistake. That is commencing at the wrong end. If the former action did not secure the blessedness of one whose iniquity is pardoned, and whose sin is covered, it was not the fault of God's gospel, but theirs. They did not believe with the heart; only believed intellectually, and therefore were never reckoned as righteous. Their faith did not work by love and purify their affection, or else they would have been justified by such a faith as that, and have had peace with God,—Christ would have dwelt in their hearts by faith. They would have had the Spirit of Christ which would have proven they were his. And there would have been no need of doing first work over again.

There is yet another class that must be noticed: a class that understood the gospel and its conditions, both theoretically and practically, and actually knew the blessedness of those whose iniquities are pardoned, and whose sins are covered. They took God at his word, both as respects his exceeding great and precious promises, and the obedience required before they could become children of God as well as the after conduct required to maintain that justified relationship, secured through faith and immersion. Legally they are still in Christ,—but there is little of Christ in them, and of course God could not by them now reveal his Son to others. Even though they can yet enlighten the world theoretically, their listless, careless, shiftless, unhappy, inconsistent conduct would tend to shut out the rays of divine light from others, because such evidence would be stronger than any argument they could formulate,—and would leave no doubt on the minds of others,—either that there was no truth in their doctrine—or if there was its advocates themselves or they would act differently. What is the matter with such people? What has happened to them? An evil heart of unbelief has sprung up, in spite of intellectual conviction. They have departed from the living God,—their faith is dead; lifeless it produces no fruit. They have not kept themselves in the love of God, and the result is, they do not keep his commandments. They have a name that intimates that they are living branches of the true vine,—but they are dead, too dead to bear fruit,—they are lukewarm,—neither cold nor hot, and nauseating to the Spirit,—they are counselled by the Spirit to remember how they have fallen, and repent, and then watch, and hold fast, or he will come upon them as a thief, suddenly and unexpectedly, and their names will be blotted out of the book of life. The Lord from heaven says to all such that space for repentance has been granted them. His heart still yearns toward those he died for. As the Lord is at hand to come,—they cannot afford to procrastinate. If unhappily I have described one in this house, while mercy lingers may they repent,—and revive the things that remain. Beloved, we have not seen the Lord's person, as Paul did,—but I trust there are many before me in whom Christ has been formed; in whom the Spirit of Christ has been implanted, and in whom it is being cultivated. But although we have not seen him nor handled him as the apostles did,—what a happy thought it is, that spiritual perception. It brings to us the evidence of things unseen. It is realization by anticipation. It enables God's children to see him by eyes of faith who is invisible, and say, "whom having not seen we love,—in whom, though now we do not see him personally, yet, believing, we rejoice greatly, with joy unspeakable and full of glory." This is an inward revelation of the Anointed, that no scientific test can be applied to, and from all who walk only by sense-perception this revelation of Christ is as completely concealed as are the beauties of nature from those born blind. Do we praise God as we ought, that our eyes have been anointed with the Spirit's eye-salve, so that we can see him? So highly privileged are we, that like Paul we must not confer with flesh and blood. If we do we shall cripple ourselves when there is urgent need both to proclaim his message, and to testify of God's grace. To confer with flesh and blood, or that of others, is in most cases to stifle the call to God's kingdom and glory at the beginning,—and later,—utter joyfully receiving the Word, to confer with flesh is to compromise the truth and

DID NOT HALF BELIEVE!!

FAITH IS SPIRITUAL VISION,—

MISS THE GREAT SALVATION.

Do not forget it,—Paul was set apart, and called to reveal God's Son to men, not only by preaching the truth by word of mouth and by pen,—but by its practice. His conduct, his deportment, his spirit, his disposition were to show what the religion of Jesus would enable one to be, to do, and to suffer for it; and in that way demonstrate his faith, that the once crucified Nazarine was alive again and exalted to the right hand of the Father until his enemies are made his footstool, and then he would take his great power and reign. If Christ be not in us, we can neither tell what God has done for us, nor what he offers to do for others. If Christ be in us, we could not have better evidence that we have hope of glory. Nothing could give a better reason to expect to share the unfading glory of Christ for ever, than that he is now light in our darkness, strength in our weakness, comfort in our trouble. Why, Christ in us is the hope of glory, it means that he is the earnest of it, the pledge of it,—may I not almost say it is the beginning of it,—it proves that the process which ends in glory, is now going on; we are now being transformed with a view to the kingdom and glory. But here we are reminded that although sons, and permitted to call God our Father, it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. He that has begun a good work in us will carry it on to perfection if we do not revolt at the discipline. He has not gotten through with us yet. I cannot for a moment believe that Paul's conversion and labors, and God's wonderful dealings with him have come to us as mere news items. It must be that they are given us as examples, that we do likewise. We are to take him as the continuation, the lengthening out as it were, of the life and character of Christ. This is the way the Father reveals the Son to us; so faithful and worthy a copy was he! How loving and persistent were his efforts to have his converts

GROW IN GOD'S FAVOR.

Hear him exclaim with motherly tenderness and solicitude, "My little children, of whom I am again in travail, until Christ be formed in you." This agonizing earnestness on his part, is a faint reflection of him who said ages before, "All day long I have stretched out my hand to a rebellious and gainsaying people,—and how his comparison of his labors to a travailing mother, resemble what is said of Jesus in the prophetic Word, "He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied?" O will it not be glorious to see him satisfied!!! But in closing I would remind you of the seat of the war to be maintained by every soldier of Jesus Christ. The flesh and the Spirit are bitterly arrayed one against the other. I once read of a pagan writer who seemed to realize that two opposing forces were at work in men; and he compared it to two horses yoked to one chariot pulling in different directions. And beloved, this subject must not be dismissed till we find out whether the self-life or the Christ-life is gaining the upper hand. As one weakens the other strengthens; as one grows the other decays. It is a vital question with every one of us, whether the flesh or the Spirit is on top. Am I keeping the body under? Is the Spirit overcoming animalism, and selfishness, and lifting me up to a higher plane of religious life? Have I a growing desire for purity of heart? Only as Christ grows in him does the Christian grow. Tender will grow the conscience softened by God's grace, pliant will become the will conquered by love. As Christ expands within, Christian life expands without.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST

within shapes the outward character just as the brain shapes the skull. If Christ dwell within he cannot be hid. The secret of his presence will be bound to leak out. He will be seen in the lives of all in whom he lives, just as plainly as the flesh shows upin one who is jealous, and meddlesome, and fault-finding, and causing factions and divisions. The way to be fit for the Master's use is to deny self; not to do what self wants to do, and follow the example of the precepts of Jesus. Self is sure to right things up in a wrong way, and this is worse than labor lost. God can only reveal his Son in those who employ the Son's methods. Christ must dwell in one, and control him, before outward conduct bespeaks his presence. Christian life is at once receptive and productive. What it takes in it gives out. It takes to Christ and gives out Christ. It receives his Spirit and repeats his life. As the day approaches more and more may God be able to reveal his Son in us is my fervent prayer. Amen.

Youth's Column.

Remember, Boys.

Little friends, when you are at play on the street,
Full frantic with frolic, laughter, and noise,
Don't ever forget to bow when you meet
When you meet an old man with gray hairs, my boys.

Is the aged man feeble, decrepit, and lame?
Does he lean on his staff with unsteady pulse?
Never mock at his sorrow, but stop in your game
And bow to the man with gray hairs, my boys.

If he sometimes halts in his tottering pace
To witness the flow of pure innocent joys,
Don't jostle the old man out of his place,
But greet his gray locks with a bow, my boys.

Remember, the years are only a few,
Since he, on the street with his games and toys,
Was healthy and happy and active like you;
And bright as the sun were his curls, my boys.

But age has furrowed the cheek that was fair;
While sorrows have broken his once mellow voice;
And now there is many a silvery hair
On the head where the curls were so bright, my boys.

The Spring-day of youth is a gem; it is gold,
But Time all its glorious lustre doth reave;
And, gay little friends, if you live to be old,
Your steps will be slow, your locks gray, my boys.

So, when you are blithely at play on the street,
Half frantic with frolic and laughter and noise,
Remember to pleasantly bow when you meet—
When you meet an old man with gray hairs, my boys.

To Young Men.

Be careful not to overestimate your own abilities. It is very natural to feel quite convinced of your personal skill, and to be aggrieved that your efforts are not more speedily recognized by employers, but rest assured that in the end employers will recognize any capability you may possess at its proper value, and at all times eager to avail themselves of any elements you may possess that are advantageous to the pursuit of their business. If, on the other hand your ability is recognized, bear in mind that you are fairly established upon the right path, and be careful not to succumb to the inducement offered elsewhere by a slight advance of remuneration. This is indeed the rock upon which the hope of thousands have foundered.

The Lad With the Artillery.

"And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows, and returned to his master. But the lad knew not anything; only Jonathan and David knew the matter." 1 Sam. xx. 38, 39.

There was the artillery lad. He is a very insignificant actor in the events of the lesson. Likely enough, with all the beautiful lessons that could be drawn regarding David and Jonathan, this boy with the arrows had been somewhat neglected. David stands forth as the prince in exile. Jonathan towers magnificently as the self-forgetful friend. Now what of the lad? With the reader's leave, just a word regarding him.

He had very little to do. And that little was a very menial service. But he did it. Had he failed to perform his trifling part, we might have paid more attention to him. It is the late of modest obedience to be unobserved. Or rather it is the obedient's reward. But notice, the boy had simply to carry the arrows of his master. When Jonathan called he was only to run here or there. He did not know the occult meaning of his lord's word. He had no idea he was acting in affairs of national importance, nor that he was to be mentioned in the history of his people. But he knew his master's bidding, and that he did.

And yet, all the time he was an instrument of great good. He wrought better than he knew. Over there in the field beyond, there was a rock, and behind that rock a hunted man. Unconsciously the lad was that man's helper. He was the unwitting bearer of wholesome messages to the beleaguered one. The king's son sent him to fetch his arrows. He was, all unknown to himself, at the same time a bearer of important tidings. And when commanded, having done his work, he disappears.

Child of God, carrier of Jehovah's arrows, do your master's bidding. You labor in obscurity, perhaps; your work seems unimportant. You are, nevertheless, doing service for the kingdom. If you serve the King's Son in most trivial capacity, you are doing royal offices and your work will some time seem. There is much that is out of sight. It is ours to implicitly obey. Jesus, God will take care of the rest. There is significance in our simplest [illegible] urge to Christ. The meaning of [illegible] going and coming may be the man hidden in the rock in the field beyond. Only let us take good care of the artillery.

Confessing Christ.

There are not only a few, but I am very sorry to say, a great many who are ashamed of their blessed Redeemer. When out in company they dislike very much to hear his name mentioned, and some who have professed Christ and are what the world designates as Christians are much worse than those who make no profession whatever.

Some are afraid to defend the cause of Christ or to pray in the presence of their friends. They say, "I want to pray, but they might laugh and ridicule me, and that would be terrible." Christ says in Mark viii. 38, "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Some think "I will be a Christian and none need know of it." But I assure you my friends, that you cannot be a true follower of Christ if you obey not his teachings.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." How can we sin and and hope to be forgiven, when he says, "The wages of sin is death."

So let us not be ashamed of him, but own him as our Savior whenever we see a chance for so doing, and thereby gain a right to the tree of life, and an entrance through the gates into the city, when Christ comes to make up his jewels. Oh, God, keep us near to thee. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, that we may be ready when Christ comes to reign, and hear the "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," is my prayer.—Ada A. Vose.

Obituary.

Oscar A. Garton was born in Argyle, Lafayette, Co., Wis., Dec. 16, 1860; died May 1, 1906 at his home near Kingston, Ark., On July 26, 1884, he was united in marriage with Mary M. Lyon. To their union were born five sons and three daughters. There survive him his wife, three sons and two daughters; also his father and mother (John and Emily Garton of Marathon, Iowa) two brothers and a sister to mourn his loss. He had been a member of the Church of God for 25 years. We laid him away to await the coming of our Lord. It was hard indeed to give him up, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we expect to meet him again on the morning of the first resurrection. Funeral services were conducted by Bro. Wm. Slaven from 1 Cor. i. 37-38. Mrs. Mary M. Garton.

When God threateneth judgments, we should pray against sins. Our eye of sorrow should be more upon that which dishonoreth him, than upon that which afflicts.—Bishop Reynolds.

Denver, May 18.—The passenger department of the Chicago & North-Western Railway announces that the rate to Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo, in September, on the occasion of the Centennial Celebration of the discovery of Pike's Peak, will be $25.-00 round trip from Chicago. The lines east of Chicago will probably announce a correspondingly low rate from all points.

Poetry.

The Hope of Zion.

Fair daughter of Zion, arise from thy sadness,
And put on thy garments of bridal array!
The song of thy mourning be turned into gladness,
Behold the first dawn of Millennial day!
Go look to the East where the Crescent is waning,
Where Israel's portion hath desolate lain,
On the hills, on the plains, in the valleys of Canaan,
The land is restored to its verdure again.

Are these not the signs that Messiah is nearing,
When Jacob no longer an exile shall be?
When they from afar on the mountains appearing,
Shall break 'neath their hoofbeat in the great [illegible]

[illegible] to the days of which prophets have [illegible]
[illegible] nations no longer shall 7 on oppress,
When [illegible] sake from the necks to be cast shall be broken,
And the land be restored to its long promised rest.

[illegible] that their Prince shall appear in his [illegible]
And the heavens shall glow with the light of his [illegible]
[illegible] shall review the jubilee history,
[illegible] walk in bond in triumph death reigns.

Hail Zion! our city, the joy of the nation,
Shall ever be free from the chastening rod;
Her streets shall be thronged with the heirs of salvation,
Her people crowned with the praises of God.

The songs of her glory shall vibrate through heaven,
And nations shall learn of her fame from afar;
While homage unceasing to him shall be given,
The Bridegroom of Sharon, and Bethlehem's Star.

God is Love.

What a God of love we serve who has so arranged things that his children may assemble in family capacity to comfort, strengthen, and upbuild one another through all the trials and vicissitudes incident to our mortal lives. It is here at the Lord's table we ought all to lift our hearts to God in gratitude and say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name, and forget not all his benefits; who forgiveth all our iniquities, who redeemeth our life from destruction, who crowneth us with loving kindness and tender mercies." Psa. ciii. It is here the weary find rest; the sorrowing find comfort; the despairing find hope; the weak find strength; the tried find relief; the troubled find peace, and our faith is brightened because we remember him who has triumphed over death; that "because I live ye shall live also," and he is coming to make known to us the exceeding riches of God's favor in his kindness toward us who have trusted in his promises and are striving in patience and humility to be conformed to the image of his Son. It is when we think of these things, beloved, that we realize that God is love; and we are to rejoice in them says Peter; though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold trials. If need be there is the reason for all the distressing circumstances that overtake the children of God. It is the way of driving them to the refuge. If left to themselves they would sometimes wander far out of the way. It is God's method of perfecting character. His own beloved Son learned obedience by the things he suffered, and if the Captain of our salvation was thus perfected shall we not expect the same? But though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies, for he does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. They are new every morning, great is his faithfulness. The Lord is good unto them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him. Lam. iii. When we consider what we are by nature and then contrast it with what God has done, and what he promises to do for us, we realize something of his goodness toward us. "All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way." This is God's description of mankind in general, but notwithstanding our perverseness and proneness to do those things displeasing to him after having once learned of him. He is still merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities, bless his holy name; but as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him, as far as the east is from the west so far hath he removed our transgressions from us. Is there anything like this in all the realm of thought? And as if to bring it within the scope of our feeble comprehension, he says, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that love him, for he knoweth our frame. He remembers that we are dust." Psa. ciii. If we, like Paul have been often at the throne of favor and learned of his willingness to forgive sin; like him we will be able to say, "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulation; that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God. How did Paul comfort his brethren? By exhorting them to hold fast the blessed hope, that they might be made partakers of the glory to be revealed at the appearing and kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Ah, my brethren, it is faith in these things that makes us strong in the power of his might. We then can appropriate the promise that all things work together for good to them that love God and are called according to his purpose. Faith in God gives us an abiding conviction that he who sees the end from the beginning does all things well. Faith in God enables us to look beyond present trials into the glorious future when the Lord will come from heaven to clothe his saints with the joyous vesture of immortality. Faith in God teaches us that sorrow will not always be the portion of God's people. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. The morning without clouds when the Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings, and the redeemed of the Lord shall come to Zion with singing, everlasting joy shall be upon their head, they shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow and mourning shall flee away. By faith we realize that we are chastened now, that we should not be condemned with the world; we are expressly made subject evil that we may be made partakers of his holiness (Heb. xii. 10), but he will not let us be tried above what we are able to bear, though it seems at times as if we should fail, but tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and to them that are exercised thereby experience of sorrow intensifies our hope that maketh not ashamed. Trouble rubs off the rough edges of our character, subdues our wills, and leads ultimately to the perfection of our nature. Without this experience of evil, we are apt to become careless and indifferent toward God. We shall be greatly helped in our pilgrimage if we always bear this in mind. The word of exhortation to us is, Let not tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword, separate us from Christ. They will not separate you from his love. Take not your trials as an evidence of his anger, but as a token of his love. "For whom the Lord loveth he instructeth and scourges every one whom he receiveth." "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten," says Jesus. My brother, my sister, be not cast down, though every earthly support is removed, and present comforts gone. Grasp firmly the outstretched arm of God through Christ, for he says, "My grace is sufficient for thee," until I take away the rebuke of my people from the earth, and give beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. This will be the portion of all those who come forth from trial fit and prepared for the Master's use. And they shall come from the east and west, the north and south, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and the faithful of all ages, in the kingdom of God to enjoy the felicity of an endless life.

Don't Give Up the Ship.

"Don't give up the ship," my brethren. Our Captain is not dying! The battle may be fierce, but ere you are aware it will be over and the whole world will be won. What if you do suffer? That is just what you are called to do, to suffer for Jesus' sake, to walk in his steps! But "you cannot stand the strain?" How then could he? What did he not bear for you? There was a Judas right on the ship when the battle was the very hottest. Peter denied that he had ever been acquainted with such a man, when the Master had been captured and the cause seemed lost, and every one of the soldiers on board the vessel forsook it and left it to its fate. Did Jesus? No! He died that it might ride on to victory.

Trouble on board? Some traitors in the ranks? There always has been and there always will be. If Jesus couldn't have a perfect church how can we expect to? It may break your hearts because some go wrong and deny the faith just as it broke his heart and as it has broken ours, but you must bear even this. We are all in the furnace in these days of peril, our faith is being tried in the fire, just as the faith of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego was. And if some cannot, will not endure the affliction, but turn aside and take an apparently easier path, and we cannot win them back, all we have to do is to go ahead. One like to the Son of God will walk with us through the flames. Only last evening I heard of two once faithful ones, almost as dear to us as our own lives, who are now buying the book of the great Chicago Professor, in which so much of the Bible is set aside as false and are giving it to unbelievers; are saying, that "Matthew lied," that "God lied," that "there is nothing in the prophets to prove that Jesus is the Savior," that "he is only the son of Joseph," etc. Can we endure it? but it is hard to see those whom we buried in baptism, who were for years our helpers in the service of the Master, who comforted us in tribulation, and who led others into the fold, deny the Lord that bought them, and count the blood of the covenant wherewith they were sanctified, an unholy thing, and do despite unto the Spirit of grace. We love them, and would sacrifice all worldly comforts and luxuries, go meanly clad, and poorly fed, could we but put them back where they once were, but we can't, we can only pray to God to save the rest, and do all we can to save them from falling into the same snares. Stand at your post, brethren. The greater the danger the more need of faithfulness. The more deserters there are, the greater necessity of faithfulness in those who are left.

We have some staunch soldiers, who will never lower the flag to the foe. They are cheering us with the cry "on, on to victory!" "Lay hold of the work, we will help you!" "God is our refuge and our strength." "Let us trust in him." Thank you, dear ones! You have made us feel that a great awakening is coming—that "the darkest time is just before day."

"O it will be but little longer
We must these many woes endure;
Then let our faith and hope grow stronger,
Our Father's promise still is sure."

S. Roxana Wince.

The Study of Prophecy.

By the study of history we can see the things that have already transpired in the world; by the study of prophecy we may see the things that have yet to transpire. History throws its light on the ages that have gone by; prophecy throws its light on the ages to come.

Without the study of prophecy we cannot have a right view of the coming kingdom, or the future glory of our Lord, and we sleight the wisdom and love of God, who has made known unto us these grand and glorious truths. It was not to give us an opportunity of speculating, or to awaken our curiosity, that these things have been foretold, but to enlighten our minds with regard to future events, and lead us to be in readiness for them, and become fitted for the kingdom of God. Christians suffer great loss by their passing by the prophetic part of God's Word. They lose knowledge which would enrich the mind, truth which would affect the heart and guide the life.

Prophecy has a great moral and spiritual use. God has graciously shown us the end from the beginning that we may be warned of the things that are coming, and be prepared for them. Those who turn away from the prophetic Word may see their mistake too late. Almost all prophecy has relation to the judgments of God which shall come upon the world in the day of our Lord, or just prior to, and at the commencement of, the day of the Lord; and in what condition will they be, therefore, who despise prophecy, who make no effort to understand it, and thus expose themselves to the coming woes?

In proportion as we learn what God has revealed about the future, and our minds become imbued with its importance, the ties will be loosened that bind us to the present. And the more knowledge we gain of the things which shall be hereafter, the more will our minds rest in the truth, and the stronger will be our faith and the brighter our hope.

It is necessary to observe, for the sake of those familiar with the form prophecy often takes, that both the present and the past tense are often used for the future. Thus Isaiah says relating to Christ's first coming, 700 years before the events actually took place, "He is despised and rejected of men." "But he was wounded for our transgressions." "He was bruised for our iniquities." The reason for adopting this method was, the Holy Spirit placed the wonderful events of the future so vividly before the minds of the prophets, that the whole seemed present and certain to them.

No greater mistake in reference to the prophecies respecting our Lord's second coming can be made than not to look for their literal fulfilment. The prophecies which tell us of the appearing of Jesus Christ in the flesh were literally fulfilled; even the little circumstances which were foretold in connection with his life and sufferings, were also fulfilled to the very letter. There is no reason then why we should not expect the literal accomplishment of the numerous prophecies respecting his appearing in the clouds, and also of the many circumstances connected therewith.

But some men never attempt the study of prophecy, believing it to be impossible ever to understand it; and others speak lightly of the subject, and treat those who give attention to it with derision. There are large portions of the Scriptures containing important prophecies—prophecies which relate to the future of mankind—and yet the generality of ministers do not attempt to expound them. They sometimes quote them, but they almost always misapply them; and in this way unscriptural views are imbibed, and error is spread, and the plans and purposes of God are misunderstood. And ministers are in a great measure responsible for this. Instead of preaching their creed and assuming that it contains all the truth, and that all outside of it, or that may be contrary to it is heresy, they ought to study the Word, eat it up, and digest it, and be able to bring out the truth. It is the Scriptures that are to be our guide to the truth, and not the creeds of a Conference or a council. If we teach error instead of truth, and thus mislead others, it will not justify us at the last to say that we taught what was in the creed, and to say that the church required us to adopt the creed as our standard of faith.

The apostle Peter under divine inspiration wrote these words: "And we have the Word of prophecy made more sure; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts; knowing this first, that no prophecy of Scripture is of private interpretation. For no prophecy ever came by the will of man; but men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost. 2 Pet. i. 19-21. Peter evidently considered the prophetic Word or the written Word of the Lord a sure foundation upon which to build, yea, more sure, more safe than vision could be.

No inconsiderable portion of the Old Testament Scriptures is made up of prophecy, and if prophecy is not studied, then a large portion of the Bible must be passed over as useless. Besides a blessing is pronounced upon those who give heed to the words of Scripture prophecy. In Rev. i. 3 it is said, "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of the prophecy, and keep the things that are written therein." At the same time it is true that never at any previous period, since the first four centuries did the study of prophecy occupy so large a share of the attention of the Christian church. Thousands, we believe, are now pondering seriously the signs of the present times and comparing them with what are to be the signs of Christ's coming, who a little while ago took no interest in the subject. There are now multitudes of sincere and thoughtful Christians who believe that the end of the age is near.

The above is the second chapter of a book entitled the Kingdom and the Restoration by a student of prophecy.

True and False in Christian Education.

It was a part of the subtle power of that first temptation that the fruit forbidden was fitted "to make one wise." The capacity of the mind for knowledge is a great blessing or a great curse, according as it is directed. The desire to pursue an independent and rebellious course, culminating in intellectual independence of God, will bring disaster. On the other hand, a humble desire to "think God's thoughts after him," by means of a reverent study of his ways in nature and grace, will lead one into rich experiences, which will enlarge and develop the soul most wonderfully.

All knowledge comes to us in two ways, and the second way uses the first. First, we get knowledge through eye-gate, ear-gate, etc. In other words, we acquire all through the senses. This is the Lockian theory, practically, and in a way it is true. I believe he allowed something to reflection, yet reflection can only use material already furnished by the senses.

Now, is there any other way of acquiring knowledge? There is the testimony of others, but even this comes to us through ear-gate. Yet we believe some testimony and disbelieve other. What is faith? Is it not a kind of capacity for recognizing "truth" in spite of a lack of sensational knowledge. It seems to me something of this sort is true, and if so, a whole world of possibility opens before us.

True Christian education aims to train not merely the senses and those forms of knowledge which relate to the "things which are seen," but also those deeper spiritual faculties which grasp the "things which are not seen."

It is possible to teach a man the road from Jericho to Jerusalem, and yet totally fail to teach him the road from his spiritual Jericho to New Jerusalem. We can load up a student's mind with facts about the Bible, and even with doctrines taught in the Bible, and yet fail to lead him into the higher ranges of Christian thought.

It is possible to train him in the art of elegant expression, until he will be able to acquit himself with credit before an audience, while we fail to show him how to bear to thirsty souls the water of life in his elegantly ornamented cup.

The forms of knowledge are important and not to be neglected, but the substance of knowledge is still more important. God's ancient people are said to "perish for lack of knowledge," and Christ defines eternal life to be knowing the true God. True Christian education will seek to impart this.

Kind Words.

Kind words do not cost much. They are quickly spoken. They do not blister the tongue that utters them. They never have to be repented of. They do not keep us awake till midnight. It is easy to scatter them. And oh, how much good they may do! They do good to the person from whose lips they fall. Soft words will soften the soul. They will smooth down the rough places in our natures. Care to say kindly things will drill our natures in kindness. It will help pull up all the roots of passion. It will give us a spirit of self-control. It will make the conscience delicate and the disposition gentle. A woman can not make a habit of speaking kind words without augmenting her own gracious temper. But better will be their influence on others.

If cold words freeze people, and hot words scorch them, and bitter words madden them, so will kind words reproduce themselves, and soothe and quiet and comfort the hearer. They make all the better elements of one's nature come trooping to the surface. They melt our stubbornness. They arouse an appreciation of better things.

Let us say the kindly word. No one can tell how many burdened hearts may be relieved, how many discouraged souls may be inspired. Say it every day; to the one who disturbs you while you are busy, asking for work; to the one who has almost lost hope; to all. Remember, kind words can never die.

Better Be Careful.

Quite likely "2400" days is right. By present appearances it will take about that time to do what is predicted before the grand crisis.

I am thankful to Bro. Geo. Francis for his help in proving the absurdity of Antiochus Epiphanus being the little horn in either Dan. vii. or viii. See Restitution of May 9. But he thinks the little horn of the 8th chapter was Rome simply because the angel said only once! that it grew out of one of the four Grecian horns. He will please kindly remember that it is dangerous to require Gabriel to prove his veracity. Zacharias found it so. Luke i. 5, 22, 57-80.

Mary and Joseph did not dare do it. Luke i. 26-35; Matt. i. 18-25. Neither did Daniel. Gabriel said it once plainly; that was enough. Dan. viii. 8, 9. "Therefore the he goat waxed very great; and when he was strong the great horn was broken; and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven. And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land." (Not toward the west).

History proved his word true. Rome didn't come out of either of the Grecian horns; it grew up on the river Tiber in Italy far west of the Grecian territory.

Islam is the Ishmael of the Christian era. Mecca is its religious heart. Constantinople is its civil governing outpost, whence it has defied Christian Europe 1200 years, and just now seems ready to try titles with Great Britain for Egypt, the great pathway to British India.

Many think a "holy war" is imminent in which Mahommedanism and Christianity will again be brought face to face with the full strength of both. Mahommedanism is too big and too bad a power to be ignored by prophecy, (Amos iii. 7) it is "the false prophet," trying to supplant God's Prophet whom Moses said God would raise up.

Announcements.

The annual meeting of the North West Conference will convene at Fellda, Wash., on the evening of the 15th of June and hold over the following Sunday.

Teams will be at the Riverview hotel close by the Ferry landing at Vancouver, Wash. Those wishing conveyance out should write in time that the brethren will know how many teams to send out. Address P. G. Woulf, Vancouver, Wash. R. F. D. No. 3.

Now brethren, all are invited to come and give their aid for a good meeting, both by their presence and a good word for the truth. Come, all speaking the same thing. Paul in writing to Titus says, Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine. If we all do this we will have a meeting long to be remembered.

Yours for the truth.

ALMIRA BROOKS, Sec'y.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of the Abrahamic Faith, will be held at the Antioch meeting house, five miles south of Plymouth, on the Michigan road, commencing on Friday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., June 8th, 1906, and continuing over the following Sunday. We urge that every church of our faith that possibly can, be represented by duly appointed delegates, as there will be some business to be considered at this meeting and we therefore desire a full attendance. A program will appear later. For over forty years our people have been holding what is called the "June Meeting." In this period many changes have been wrought, some of them sad ones. Nearly all the members of the local church who met here the first time for meeting, after the house was erected, have fallen under the power of death, and are awaiting in silence the trumpet call to the resurrection of life. Indeed there remains but the merest remnant of the pioneer church in Indiana. Nearly all are gone but still held in sacred memory by those of us who knew them. Will you of the present generation of believers in the risen Lord be as zealous for the truth as they? Then lay aside the common cares of life, and attend another "June Meeting" on the spot rendered sacred by the faithful of other days. Who would miss the Antioch meeting? Able speakers will be present to proclaim the truth.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

THE Bible School that was to have been held in Plymouth just after the Antioch meeting will have to be postponed to a later date, as it has been impossible for the committee appointed to arrange the details to their satisfaction at this time, and will have to ask for further time to complete their work. This notice is given because many have asked concerning the school, and it is due to all interested to know in advance of the June conference that it is necessary to postpone the school to a later date. The project is not given up, but only delayed till the work can be arranged properly.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

The 48th Annual Conference of the Churches of God, in Michigan, will be held at Dutton, Kent Co. Michigan, commencing Thursday evening, May 31, 1906 and continue over the following Sunday, (June 1, 2, and 3.)

It is the desire of all who have been in the habit of attending these gatherings that all the churches send delegates to this meeting.

A cordial invitation to attend is extended to all and particularly the brethren of this and adjoining states.

A programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

Once again the invitation comes from Dutton, the dear old gathering place, to have the Annual Conference at their place. There has been many good and profitable meetings held at Dutton, it always seemed like a family reunion. Let us show them our appreciation of their invitation by our presence.

If you have some good news of what the Lord has done for you tell us of it, it will cheer us on our way. If trouble has been your portion and the load heavy, tell us, perhaps we can aid you, our prayers will be for you at least.

Jesus is coming, will the Annual Meeting of 1906 be the last? Come work while the day lasts.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

There will be a meeting of the Ladies' Tithing Society during the Conference, and we hope every member will make it a point to attend; and not only the members, but we would be glad to have all, especially the sisters, encourage us by their presence. We believe that Tithing is a good thing to practice, whether one sees fit to put her name down on the book or not; it seems to even things up so; whether one has much or little she can give as much proportionately as her neighbor. If I have $100 I can give $10 of that to the cause; if I have ten cents surely I should be willing to lay aside one cent for the Lord, and I have given just as much according to my ability, in the last case as in the first. So come and talk it over and rejoice with us in the Lord.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the Camp-grounds at Waterloo, Iowa, from Aug. 18th to 26th inclusive. Programme will be announced later.

MRS. EVA L. STEARNS, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 16, to 19, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if printed will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Send your pledges but no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Notice is given that the brethren at Fonthill, Ontario, expect to have a special gathering—an all-day meeting on Sunday, May 27 next. We invite all lovers of truth to meet with us on this occasion. We expect three or four speakers. Any further information in respect to this meeting can be obtained by corresponding with the undersigned.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. Read X PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 6, 1906. NUMBER 21.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-rulers with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Zion Captive.

By Babylon's proud streams we sate,
And tears gushed quick from every eye,
When our own Zion's fallen state
Came rushing to our memory;
And there, the willow groves among,
Sorrowing, our silent harps we hung.

For there our tyrants in their pride,
Bade Judah raise the exulting strain,
And our remorseless spoilers cried,
"Come breathe your native hymns again."
Oh, how in stranger climes can we Pour forth Jehovah's melody?

When thou, loved Zion, art forgot,
Let this unworthy hand decay:
When Salem is remembered not,
Mute be these guilty lips for aye!
Yea, if in transport's liveliest thrill,
Thou, Zion, art not dearer still!

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 34.

1. Make for thyself bonds and collars and put them around thy neck;

2. And thou shalt send them unto a king of Idoumaia and unto a king of Moosb and unto a king of sons of Ammoon and unto the king of Turos, and unto a king of Sidoon at the hands of their messengers who are coming unto king Sedekias, king of Jouda for their meeting in Hierousaleem.

3. And thou shalt direct them to say unto their lords, In this wise hath the Lord God of Israel said, In this way shall ye say unto your lords.

4. That I made the earth with my strength and with my great and high instrumental hand and I shall give it to whomever it may seem best in my eyes.

5. I have given the earth to Nabouchodonosor king of Babuloon to serve him as a servant, and the wild beasts of the field to work for him.

6. And the nation and the kingdom that do not put their neck under the yoke of Babuloon's king, with sword and with famine shall I visit them, hath the Lord said, until they leave off at his hand.

7. And do ye not hearken to your false-prophets and those who are divining for you, and those who are dreaming dreams for you, and those who are watching flights of birds for you, and your pharmacists who are saying, Do not work for the king of Babuloon;

8. For they are prophesying lies for you to make you to be far from your land.

9. And the nation that shall lead its neck under the yoke of Babuloon's king, and work for him I shall also leave behind on its land and it will work for him and dwell thereon.

10. And unto Sedekias king of Jouda have I talked according to all these words, saying, Lead in your neck, and work for the king of Babuloon;

11. Because they are prophesying unjust things for you;

12. Because I have not sent them, saith the Lord; and they are prophesying in my name in respect to an unjust way to destroy you; and ye will be lost thereby ye and the prophets who are prophesying lies unto you in respect to an unjust way.

13. Unto you and all this laity and the priests have I talked saying, In this wise hath the Lord said, Do not hearken unto the words of the prophets who are prophesying unto you saying, Lo, the vessels of the house of the Lord will return from out Babuloon, because they are prophesying unjust things unto you.

14. I have not sent them;

15. If they are prophets and if there is a word of the Lord in them let them meet me.

16. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, Even the rest of the vessels,

17. Which a king of Babuloon did not take when he transported Jechonias from Hieroussaleem,

18. Will go into Babuloon, saith the Lord.

COMMENT.

This 34th chapter true text is supposed to be given in substance in the C. V. and R. V. as the 27th chapter, but the first verses as the reader will see were borrowed from the 33d chapter true text and 4 more verses added to the chapter from some other source, besides changing the simple thought and statement in the first two verses, and in almost every other verse. Read and compare for yourselves. The changes are too many to note critically.

CHAS. GARDNER.

CHAPTER 35.

1. And it came to pass in the 4th year of Sedekias king of Jouda in the 11th month, that Ananias son of Azzor the false-prophet from Gabaon spake unto me in the house of the Lord before the eyes of the priests and all the laity saying,

2. In this wise hath the Lord said; I have broken the yoke of the king of Babuloon.

3. There are yet two years of days and I shall return into this place the vessels of the house of the Lord,

4. And Jechonias and the removal of Jouda because I shall break the yoke of Babuloon's king.

5. And Hieremias spake unto Ananias before the eyes of all the laity and before the eyes of the priests, who stood in the house of the Lord.

6. And Hieremias said, Truly in this wise may the Lord have done, may he have established thy word which thou art restoring to this place the vessels of the house of the Lord and all the removal from out Babuloon.

7. However may ye have hearkened unto the Word of the Lord which I am speaking in your ears and in the ears of all the laity,

8. The prophets who came to pass before me, and before you from the aninate age (meaning the beginning of the human creation) also prophesied in respect to war upon many a land and against great kingdoms.

9. The prophet who prophesied for peace, when the Word had come to pass they would know the prophet whom the Lord had sent unto them in faith.

10. And Ananias took the collars off of the neck of Hieremias in the eyes of all the laity and broke them.

11. And Ananias spake before the eyes of all the laity, saying: Thus hath the Lord said; In this shall I break the collars of Babuloon's king off from the necks of all the nations. And Hieremias went on his way.

12. And a Word of the Lord occurred unto Hieremias after Ananias had broken the collars from off his neck, saying,

13. Go on foot and speak unto Ananias saying, In this wise hath the Lord said: Wooden collars hast thou broken, and I shall make iron collars in place of them.

14. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, An iron yoke have I put on the neck of all the nations that they may work for the king of Babuloon.

15. And Hieremias said unto Ananias, The Lord did not send thee, and thou hast caused this laity to do in an iniquitous way.

16. Therefore in this wise hath the Lord said, lo, I am sending thee off from the face of the earth; This year art thou condemned to die,

17. And he did die in the seventh month.

COMMENT.

See "Hebrew" R. V. & R. V. chapter 28th for what purports to be this same chapter 35th true text, where you will find "Hananiah son of Azur" instead of "Ananias son of Azor" and "within two full years" instead of "yet two years of days" and "from the animate age" as parenthetically explained translated simply "of old." The 4th verse omitted is the 9th verse R. V. In the 10th verse "the collars" translated "the bar" and in the 11th verse "the collars" translated "the yoke." In the 13th "the collars" translated again "bars" twice. In the 14th "work for" translated "serve" "and I have given him the beasts of the field also" not in the text at all. In the 16th verse "to do in an iniquitous way" translated "to trust in a lie." In the same verse "because, etc." the last clause not in the text at all. In the 17th verse "the same year" not in the text. These differences may seem to some of you readers matters of small import; but it does not so seem to me. It makes the purpose of the tampering still more evident to my mind. Such mistakes or differences do not occur in transcribing or translating merely. CHAS. GARDNER.

Who Should Administer Baptism to Believers?

I received from Fairbanks, Oklahoma, the following request.

"Dear Bro. Wilson:

I desire to ask you a question, and wish you to put both the question and the answer in THE RESTITUTION.

Did the Apostles after they had taught the people the truth send them to the Pharisees to be baptized? If so, were they legally baptized into Christ?

Can any of the Churches, who believe the same things the Pharisees did, baptize believers of the gospel of the kingdom, and still receive Divine recognition as valid baptism, knowing that the aforesaid churches do not believe the gospel preached by Jesus and the Apostles?

Your Brother in the hope of eternal life. E. F. R."

I know of no instance on record, where the Apostles used the Pharisees as administrators of gospel baptism, and if it had been done, I should question its validity, after reading of the faith and character of the aforesaid Pharisees.

See Matt. xxiii. 13: "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in."

"Woe unto you Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widow's houses, and for a pretence make long prayers; therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation." "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made ye make him two-fold more the child of hell than yourselves. Woe unto ye blind guides." Now what are these Pharisees?

1. "Hypocrites."

2. They would neither enter the kingdom themselves, nor suffer others.

3. They would rob widows, and cover up their iniquity with mock piety.

4. They would compass sea and land to make a convert, and when they made him, he was two-fold worse than themselves.

5. They were "fools" and "blind guides." A lot of canting pious hypocrites, who neither would enter the kingdom of heaven themselves, nor suffer others to do so, could hardly be proper characters to administer Christian baptism. If they can do so, then any blaspheming saloon bum, can administer valid gospel baptism, with as much propriety, as those canting hypocrites.

Now, as to whether churches not of the faith, can administer valid Christian baptism or not, depends upon who did unquestionably administer baptism in the days of Christ and the Apostles? This being ascertained, we can then ascertain who are proper administrators to-day, and we would have no Bible right to employ any others.

WHO ADMINISTERED BAPTISM IN THE DAYS OF CHRIST AND HIS APOSTLES?

See John iii. 22: "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them and baptized."

Verse 26: "And they (John's disciples) came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptiseth, and all men come to him."

John iv. 1, 2: "When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John (though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples.") Here we find that the disciples (or followers of Jesus,) were recognized as proper persons to administer baptism by the Master himself, and that is good authority, and in fact, there could be no better authority. See I Cor. i. 14: "I (Paul) baptized none of you, but Crispus and Gaius; lest any should say I baptized in mine own name. And I baptized also the household of Stephanas; besides, I know not whether I baptized any other."

Paul baptized as a disciple of Christ, but he did not make a practice of baptizing, 'est people should say he was baptizing in his own name. He doubtless left that work to some less noted disciples, who would not be suspected of baptizing in their own names. Nevertheless he did baptize, and that was on this side of the ascension of Jesus. So that breaks the argument that the original twelve before the ascension were the only authorized ones under the commission.

In Acts viii. 38, we have the account of the baptism of the Eunuch, by Philip. "And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptized him." Here we have another disciple, Philip, the evangelist, administering baptism, on this side of the ascension.

We thus far have the record of Apostles, evangelists, and disciples, administering gospel baptism, but we have no record, however, of those who were not gospel believers, administering baptism to gospel believers.

Now, if we have no Bible precedent of unbelievers baptizing believers, what right has anyone to presume to do so now? Can it be anything more than an unwarranted presumption?

Now, then, if any one should ask me, can ministers, who are no more established on a true gospel basis, than were the Pharisees of old, be proper administers of true gospel baptism, I should reply, there is no Bible precedent, and authority, to show that they are. I can say candidly, that I would not risk my own salvation on it, neither would I advise any other person to do so. Salvation is something too precious to take any risks thereon.

Ministers who teach a theology which is not in accord with the Great Eternal, can hardly be acceptable persons to render acceptable service of any kind in the vineyard of the Lord. Especially when we read, in Gal. i. 7, 8: "There be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."

The gospel preached by Paul, and the other Apostles, and evangelists, was of a truth, none other than the grand old gospel of the kingdom, which was preached before them by the Lord Jesus himself, who instructed them to preach the same glad message.

Tell me, would you feel safe to receive baptism at the hands of men, upon whom the curse of heaven rests, as given above by Paul? I would not, I assure you. Could you receive communion from the hands of a man who rest under the curse, on account of either perverting, or preaching another gospel entirely? I could neither receive baptism, or communion from such people, without feeling guilty before God. If I had received baptism from the hands of such an one, I would ignore it, and seek baptism at the hands of one I was satisfied was a gospel believer. It is not necessary to have a minister to do this, any disciple can perform that service. I baptized one on my last trip, who was previously baptized by a gospel perverter.

We are now living in times when it is not safe to do anything else but "hew to the line," as our beloved Brother Wagoner says. We need, as a people, to be clear-cut, and decisive, cut entirely loose from any form of the great apostasy, by which we are surrounded. I sometimes hear those who profess to be of the faith, address those who are not of the faith, as "brother," or "sister." This is all wrong, and is deceptive to those whom you so address.

The time has come, when all those who are really and truly of the faith, should be outspoken, and stalwart men and women in Christ Jesus; who mean straight forward business, and put away all sickening mincing with the apostasy. You can do all this, and still be kind, loving, respectful, inoffensive, and courteous to all. A true Christian must be this at all times, to all, whether they be of the faith or not.

We need strong, energetic action in fearlessly sustaining the defence and proclamation of the faith once delivered unto the saints, all along the line, both by the voice and the press.

In order to more effectually accomplish this work, it needs some system, and plan of action in order to sustain men and women who are clear cut, and straight forward in the faith, in doing uncompromising work for the Master.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Pleasant People.

Some men move through life as a band of music moves down street, flinging out pleasure on every side through the air to every one, far and near, that can listen. Some men fill the air with their presence and sweetness, as orchards in October day fill the air with perfume of ripe fruit. Some women cling to their own houses, like the honey-suckle over the door, yet, like it, sweeten all the region with the subtle fragrance of their goodness. There are trees of righteousness which are ever dropping precious fruit around them. There are lives that shine like star beams, or charm the heart like songs sung upon a holy day. How great a bounty and a blessing it is to hold the royal gifts of the soul so that they shall be music to some and fragrance to others, and life to all! It would be no unworthy thing to live for, to make the power we have within us the breath of other men's joy; to scatter sunshine where only clouds and shadows reign; to fill the atmosphere where earth's weary toilers must stand with brightness which they cannot create for themselves, and which they long for, enjoy and appreciate.

Have you a purpose in life, or are you drifting along with the current of time—thoughtless, careless, selfish, indifferent. The dangers of such an aimless existence are seen in human wrecks which are floating all about us. The selfish life is purposeless, useless and fruitless—a truly pitiable, condition. Life brings its responsibilities. Its true purpose is usefulness. You are to live for others, as well as yourself. Your life is a part of theirs; theirs a part of yours. What you do does not concern yourself alone. Your words, your works, enter into the lives of those about you, wielding an influence for good or evil. You are going onward to—what? You are going somewhere, but—where? What will the end be? Judgment is coming. Life is yours to determine character and decide destiny. What is your life? Are you what you ought to be? Are you what you profess to be? Are you right with God? These are solemn questions. They concern you. You must answer them—some time. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Are you ready to do this?

Every Bible is a missionary that preaches Jesus and the remission of sins, and the resurrection through faith in his blood. It can be easily concealed, cheaply supported, readily consulted; it never grows old, superannuated or sick, and where one Bible is preserved in a nation, there is a spark of celestial fire which shall break forth into a flame to chase away darkness.—Dr. John Mason.

Little Things in Religious Life.

Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles nor battles, nor one great act or mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Siloam, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not "the waters of the river great and mighty," rushing down in torrent noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life. The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudencies, little foibles, little indulgences of self and of the flesh, little acts of indolence or indecision, or slovenliness or cowardice, little equivocations or aberations from high integrity, little bits of worldliness and gaiety, little indifferences to the feelings or wishes of others, little outbreaks of temper and crossness, or selfishness or vanity; the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life. And then attention to the little duties of the day and hour, in public transactions, or private dealings or family arrangements; to the little words and tunes; little benevolences or forbearances, or tenderness; little self-denials, self-restraints and self-thoughtfulness; little plans of quiet kindness and thoughtful consideration for others; punctuality and method and true aim, in the ordering of each day;—these are the active developments of holy life, the rich and divine mosaics of which it is composed. What makes you green hill so beautiful? Not the outstanding peak or stately elm, but the bright sward which clothes its slopes, composed of innumerable blades of grass. It is of small things that a great life is made up; and he who will acknowledge no life as great save that which is built up of great things, will find little in Bible characters to admire or copy.

Repose of Faith.

If I could choose what of all things would be at the same time the most delightful and useful to me, I should prefer a firm religious belief to every other blessing; for this make life a discipline of goodness; creates new hopes when all earthly ones vanish; throws over the decay of existence the most gorgeous of all lights; awakens life even in death; makes even torture and shame the ladder of ascent to Paradise; and far above all combination of earthly hopes, calls up the most delightful visions of the future, where the sensualist and the sceptic view only gloom, decay, annihilation, despair. —Sir H. Davy.

The story is told of Washington that he was one day to leave Boston for Salem at eight in the morning, with a cavalry escort. As the old South clock struck eight he sprang into his saddle and seeing nothing of his cavalry started without them. When the latter arrived, they were mortified to find the President gone, and hastening on, overtook him at the Charles River bridge. Washington turned to their commander, with a smile, saying, "Major, I thought you had been too long in my family, not to know when it was eight o'clock." The story is an illustration of the great leader's invariable punctuality, a habit entering so fully into every detail of his life that his cook is said not to have been accustomed to ask if the guests invited to dinner had arrived, but if the appointed hour had come. The lesson cannot be too strongly enforced. It costs no more, but less, of time and thought and effort, to be punctual, and nothing can well do more for the smooth running of the social machinery than to have each man in his place on time. To be behind in an engagement is not only loss to ourselves, but robbery of others, to whom as to all men, time is their best capital.

That Blessed Hope.

Brethren and sisters, I call your attention to a Scripture this morning that every one of you must be very familiar with. It is found in the second chapter of Titus. After laying down many rules for the regulation of the conduct of the adopted children of God, so that the teaching of God our Savior may be adorned in all things, he gives us the reason for his injunctions, the fact that the saving favor of God has shone forth for all men, teaching us that renouncing impiety and worldly desires, we should live prudently, righteously and piously in the present age, waiting for the Blessed Hope, even the appearing of the glory of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself on our behalf that he might redeem us from all lawlessness, and cleanse for himself a peculiar people devoted to good works." Hebrews i. 1-3 says that God anciently spake to men by various methods, but in these last days has spoken to us by a Son, whom he has appointed heir of all things, and on account of whom he constituted the ages, and who was verily an effulgence of his glory, and an exact impress of his substance." So that it is clear that it is he who is the brightness of the great God and Father's glory we are waiting for, even Jesus Christ. In the next place I would remark that close reading of the text will show that this oft repeated passage does not mean literally what it says. For instance, we see from Peter's words that we have been begotten to a hope of life by the resurrection of Jesus: we have that hope now, and rejoice in it, and therefore the words before us mean that we are looking or waiting for, what we hope for,—the hope in the meantime being a comfort, and sustaining blessing to us, so that we might not grow weary. Hope is truly

A WONDERFUL FACULTY

of the mind. It has vast sustaining power in it. It is the opposite of despair. It embraces both desire and expectation. Expectation and desire fill one with joy,—while expectation and dread fill the mind with terror, and despair. In every age of the world mankind has been sustained in trials by hope. In the darkest hours of earth's history hope, like a beacon light, has led on and cheered burdened millions of afflicted mortals. But, alas,—too often has hope led its deluded followers into quagmires of human speculation and left them to flounder and sink and perish. Let us glance a moment at the hope of mankind generally: what is it? Let the answer come from four hundred millions in China, a full quarter of earth's inhabitants. Let it come from perhaps two hundred and fifty millions in India,—and the dependencies of Turkey, and Russia, and Africa, and the toiling millions of Europe and America North and South of the Equator, and from the vast and restless throng comes the plaintive wail for something better—for a state of things that will bring relief, but like the Ephesians before Paul preached to them they have no hope whatever. And oft in the midst of the gloom is heard the skeptical cry, "If there is a God, why does he allow this state of things to be?" All the ingenuity of man has been taxed to find a remedy for the ills afflicting humanity! Some have thought the good time could be brought about by the circulation of the Scriptures and the held by the various denominations,—and it is the cherished belief of myriads today that the world is to be converted in this way. But after many centuries of effort in that direction we are met with the startling fact that crime is fearfully on the increase,—that the moral status of the world is growing worse instead of better. Every crime that has stained the record of human actions is today of frequent occurrence. And in this wonderful land of Bibles and religious enterprises the crying sin of today is infidelity! Bold blasphemers are multiplying,—popular lectures calculated to destroy confidence in Divine Revelation are circulated gratuitously by the millions both in Europe and America,—and what to me is sadder than all else, is, that the very best disposed and pious people,—who hold the Bible in their hands have lost the key which unlocks it. To enlarge no more in this direction, except to say, we have turned our backs against every human scheme for the betterment of the moral status of the world, and depend solely upon the divine scheme revealed in the Bible,—and it is our purpose to encourage and build one another up in our most holy faith that we may stand against all the wiles of the adversaries,—and at last stand before the Son of Man, that we have come together today.

It is the attribute of the merely animal man to live for and in the present. It is the characteristic of a child of God that he looks backward for the foundation of his faith and hope in the promises of God, and forward for the possession of what is promised. The doctrines we teach are not merely truths but as a whole the veritable truth that sanctifies and saves; and what is called the gospel of the grace of God,—the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes it. The truth thus spoken of is comprised of exceeding great and precious promises,—promises of good things God will do for us, in addition to what he he has already done for us, and is still doing for us. But the acceptance of these great offers involves duties to be discharged,—not as arbitrary laws but as the outcome or effect of love to God for his beneficent purposes toward us. This at-one-ment with God produces joy and perfe,—and hope carries us on untiring pinions till it turns to glad fruition. So that what of joy a Christian now has is a gleam from the happiness that warms our hearts now is an earnest or foretaste of the glory to be revealed in us by and by. We have a clear title-deed now,—but the possession of the inheritance cannot be entered upon till the whole family enter upon it. The whole earth is to become the kingdom of our Lord when Gentile times run out; the whole title vests in the only Begotten Son the Father has, but all the adopted children are surely made joint heirs with him,—and both the heir and his associates enter into possession at the same time. This should melt our hearts in love and gratitude to God when we look around and see the blindness and confusion pervading the religious world. With the Book of God in their hand, which tells them that Jesus is to be King over all the earth, and shall dispense judgment and justice from the throne of his father David on Mount Zion, Jerusalem, Palestine, Syria, to all the inhabitants of the globe,—and that the righteous of all ages from Adam down to the second coming of Christ will live and reign with him here; and that God is going to send him to earth again when the time arrives for him to restore all he has foretold by the prophets; and that of his kingdom there shall be no end,—in the face of all these plainly revealed truths how painful to know that they blindly hope to fly off to heaven at death, and be with Jesus, supposing that he will be forever there, and they forever with him; just as if God had not, near 3000 years ago invited him to a seat at his right hand, till his enemies, who have possession of his inheritance be made his footstool, or handed over to him that he might institute

COMING GLORY,—

CUSTER-PROCEEDINGS

against them. We get ideas from one another by means of the words used,—and we have no other means of getting God-ideas than from his words. If God does not say to creature man what he means, and mean what he says, we know absolutely nothing of his purpose in creation or redemption. But we aim to take him at his Word, and by faith in that Word we know it: God's purpose to put a stop to man's inhumanity to man, that makes countless thousands mourn. We know he will do this by means of a government of his own that he will set up on earth,—and which will break in pieces and consume all human governments and stand for ever. We know by the same Word that he who is called the Seed of the woman, who is the Bruiser of the serpent, in the first chapter of Jehovah's redemptive scheme, and seed of Abraham, in the second chapter,—and Son of David in the third, and Son of Man, and Son of God in the fourth, and he is to be King over all the earth,—King of kings and Lord of lords. By the same Word we know that this same Jesus has died on account of our sins, and by his blood ratified the everlasting covenant made with Abraham, and was himself raised again from the dead by God, through that covenant, because he knew no sin,—and thus provided a way by which we can live again, because he lives to die no more. Besides this we know that if we experience the power of his resurrection the power of an endless life will take possession of us also, and thus make us eligible to the possession of an everlasting kingdom. This should enable any one to take in the whole situation. Human governments occupy the territory which the kingdom of God is to occupy. Nothing but Divine Power will dislodge them, and we know by the same grand old Book that will be exerted to dislodge them, and we know that when the Heir of all things comes to dislodge them Divine Power is the very thing he will be clothed with,—we know in advance by the same infallible Word that he will wound the heads of emperors, kings, presidents, governors, over many countries. We know that he will annihilate the armies and navies that prop up and defend the squatter sovereignties of earth,—and then take the reins of government into his own hands, seat himself upon the throne of glory promised him,—and install the saints of all ages as kings and priests to God. This ought to let every one know why we look and long for Jesus. He has been made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption,—and redemption means redemption from death,—the life of the whole redeemed host of God is now with Christ, concealed with Christ in God, and the beloved Paul tells us it is when he appears that we appear with him in glory. You see that Christ is all in all to us. We have been begotten to the hope of this life by Christ's resurrection; and as certain as Paul was chosen of the Lord as a vessel to bear his name before the Gentiles and kings and the children of Israel, so sure is it that the future life of any of Adam's race was an unsolved problem until Christ rose triumphant over death; so there's a tremendous depth of meaning to the Lord's words, "Because I live ye shall live also." We know from his message from heaven that he who was dead is not only alive again, but

DIVINE POWER

ALIVE FOR EVER MORE;

and holds the keys of the grave and of death. And besides this, he went away promising to come again and to receive his loved disciples to himself. They have been dead more than 1800 years, and as he has not yet come again he has not yet received them to himself; but there stands his promise: "If I go away I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." He came to die and did die, and he is coming to reign and will reign. Yes; he will surely come. The promise is distinct and positive. As I have said this earth belongs to him. It is his inheritance. He will dwell in it and beautify it. It has been stained by his blood, I know, but it has a glorious destiny for all that. It is comparatively small among the worlds revolving through space, but it is inconceivable to me that any of them surpass it in historic interest. Did a son of God ever live, and walk, and weep and love, and bleed on or occupy a tomb on, and redeem another world? He did all this on ours,—and the earth is his special inheritance. While here he often spoke of going away through a baptism of agony and returning in great glory. The baptism of agony came, the earth was convulsed; he rose, ascended and angels comforted the bereaved disciples with the assurance that he would come again. But how would he come? Would he come to them fearful in Majesty? The angels shall answer: "This same Jesus," said they; not another. Thank God for that. It will not only be the same person, but he will have the same divine attributes,—will have the same heart,—the same patient, sympathetic, considerate, indulgent, approachable disposition as when he was here before. He spake his Father's words and then. The eternal Father changes not,—neither will the Son change,—the fulness of the Godhead dwells in him now. The precious words he will address to the sheep who have faithfully followed him outside of the camp, tell us volumes that the angels did not say about "This same Jesus." "He will say to them,—"Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." I for one could not doubt that it is the very same Jesus that said come once before to me, and to you and to you, and to you my brethren and sisters all. We were all poor material to work upon, but we should praise him because he was not afraid to try the power of his words of truth upon us. They were sharper than a two-edged sword,—they pierced us through and through, and turned us inside out,—so that we could see what a mass of corruption we were. He will be terrible to the wicked,—but gentle and tender to the saints. O there is infinite comfort in the words "the very same Jesus shall come." The early Christians were greatly strengthened by the prospect. They believed the promise and looked for the glorious appearing. The Savior intended that they should. He intended it in the Supper they were often to celebrate. That drinking the cup anew with him in his kingdom was ever before them. "Till he come" always sounded sweetly in their ears, and it made melody in their hearts as often as they showed the Lord's death in the sacred Supper. Those three words, "Till he come," are precious beyond measure. I wonder they do not awaken more enthusiasm. Do the brethren of the Lord Jesus heartily believe that Jesus will come again? Do they week after week and day after day look for him? I mean, is he really expected? The time seems long to us since he promised to come, and I am afraid that a lurking doubt of his coming comes over us at times. But the Lord is not slack concerning his promise to come. Longsuffering with our unpreparedness would be a more suitable expression. It is unbelief that asks where is the promise of his coming? But the Spirit supplies a sublime answer to it, as follows:—"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and—

DID HIS FATHER'S WORKS

THE TRUMP OF GOD."

"The Lord himself in his own person,"—the same Jesus who ascended. The shout methinks is one of joy that the hour has come to be united to his bride; the vast majority of them are sleeping in the dust of the ground,—and he is come to awaken and raise them with incorruptible bodies and equal to the angels who can die no more. Beloved, I took more pleasure out of that word about lately than I ever did before. It seemed to bring the same Jesus we have been studying on Olivet and Bethany so close to me. How true is it that he was made like unto his brethren! How natural it is for us to shout when so glad we scarcely know what to do with ourselves, because some awful crisis has been passed,—or some severe trial has ended? I take this as evidence that if it be ours to know the power of Christ's resurrection and clothed upon with immortality from heaven we shall express our joy much as we do now. Just think of his errand to earth as described in 1 Thes. iv. 15, 17, and I think you will be glad that he descends with a shout. Think what an awful reign the reign of death has been. Who can tell the associations of grief and pain, of dismay and agony, of streaming tears and broken hearts, of blasted hopes and ruined plans, of speechless misery and shattered reason, of desolate homes and bleeding affections, which throng around that word—death!

Everywhere and in everything is death—resistless, gloomy, all-levelling death. Its subjects mingle with the soil of every clime and crowd the depths of every sea. Nearly two hundred generations, with all their power, have gone down under its dark dominion, without a single representative left. And every tick of the clock, through all the hours and days and nights and weeks and months and years, without cessation, is of scores of mortals, swept from friends and homes to the silence of them that sleep in the dust of the earth. But there shall come a trumpet-voice before which even death shall cower and all his bands dissolve. Rocky vaults and sepulchres, though sealed for ages and to the living lost, and all the deep incisions in "God's Acre," and all the hidden places whither the dead saints are laid away by loving hands, shall open to set their tenants free. All the dingy doors of their graves shall be lifted, and those within called to bid farewell for ever to all the mould and dampness of that solemn realm. For says the apostle: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Brethren and sisters, this is a vast subject, I can do little except to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance of what you already know of this sublime theme,—and so by way of conclusion I would make a few practical remarks in keeping with it. Of course you know that the very best of the food we eat within us, when it is not digested,—and so it is with the most precious truths of God; they are turned to poison, as it were, when it is laid away as lumber,—or as it is kept only as a bright light for the intellect or the understanding; not digested in the heart or affection, nor incorporated spiritually. The words of our Lord should ever be present with us, that his Word is to judge us.

O what a position is ours to occupy! Professedly waiting for Jesus; that means we are ready to meet him; means, that although far from perfect,—we have turned to God with full purpose of heart and through Jesus' dear name sought forgiveness when we have done amiss,—and thus through God's rich grace we have been able to keep our title clear, so that we are still waiting for Jesus,—waiting for the great High Priest to come out of the most holy place and pronounce his benediction of LIFE FOR-EVER-MORE,

yes, waiting for death's conqueror to confer life upon us that will be impervious to death's shaft. Waiting for the Prince of Peace,—waiting for the King of kings and Lord of lords. His benediction will, as we have seen, penetrate the graves of all his saints,—go down to the very heart of creation, go forth to creation's circumference, rise to its loftiest heights, till arid deserts feel it and smile, and the wilderness blossom as the rose. There is going to be no failure on the part of God or Christ. The marriage Supper of the Lamb will take place. There will be enough for all,—and room for all,—but what concerns us individually is that only those who are ready go in. Maranatha, the Lord cometh, ought to thrill us with joyful anticipation. The blessed Jesus who knows all about us sends us word to be ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh—all preparation must be made before he comes. I repeat it; no preparations can be made after he comes. Only those who are ready go in. I tremble when I think of the fact that five out of the ten virgins had no oil in their lamps, when the cry was made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." I would to God the spark of life in us could be fanned into a flame. Would it not be glorious for us to enter into the joy of our Lord as a complete family? Would it not be dreadful to miss some we have loved so well? As I have said, it all depends upon us, whether as those who claim to have the Blessed Hope, we purify ourselves, even as he is pure; if we do crowns are assured us. God in heaven help us to make sure work for eternity, I humbly pray,—so that at any moment we may meet our glorious Lord with joy. Amen.

THE SOLEMN FACT

AS KING Alfonso of Spain was returning from the church where he had just been married to Princess Ena of England, a bomb was thrown at his carriage, killing sixteen people, and wrecking the carriage. The missile struck a wire, and was deflected in its course, otherwise the king and his new queen would have been killed.

WORD has been received here of the death of Sister Jane Bronson, of Niles, Mich., but we have not as yet received an obituary notice. She was a sister of Brother Ezra Barnhill of this city, and wife of Leroy S. Bronson, who has written some communications for our columns.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master puts it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

IT is difficult for a rich man to be humble, but impossible for a proud man to be wise.

There is a great demand for strong, earnest, courageous men in all good causes and enterprises. But there are certain conditions necessary to be observed in securing the services of such men. If men are expected to be valiant for the truth, they must be allowed to accept the truth, and hold the truth, without compromise, equivocation, or mental reservation. Men will not labor, sacrifice, or endure much to sustain a cause in which they have no interest; to advance doctrines in which they have no faith, or to support leaders who are insincere and selfish.

If conscientious men are compelled to assent to unscriptural opinions, and acquiesce in unwarranted measures and methods; if they must dull the clear edge of their logical convictions, and ignore the plain distinctions between truth and falsehood, they are liable at any time to abandon any cause or work which makes such demands upon them. If they are honest they may refuse to occupy a false position; if they are dishonest they may find excuses for exchanging one false position for another equally false, but more honorable or remunerative.

There may be men of weak conscience and strong ambition who will join in anything that promises to bring them profit, or advancement; but the real work for God in the world has been done by men of unselfish mold, who were not laboring for worldly gain nor seeking personal advancement, and who were willing to make sacrifices, and toil without earthly reward, to advance the interests of the cause of God, and win the crown "that fadeth not away." And this fact may assure us that the gospel of Christ proclaimed and advanced by millions of men and women who devote their lives to its support without the slightest hope or prospect of worldly gain, will never be subverted by the efforts of men, who to advance their own pecuniary interests assail Christianity and insult those who believe it.

But the men who hazard their lives, employ their energies, and devote their time to the advancement of the cause of Christ must be allowed to "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free." They may be counted upon to stand for right and truth and conviction, if they can have liberty of conscience, freedom of speech and action, and fair and honorable treatment as men among men. But they will not labor to build up the interests of self-seeking demagogues. They will not fight to put fetters upon themselves or others. They will not stand by leaders in everything they do, whether right or wrong. They will not labor to put upon others a yoke which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear. They will follow the Bible; but they will not follow men, who, while professing allegiance to God's Word, fight with other weapons beside the Sword of the Spirit, and do their work for their own advancement rather than for the interests of the cause of Christ. And if they see men who occupy the place of guides and leaders, abandoning their own boasted principles, seeking their own advantage, and laboring for personal advancement, they are very likely to hear the voice of Providence saying "To your tents, O Israel," and to obey it without delay, leaving self-seekers to fight their own battles, win their own victories, and divide the spoils among themselves.

Whoever desires to obtain faithful, conscientious Christian co-workers to prosecute and sustain any enterprise, must give them Christian work to do, and an opportunity to do it, must respect their conscientious convictions and honest Christian manhood; and must spare them all participation in the tricks and schemes which so many leaders and self-seekers suppose necessary to success, and compatible with the Christian profession, but which honest truth-loving men abhor and despise.

Honest workers must have honest work to do. Christian workers must not be expected to undertake unchristian work, and all interests whose mainspring is Christian principle, must be so managed and conducted that they shall neither do violence to the principles of honest, faithful, God-fearing, Christian men, nor forfeit the favor of the God of truth, whose smile can blast the humblest human endeavor, and whose frown can blast the proudest schemes of sinful men.—*H. In All Thy Ways Acknowledge Him.

"In all thy ways acknowledge him"
To whom thy path is known;
Thy wisdom is to trust his care,
Nor strive to walk alone.
Commit thy way to God; the rest
Leave to his will—he knoweth best.

"In all thy ways;" in each rough path
Stretch forth thy feeble hands,
And seek protection from his love
Who heaven and earth commands.
Thy strength in each emergency,
Sufficient "for the day" shall be.

"In all thy ways," when clouds arise
And darkness clouds thy way,
He knows thy grief—appoints e'en this
Deep sorrow—oh, then "pray;"
Thy burden roll upon the Lord,
And stay thyself upon his word.

"In all thy ways: thy strength brought low,
With lingering sickness pressed;
Too weak to raise thy head, then may'st
Rest on the Master's breast.
Tho' now the end thou can'st not see,
Thou yet shalt say, "'Twas good for me."

"In all thy ways acknowledge him,"
Leave every painful doubt
To him whose name is "Wonderful,"
His ways past finding out,
In childlike faith his rod receive,
His precious promises believe.

Evangelizing Trip.

I am back in Oregon, at Central Point, 325 miles south of Portland. This is not far from the California boundary, and is the pleasant village where seven years ago, through my labor, by the assistance of a few faithful brethren that resided here, and the blessings of God, a little body of faithful brethren was established, to stay. I was really glad to meet with them again. Although I had held annual meetings since they organized, during the last two years I was hindered from making the trip. Both they and I realize that if a church grows it must be fed on the bread of life. An annual feast is better than entire abstinence. But, happily, Brother Elliott has been their Elder, and although an invalid has done what his physical strength would permit. The brethren are still alive, and zealous for the cause of truth.

I left Wolf, Cal. May 14th. How sad to leave the newly found and newly made brethren, and to leave those new friends that had almost been persuaded, but were framing excuses to postpone obedience and soonship. It is easier to convince a congregation of the Bible system of truth, than to get them to renounce the world, and to work for the world to come. If there were faithful workers to water where the seed has been sown God would give the increase. Surely "the harvest is great but the laborers are few."

In coming to Central Point I came by way of San Francisco. I had seen this once proud and beautiful city a month before. I wish I could describe the change made by the earthquake and fire; but no pen, no words, could make you comprehend it. Think of it as a hundred fold greater than your imagination can picture it. The only word I can think of to give an idea of the ruin, the contrast between the beauty and grandeur and life of a month before, and the devastation, and the immense skeleton of death, of the stretch of ruin is one word repeated over and over, awful! awful! awfullll

A month before I had spent almost a half day in an observatory car, visiting and receiving a description of the most beautiful, noted, or stately portions of this city of 150,000 people, that again and again I had to swallow the lumps that would press my throat, and press back the tears that would be ready to gush from my eyes.

A city reduced from 500,000 to 150,000 partly by the stampede of fright and partly by homeless people, and partly by death is not a sight to be seen by many people, and luckily, not by many generations. The stories of escapes from death, by accident, in the falling buildings would fill volumes. Almost everybody seemed a hero of a romance. Nature has planted in us that natural affection that we always are especially and most interested in the welfare of our kin, and the more nearly so the greater interest. I visited my nieces, Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Rider. Mrs. Walker had passed through the earthquake with no accident to herself or family. They had only to cross Oak Street from their home into Golden Gate Park, to escape from danger of falling buildings and the ocean of devouring flame. After remaining two nights in the park among the thousands that were there because homeless or for fear of destruction by the repeated earthquake, they returned to the lower flat of their home and at evening engaged in arranging their house to receive those who desired shelter. Darkness, almost like that of Egypt, came on at night. She lit a candle thinking that the authorities would permit it. A soldier came in suddenly placed a revolver at her head, and said, Blow that light out! She said she did not stop to argue, but put it out without a protest. They had to grope about in the intense darkness, to complete their preparation for the night.

I was told that the atmosphere was so laden with gas that the lighting of a match would cause a slight flash. The atmosphere itself seemed almost ready to blaze. The panic was indescribable. Life seemed of little value. Numbers of people were shot down by the soldiers. One lady told me that the dread of fire was so great that while they were camped in the park a lady built a fire, a soldier ordered it put out. She went to another place, and started it again, and had to submit to its being put out. She violated the order the third time, and they led her out and shot her. The lady added "and I saw her shot!"

Mrs. Rider was sick, almost prostrated, when the destruction came. Her condition of health and the fright prostrated her so they for a time despaired of her life. They could not light a fire to save a life. But she was able to rally from her prostration.

This article is already too long for a religious paper. Although the scenes passed through and seen by the writer were of intense interest to himself and never can be forgotten. As I looked over this immense desolation I wondered how so many think that the merciful Father and Creator is ever going to set creation on fire, and burn the entire earth with a universal conflagration. Burning up the good, beautiful and desirable things of earth, with the ugly, undesirable, and bad. The sight of a ruined city, the horrible, unsightly skeleton of a city in the crumbled broken walls, confirmed me in the faith that the Scriptures rightly interpreted teach that there shall be "the times of restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began."

I have only held five meetings here at this place, and as we have it in view to visit the brethren again in the fall or early winter we postponed a continued series until we come at that time and closed last night.

I had intended to go to another locality in this valley, to hold a weeks meetings, and Brother Clinton Wilson was to go with me to arrange the work, but his little boy broke his leg today, and so my work ends at present. My next work is at Eugene, Ore. I must necessarily finish this trip to be present at our Conference at Felida, Wash., June 15th.

In Vain Do They Worship Me.

The above text can be found in Matt. xv. 9, and Mark vii. 7. It was the result of a dispute that Jesus had with the Scribes and Pharisees. They accusing his disciples with transgressing the tradition of the elders in not washing their hands when they ate bread. They practiced these things and neglected the weightier matters of the law. Our Savior said ye have made the commandment of God of none effect by your traditions. I wish that we could always remember that those who were religious opposed Christ in his efforts to preach the truth and practice his teachings. It was the common people who heard him gladly, "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Do the sects of today do different to what the Scribes and Pharisees did in the days of Jesus? Are they not teaching for doctrines the commandments of men? They ignore the gospel of the kingdom of God and make light of it. They do not adhere to the law of pardon. Denying the death and resurrection of Christ in their preaching. Many of them preach and practice good morals and are in a sense good people. So were many of these Scribes and Pharisees. To say that they are Christians is saying, that their gospel has power to save. The gospel of Christ is the only power unto salvation. In 1 Cor. i. 24 Christ is declared to be the power and wisdom of God. I mean by the Christ the one who died, not the one whom the sects declare to be the very and eternal God, and could not die. The societies for their young people are full of these untruths. We must be able to discriminate between truth and error. We are aware that some of the sects teach things that sound like the gospel. Some teach that you must believe, repent, and be immersed in order to salvation. But what do they teach their converts to believe? Is it the gospel of the kingdom of God? No indeed, but they substitute a "three fact gospel" for the gospel of Christ. These people are earnest and zealous workers in the building up of a sect. They also teach the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. This denies the mortality of man. Does away with the necessity of the resurrection, and claim for themselves a home in heaven in a disembodied state. Now shall we worship with these people and thereby acknowledge that they have the truth? Judge ye in regard to this matter.

They say that if what you teach be true you unchristianize the whole religious world. I wish to state that the religious world has not been Christianized. It has only been made religious. A religion is being rebound to some form of worship. If it takes the form of the worship set up by Christ it simply has the form and not the power. The power of God and the wisdom of God is in Son Jesus the Christ. He that taketh hold of the Son taketh hold of life, and he that taketh not hold of the Son, taketh not hold of life. The above is the Syriac translation of 1 John v. 12. To do this requires an act upon our part. It means that we must believe something definite. Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom. In connection with this he said, "Repent ye and believe the gospel," the gospel that he preached. After he arose from the grave he said, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." He also said to teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. If we do not believe these things and observe them how can we expect the promise of eternal life when Jesus comes? Some think they can engage in this "vain worship" and still observe the things commanded. The command is separate yourselves from these forms and have no part with them. "Ye are a peculiar people zealous of good works." It is not difficult to tell how far we must go in this matter. Your associations may be of a social character but not a religious one, for in so doing you again entangle yourselves with the world. These things must be in you and abound, therefore there can be no room for "vain worship." You ask, do not these sects believe in the Christ? I answer they do not. The gospel of the kingdom of God will give to Christ the "sure mercies of David." Do these people teach this? They teach that the church is the kingdom, and that Christ is now seated upon his throne, and that the throne of David will never be restored. The "sure mercies of David" are the holy and just things and he can only receive them in God's own good time. Now God is choosing out of the Gentiles a people for his name. Acts xv. 14. After which Christ will return and will build again the tabernacle (kingdom) of David, which is fallen down; and build again the ruins thereof, and set it up. Can any language be plainer, and yet they ignore it all by their tradition. One says, "I think you are rather hard on the other churches to say they have no truth. May be that is not the way you mean it." I wish to say that this is just what I mean, and it is not hard on the other churches, for it is the truth. Because a church teaches obedience to the moral precepts as taught by Christ is not accepting the truth. You may so adulterate pure food that it is not a food but a poison. Those who engage in their "vain worship" overlook their poison and accept it as pure. The only sure thing to do is, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth." 2 Tim. ii. 15. Also remembering, "If a man strive for the mastery, yet he is not crowned except he strive lawfully. 2 Tim. ii. 5. We are taught that Paul did not shun to declare the whole truth. Shall we do less? I have not dealt in harsh terms in speaking of those who do not teach the gospel of the kingdom of God I have simply spoken the truth in love. Many of these people are among my dearest friends socially but I can not partake of their worship, and I tell them so. Only the truth can make you free. If ye are made free by the Son ye are free indeed.

I submit the above truths hoping that they may be received in the spirit in which they have been written. Your brother in the "blessed hope."

Youth's Column.

In the Nest.

Gather them to your loving heart—
Cradle them on your breast;
They will soon enough leave your brooding care,
Soon enough mount youth's topmost stair—
Little ones in the nest.

Fret not that the children's hearts are gay,
That their restless feet will run;
There may come a time, in the by and by,
When you'll sit in your lonely room and sigh
For the sound of children's fun.

When you'll long for a repetition sweet
That sounded through each room,
Of "Mother, mother," the dear love-calls
That will echo long in silent halls,
And add to the stately gloom.

There may come a time when you'll long to hear
The eager boyish tread,
The tuneless whistle, the clear, shrill shout,
The busy bustle in and out,
And pattering overhead.

When the boys and girls are all grown up,
And scattered far and wide,
Or gone to the undiscovered shore,
Where youth and age come nevermore,
You will miss them from your side.

Then gather them close to your loving heart,
Cradle them on your breast;
They will soon enough leave your brooding care,
Soon enough mount youth's topmost stair,—
Little ones in the nest.

Words That Stain.

A small brush of camel's hair had been dipped into a fluid in which was some nitrate of silver, or "caustic," as it is sometimes called. The brush was wiped upon a white sheet. Pretty soon, there appeared a black stain upon a white surface. It did not look very dark, at first, but the action of the light seemed to deepen the color, until it was an ugly spot that could not be washed out nor bleached out in a whole summer's sunshine.

A bright lad heard a vile word and an impure story. He thought them over. They became fixed in his memory, and they left a stain which could not be washed out by all the waters of this great round earth.

Do not allow yourself to think of vile, "smutty" stories, or unclean words. There are persons who seem to take an evil delight in repeating such things. And those who willingly listen to them receive a stain upon their memory. To give ear to filthy talkers is to share their sin. Don't lend your ears to be filled and defiled with shameful words and vile stories.

In these days of evil speech and bad books, it is our duty to take care what we listen to and what we read. A bad story smirches and defiles the heart, pollutes the memory and inflames the fancy.

Shun these things as you would poisonous vipers. Draw back from hearing them as you would shrink from the "cancerous kisses" of the crocodiles seen in DeQuincy's opium dream. If, by chance, you have heard any obscene words or vile stories, drive them from your thoughts, as you would the black-winged bats from your face at night. Ask God to help you. Think of the true things she said, and study the pure and beautiful things he has made.

"About My Father's Business."

This is what Christ loved better than anything else in the world—his Father's business, the will of his Father in heaven, the work which God had given him to do. When he had grown to be a man he said that this was his meat and his drink. And you see he loved it now that he was only a child.

Can other children follow his example? Is there any way in which you can be about your Father's business? Has God given you work to do? And can you be useful in the world?

Jesus was about his Father's business in the temple: do you think he left off when he got down to Nazareth again? To be sure not; he was always about it one way or another.

Said a little girl to her mother, "Mother, I wish—but I am afraid you will think it silly."

"What is it you wish, my dear? If I know, I can tell you whether it is wise or not."

"Well, mother, I wish I was an angel in heaven."

"Why, what makes you say so, my child?"

"It was what my teacher said yesterday about the verse I learned, 'Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven,' and I thought it must be so pleasant to be always doing God's will, serving him, and never leaving off for ever."

The mother told her child that there were many ways in which God might be served every day on earth, and that little girls might do his will as truly as angels. She said that children could do it by being obedient to their parents, attentive to their lessons, diligent in work, and gentle and good humored in play, recollecting that God sees them always, and will give them his Holy Spirit to help them to do all they can to please him. Remember this, my dear boys and girls! You may be about your Father's business at home and at school, only keep in mind that it is God's will that you should be good, happy, and wise, and try to be so always; then all you do will be your Father's business.

Keep trying. Do not give up trying to be good after one mistake. Begin anew every morning, and see how much better you can do each day. A tree never grew to be a tree in a single night: first it was a seed, then a tender sprout, then a weak sapling, and at last a strong tree. So you will grow, if you keep trying to do right; from a fearful, helpless disciple of Jesus, you will go on till you become a brave and successful soldier in his cause. He who best knows Christ is the best Christian.—A. M. Fairbairn.

Selections.

The Strength of Truth.

Truth is stronger than battalions; a text in the Bible will outlast the pyramids of Pharaoh, and outshine the brightest of all the stars. As soon may Canute repel the advancing tides of the ocean, or Xerxes restrain the waves of the Hellespont by casting his chains over it, or the Roman Emperor Caligula prevail with the clouds by commanding them not to rain upon his royal head, as for scoffer, or any opposer to resist successfully the march of one single truth that has God for its author, Scripture for its matter, and the glorious issue that is here predicted for its ultimate and blessed result. Like the beat of time, like the procession of the stars, truth moves onward: its very enemies unintentionally help it; repression adds to its intensity, opposition only wakens up its advocates. Better an age of ardent, and it may intemperate discussion, than an age of death, and apathy, and unconcern. A living dog is better than a dead lion. It is the action of the waves that keeps the ocean fresh; it is the stirring of the pool that gives it all its healing; it is the discussion of great truths that eliminates great corruptions, and establishes and vindicates what God has inspired, and what men's hearts yearn for to make them wiser, and happier, and better.—Dr. Cumming's Great Preparation.

Spring.

Every spring God works countless wonders. Out of a little bud he brings a branch with leaves, and flowers and fruits. From a tiny seed he evolves a whole plant, with its system of roots and branches. And, more wonderful still, we see springing into life a new generation of insects and creeping things, and birds and beasts. "In wisdom thou hast made them all."

So numerous are the Scriptures respecting the earth, as the residence of the redeemed, that the apathy and the indifference which many manifest respecting it, not to say opposition, is really surprising. Have not such reason to pray that the rebuke to Israel may not be said to them?—"Yea, they despised the pleasant land, they believed not his Word; but murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the Lord." If angels desired to look down upon earth when Christ came to suffer, will they not do so when he shall come to reign? Many prophets and righteous men desired to see the days of the mere gospel dispensation; and shall any of the righteous have no longing anticipation respecting the most glorious of all dispensations, the regeneration? Shall the earnest expectation of the creature wait for it?—shall the spirit and bride invite to it? and shall there be Christians who have no earnest expectation, no groan or emotion, nor any desire respecting it? Shall the representatives of the redeemed, in the symbolic vision shown to John of Patmos, sing, "We shall reign on the earth," and that song of the restored earth awaken no response in the breast of those who hope to join in the song of the redeemed?

Old Folks' Songs.

It is the misfortune of singers at the present time that the older hymns and music have dropped out of use. People do not know them and do not sing them; and partly because they are left out of the books which are now in use. Consequently the old, solid, enduring, and expressive hymns of bygone years, are discarded and buried, to make room for new productions, some of which are good, some poor, some frivolous, but which have this merit: they are copyright, and help to sell new hymn books; and as these only last a few months, and are displaced by others, the old hymns are banished to make room for a fresh supply of new ones.

Mr. C. Ogburn, writing in the Harbinger, urges the young people to get the old people once in a while to sing songs in their meeting, saying,

"'I would go further to hear one of God's aged saints sing one of the songs of Zion than I would to listen to any prima-donna who ever graced—or oftener disgraced—the stage.' He urges that before the singing of a hymn, or between its verses, some one give an account of how the hymn came to be written, or relate some beautiful incident connected with it. Let the members be asked, before or during the meeting, to name their favorite hymn, and tell why they love it. Let some old song be selected, and ask the members to tell why it is ever new."

If we can have books with the old hymns in them, it will not take very long to learn them; and when once learned and sung with the spirit, the understanding, they will hold their ground in the hearts of the people; for "No man having drunk old wine straightway desireth new, for he saith, the old is better."—Christian.

Obituary.

Nancy W. Daw was born in Coffee Co., Kan., Sept. 17, 1858, and was married to G. W. Smith, March 14, 1879; to this union there were born six children, two boys and four girls, five of them surviving the death of their mother. Sister Smith came to Oregon with her husband in Feb., 1902, living in and near Corvallis until her death, May 24, 1906, aged 47 years, 8 months and 7 days. Sister Smith was baptized into the faith of conditional immortality in June, 1879, in which faith she died, hoping for the resurrection when Jesus comes. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at the family residence, after which she was laid to rest in the beautiful Crystal Lake cemetery.

Dear Restitution:

I am now located at Corvallis, Ore., a quiet town of about 2500 inhabitants, situated in the beautiful Willamette valley. I find here a little congregation of brethren owning their own house of worship. Brothers Prosser and Skeels have been preaching for them at times and Brother Skeels is here at the writing of this note. I will speak regularly for these brethren according to the present arrangement, meeting every Sunday. Any brethren traveling to the coast or looking for a mild climate and a beautiful place to live are cordially invited to visit us.

A. W. Darby.

Notice.

I expect to be in Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas this summer, and any wishing pastoral work in reach of my path, please notify me at Attica, Kan.

When we have practiced good actions awhile, they become easy; when they are easy, we begin to take pleasure in them; when they please us, we do them frequently; and then, by frequency of act, they grow into a habit.—Tillotson.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

Announcements.

The annual meeting of the North West Conference will convene at Fellda, Wash., on the evening of the 15th of June and hold over the following Sunday.

Teams will be at the Riverview hotel close by the Ferry landing at Vancouver, Wash. Those wishing conveyance out should write in time that the brethren will know how many teams to send out. Address P. G. Wood, Vancouver, Wash. R. F. D. No. 3.

Now brethren, all are invited to come and give their aid for a good meeting, both by their presence and a good word for the truth. Come, all speaking the same thing. Paul in writing to Titus says, Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine. If we all do this we will have a meeting long to be remembered.

Yours for the truth.

ALMIRA BROOKS, Sec'y.

The Third Quarterly Conference of the Church of God, of the Abrahamic Faith, will be held at the Antioch meeting house, five miles south of Plymouth, on the Michigan road, commencing on Friday, at 2 o'clock, P. M., June 8th, 1906, and continuing over the following Sunday. We urge that every church of our faith that possibly can, be represented by duly appointed delegates, as there will be some business to be considered at this meeting and we therefore desire a full attendance. A program will appear later. For over forty years our people have been holding what is called the "June Meeting." In this period many changes have been wrought, some of them sad ones. Nearly all the members of the local church who met here the first time for meeting, after the house was erected, have fallen under the power of death, and are awaiting in silence the trumpet call to the resurrection of life. Indeed there remains but the merest remnant of the pioneer church in Indiana. Nearly all are gone but still held in sacred memory by those of us who know them. Will you of the present generation of believers in the risen Lord be as zealous for the truth as they? Then lay aside the common cares of life, and attend another "June Meeting" on the spot rendered sacred by the faithful of other days. Who would miss the Antioch meeting? Able speakers will be present to proclaim the truth.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

THE Bible School that was to have been held in Plymouth just after the Antioch meeting will have to be postponed to a later date, as it has been impossible for the committee appointed to arrange the details to their satisfaction at this time, and will have to ask for further time to complete their work. This notice is given because many have asked concerning the school, and it is due to all interested to know in advance of the June conference that it is necessary to postpone the school to a later date. The project is not given up, but only delayed till the work can be arranged properly.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.

EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the Camp-grounds at Waterloo, Iowa, from Aug. 18th to 26th inclusive. Programme will be announced later.

O. J. ALLARD, Pres.

MRS. EVA B. STEARNS, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 16, to 19, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

P. NEILL, Pres.

Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up. Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil. Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but Rejoiceth in the truth. Beareth all things, believeth all things, endureth all things. "Charity never faileth." 1 Cor. xiii. 18. Charity is love manifested in kind acts toward one another and toward our neighbors, Matt. xxii. 39. Romans xiii. 8-10, and in loving our neighbor as our self, thus manifested love is the fulfilling of the law. And so we are admonished to "follow charity." 1 Cor. xiv. 1. How beautiful would be our world, what a desirable place to live, were its creatures thus dominated. But, alas! we see on every hand the first picture, that of perverted love; of selfish indulgence, and seeking every man after the things of his own, to the discomfort and sacrifice of others; but friends, there is hope of realization of the latter picture in the world to come; when love will be all the ruling passion, when "man will not look every one upon the things of his own, but upon his neighbor," when no one will say: "Know the Lord, for all will know him from the least to the greatest." That great day hastens on space. Let us be ready for it.—C. N. Eastman.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference:

I have moved to the state of Oregon, so all letters in the interest of the conference work will be sent to J. P. Bitner, Severance, Kansas.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if printed will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Send your pledges but no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

Syrine New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syrine New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

"The Baptism with the Holy Spirit" a 19-page booklet with cover, printed in large type on fine paper. This pamphlet is a reproduction of a series of articles which appeared several years ago. Price 5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen. Send orders to the author, A. H. Zilmer, at Plymouth, Indiana.

A four-page tract in the German language, by Brother M. Joblin of Cleveland, O. Subject, "What Must I do to be Saved?" After getting the opinion of one who understands this language, we have no hesitation in recommending it as simply all right. Get some for your German friends. Send to M. Joblin, 620 Woodland Ave., Cleveland, O. Price 40 cts per 100.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

The City of Our God.

Oh city of the jasper wall,
And of the pearly gate!
For thee, amid the storms of life,
Our weary spirits wait.
We long to walk the streets of gold
No mortal feet have trod;
We long to worship at the shrine,
The temple of our God.
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight!
Of every land the brightest, best,
When shall we there find peace and rest?

O city where they need no light
Of sun, or moon, or star;
Could we with eyes of faith but see
How bright thy mansions are.
How soon our doubts would die away
How strong our trust would grow,
Until our hearts should learn no more
On trifles here below.
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight!
Of every land the brightest, best,
When shall we there find peace and rest?

O city where the shining gates
Shut out all grief and sin,
Well may we yearn amid earth's strife
Thy holy peace to win.
Yet must we meekly bear the cross,
Nor seek to lay it down
Until our Father brings us home,
And gives the promised crown.
O home of bliss! O land of light!
Where falleth neither shade nor blight!
Of every land the brightest, best,
Soon shall we there find peace and rest!

The Bereans Column.

Dear Bereans:

We have been interested in your letters in our column and hope to see many more names. Let each society follow the decision of the society at Onro, Wis., and send one or two letters or articles each month to the committee in charge. We are glad to hear of the good work of that society, and it may be of interest to all, to learn how our work at other points has progressed since our annual meeting.

A report was given of the organization of a Berean society at Ripley, Ill., in November. They meet each week and have not missed a meeting since their organization. Their membership has increased to fifty, have good attendance and the best of interest, and all, young and old, have many good words to say of the benefit that is resulting through these meetings. The reports of the Chicago and Dixon societies are encouraging. At Adeline meetings were discontinued sometime prior to our last Conference. Following this, two of our faithful workers decided to start the work in their home, they invited others to meet with them, and have kept the meetings up, and feel much encouraged over the work at that point. In southern Illinois the meetings have been somewhat irregular, for reasons, but we hope for more regular work from now on. At every point we have some faithful ones who keep up their Bible study in their homes. To such we would urge to invite others to meet with them and their efforts may be rewarded as those at Adeline have been. A class was also formed at Fair Dealing, Missouri, last fall. We have admitted new members from Oklahoma, Missouri and our own State. This last winter the plan was put in practice of having isolated members, especially those recently baptized, those who seldom hear the truth preached, and those who have not yet become members of the household of faith, report the lessons in the Berean booklets and reply to Bible search questions sent them. This plan met with favor, and we have members reporting from various points, in this and other states. The reports show careful study and are proving helpful.

We have reasons to be encouraged and renew our efforts to do more active work for the cause of Christ. There are many around us who know not the way of righteousness. Are we doing all we can to help such? Are we improving every opportunity to sow the seeds of truth? Are we making our lives such that others may wish to follow "In his steps?" Some writer has said, "How great our silent influence! We are daily meeting our fellow beings and they are being affected for

GOD'S LOVE TO MAN.

Who can describe or explain God's love to man? We cannot begin to comprehend the utmost and greatness of his love and mercy toward us. To begin with we should have to go away back to the time when Adam and Eve were placed in the garden of Eden. You remember that when they sinned and ate of the forbidden fruit, God passed sentence of death upon them, driving them forth from the Garden of Eden, that they should henceforth earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. And fearing they might eat of the tree of life and live forever, which would make them a race of immortal sinners. God in his love guarded the tree of life by placing a cherubim with flaming sword around it. Then it was he gave them the promise that the seed of women should bruise the serpent's head. Thus showing his love for mankind by providing a way back to God, and not leaving them always in that helpless condition. Then after hundreds of years he fulfilled his promise by sending his Son to be the Savior of the world. How great must have been his love toward us when we consider how he sent his only begotten Son into this sinful world, with the promise that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have eternal life. As it is written in John iii. 16, For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." God sent not his Son to condemn the world, but that they through him might live. The more we study the Scriptures and learn about God's love, the more we understand that love which led him to send his Son into this sinful world, to be mistreated of men, tempted by the devil, and lastly to be crucified on the cross. Again it is written in the Scriptures that Jesus was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. God's great love is shown, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for our pardon and make us free from sin. Therefore, brothers and sisters, if God so loved us ought we not to love one another. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. How many times we are apt to forget to do unto others as we would have them to do unto us, and how often do we stumble and do that which is not pleasing in the sight of the Lord. But though we do stumble and fall we should rise again and press forward with renewed energy toward the mark of our high calling which is in Christ Jesus.

GEO. DAGGETT.

Dear Bereans:

It has been some time since my name appeared in the Berean column, but do not let this convey to your minds that my love is absent, for love is the ruling element. We see before the least of the passover when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of his this world unto the fathers, that he exhorted them to humility and charity commanding them to love one another. The Savior had great love for his disciples and wished them to be like him, for by this shall men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one to another.

Dear Bereans, let us strive hard to show the world that we are his followers, yet we may have the finger of scorn pointed to us, and our friends turn from us until we find we are almost alone in this world, but we should not get discouraged, for if we trust in him his love is with us, God is love, and he so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believed on him might not perish, but have everlasting life. Who is there that could wish for any treasure more dear than everlasting life? To obtain this we must have love. Our Savior must have great love for us to come back to this wicked place where he was persecuted and even crucified. Yet he never murmured but loved and prayed for his enemies. Yes, he made a sacrifice of his life for our sake that we through him might have life. Greater love has no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends. My friends, let love be without dissimulation, abhor that which is evil, cling to that which is good, be kindly affectionated one to another with brotherly love, [illegible] wotsoeh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. We must work earnestly for this love and press onward though the road may be gloomy, with many hills to climb, and the thorns by the wayside pierce our hearts so that we feel almost ready to turn aside, but what did Christ say to his disciples? "Continue ye in my love, let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearer. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evilspeaking be put away from you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another even as God for Christ's sake has forgiven you." Let us all press on in harmony, with our light shining, that others may see our good works. Let us walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forgiving one another in love. Love to all.

MYRTLE MITCHENER.

CHARITY.

Charity is love in its truest essence. It speaks the truth, but speaks it in love, not for the purpose of finding fault, but in order to restore and build up. It seeketh not how little it can do, but is full of good works. It seeth invisible things, and proveth all things. It shineth in dark places. Lies and wickedness are not able to stand before it, it establisheth righteousness where it listeth. Charity conquers the flesh and keepeth the commandments of God. "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." 1 Cor. xiii. 3.

KATHRYN TOWNSEND.

NEGLECTED OPPORTUNITIES.

An opportunity is a fit or seasonable time, an earnestness, a habit. Opportunities come to us in the natural order of events and because we do not have to go out of our way to seek them, we are the more likely to let them slip. A neglected opportunity has an unpleasant sound. It is a something that we have missed, a something that is gone, a something we have not done.

In the building of our Christian character, in the striving for a Christ-like nature, is it not a part of our training to become more and more alive to these opportunities that daily pass us? Let us review together a few of the common opportunities that we as Bereans ought to embrace and see if we can find those which are the most neglected.

"So then as we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men, especially toward those that are of the household of the faith." Gal. vi. 10.

Paul, after giving Timothy directions as to Christian conduct, concludes with, "Meditate on these things—that progress may be manifest to all." David says, "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly—but his delight is in the law of the Lord and in his law doth he meditate day and night." In many places we are told of the blessing of meditation. How few Christians take the time for quiet self analysis and thoughts on God's goodness and blessings. We are commanded to put off the old man and resist temptation. Yet how can we know how to guard the weak places if we have not examined ourselves first? How can we lay off the carnal mind and put on the spiritual mind if we have not come to know the ways of the Lord? We often hear, "I don't know anything about myself—I cannot bear to be alone." I think, dear Bereans, that one of the opportunities we very often neglect is that of meditation—a quiet, persistent searching of self and a daily thought on God's Word.

Be Courteous. There is no opportunity that comes to us so often as courtesy and is so often neglected. It is real y nothing but common politeness. Yet in so many ways we are not only impolite but we are positively rude. We do not like a person and we [illegible] pains to let that person's word, gesture or action. Have we any right to do this—leaving out the question of morality? 'Well, I can't hide my feelings and there is no use to try!" is a common phrase. A Christian must learn to restrain the expression of emotion if it makes him disagreeable. Otherwise we cannot live—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you."

Be kind. The opportunities to be kind are almost too numerous to mention, and we allow so many of them to pass. There is the pleasant word of greeting, the friendly smile, the word of praise for an earnest effort, the helping hand for some little thing; in short rejoice with those who rejoice and weep with those who weep. Cast out all jealousy and selfishness and then the opportunities for kindness will become as a fountain, springing out from the heart, refreshing those near and dear to us, the aged and the little child, and the stranger within the gates.

"Drop a word of cheer and kindness,
Just a flash and it is gone,
But there's half a hundred ripples,
Circling on, and on, and on,
Bearing hope and joy and comfort
On each splashing, dashing wave,
Till you would'nt believe the volume
Of the one kind word you gave.

"Drop a word [illegible] and kindness,
In a gulf
But [illegible] A [illegible] selling,
And there's [illegible] circling yet,
And you're rolled a wave of comfort
Whose sweet music can be heard
Over miles and miles of water
Just by dropping a kind word."

Give to others. To many this means but the parting of money. That is truly a blessed opportunity especially as money seems to be twined very closely around the heart strings, and it is will to loosen up anything that is shutting out the love of the Master. But the opportunity to give is not confined to money. We must give of ourselves with our money, in the interest we take in the cause. We have many chances to give of our time. Often some one wishes us either to do something or go somewhere that would be a real kindness, but we do not want to take the time. Many is the letter we can write to the aged, the wanderer, the sick and the lonely. This is the giving of self. Be not sparing of sympathy. Seize every opportunity to give in any way, for this is truly growing in grace and in the love of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

In Heb. x. 25, Paul gives us a strong exhortation, "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the custom of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day drawing nigh." After Peter's wonderful sermon and so many were added to the church, "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and in the breaking of bread and the prayers." We are not to neglect the assembling of ourselves together. The household of faith is to be one. Yet why do so many of the flock wander to a strange fold? Is it because they do not like some member of the church? May be some one does not like them. Is it because affairs are not run to suit them? If so, come and help better the conditions and let it work as a chastening, purifying and refining and giving patience with all. Is it to hear a fine sermon or flowery speaker? Where do you find finer sermons than those of Stephen, Peter and Paul; where a more powery speaker than the poetic Isaiah; where more rejoicing and uplifting of the heart than with the sweet singer of Israel? Is it to be among more young people and open the way for more social life? Let all the young people of like precious faith unite in one body and then if more social life is needed let it not draw you away from your own church. Is it that you think that you may do more good in some other church or Bible class? Dear Bereans, that can all be done in some other time, not in the time devoted to your own church and your own Bible class. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the custom of some is?" Why do we assemble? To worship God and build each other up in the most holy faith; to partake of the Lord's Supper as Christ gave command. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink the cup ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come." 1 Cor. xi. 26. Do we need a preacher; must we wait for an evangelist; must we have an eloquent speaker in order to assemble in worship to God, sing hymns of praise, read his holy Word and partake of the Lord's Supper? No, I thank God, we do not. This is not only an opportunity but a great privilege. The meeting with the brethren should be one of our greatest joys. Paul's letter to the Corinthians seems to sound a note of warning to those who neglect this opportunity. It is only those who are true to the end who receive the great reward. The last and greatest opportunity which many are neglecting is the call to salvation. It is without money and without price, free for the asking. Oh, neglect not so great and wonderful an offer! In this life a belief in God and his promises, obedience, the giving up of selfish desires and the struggle to overcome self—in the age to come life everlasting, sin and sorrow gone, the beautiful earth redeemed for the children of men and the ransomed of the Lord dwelling and working with the King of the whole earth, and joy and peace forever more.

The Glory Which Shall Be Revealed in Us.

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. And if children then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. Rom. viii. 16, 17, 18. What a comforting thought to know if we remain faithful that we shall be glorified with Christ. The Apostle said that it doth not yet appear what we shall be but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him. No wonder the Apostle said, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. What a glory will be in us when this vile body shall be fashioned like unto his glorious body. There can be no comparison between our sufferings here and our glory in the coming kingdom.

The Mount of Transfiguration gives us but a faint idea of what it means to be glorified together with the crucified one. He was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as light. Can we contemplate this scene? Faith in God opens up to us a wonderful scene. We can see the King in his beauty. Genesis opens up with the earth in its Edenic state. Revelations closes with Eden restored. What a beautiful picture. One that ought to engage the mind of the artist. The new heaven and the new earth. And God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things have passed away. He that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. He that overcometh shall inherit all things (mar. these things) and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. The glory in us embraces eternal life in the kingdom of God. Then shall this mortal have put on immortality. This corruptible shall have put on incorruption. We can then say that death is swallowed up in victory. And death where is thy sting? And grave where is thy victory or victim? What a glorious future this reveals to us. An immortalized body with which to serve God during the "ages to come." Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. What must be the glory of the coming age when God's glory can shine through the dust as it did in the face of Moses and Stephen. But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. 1 Pet. iv. 13.

Paul in Ephesians speaks of that glory when he says, that God hath raised us up together and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus. Jesus promised that the Apostles should occupy thrones in the restitution age. And that the heavens should retain Christ until the times of the restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. What have the prophets said of this age? Sacred history tells of a lost dominion and of the promise that that dominion shall again be restored. And thou O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion, the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem. The first dominion was given to the first Adam but he failed to obey God's law, and was driven out to eat of the fruits of the land by the sweat of his face. Because of his disobedience God cursed the earth. Unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee saying; Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat of the herb of the field. Gen. iii. 17, 18. We have the promise that this curse will be removed and the earth will again yield its increase. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off. We have an abundance of Scriptural proof that the earth as well as man will be redeemed. The first Adam brought the curse by his disobedience, the second Adam, Christ, will remove that curse through his obedience to the Father's commands. The time will come when every thing that belongs to this creation will have passed away, and the new creation will have taken its place. Paul says in Eph. ii. 10 we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God had before ordained (prepared) that we should walk in him. We are created anew through our obedience to the law of pardon. Christ is declared to be the head of this new creation. I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore. He is able to redeem those who have been obedient to his commands. Peter says, nevertheless we look for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. The restitution of all things which God hath promised through the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began embraces the resurrection of those who are Christ's, and the earth for their abiding place. In this new earth system nations will have learned to war no more but will beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Their implements will be to beautify the earth, and not to destroy their fellowman. "He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth. In his days shall the righteous flourish; and an abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. All kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him. He shall deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also and him that hath no helper. This will all be brought about by Christ and his saints in their resurrected state. This is the glory to be revealed in us. What a glorious thought we have in this, that we shall help in the redemption of the present sin cursed earth. The present governments will give way to the righteous reign of Jesus and his saints. His (Christ's) name shall be continued as long as the sun, and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed. (Mar. He shall be a son to continue his Father's name forever).

Your brother in the above hope.

D. C. ROBISON,

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

A Memorial Address.

Dear brothers and sisters and friends: Death, the arch enemy of our race, has again invaded our circle, and our hearts are wrung with anguish. Our dear Bro. Pate's seat is vacant. To most of us the announcement of his death came so suddenly that it could hardly be realized, at first; but it was too true, and we had to accept the unwelcome fact and set ourselves to learn afresh the lesson of mortality. The duty confronting me at this time is one of the most trying I have ever been called upon to perform. It must always be a great trial for a parent to lay away his eldest living natural son of whom he had expected great things. But I need not say to those in Christ who are walking worthy of their high calling, that the ties of nature do not begin to compare with those that unite the spiritual Father who has begotten a Son as Paul says he begat his children in the Lord by reason of this. For the same reason the dear deceased one was my son in the Lord. In a business enterprise more than 36 years ago we engaged a room together, in Cincinnati, and before retiring the first night, the first seed of the gospel of the kingdom was sown in his heart. His first surprise was, that I, whom he had been told was an infidel, should bring the Bible into service the first night we were together, but surprise after surprise awaited him, till at last, on seeing that God actually speaks to men in this book in the language of men, and means what he says, and says what he means, the Bible was like a new book dropped down from heaven to him, and like the Ethiopean he practically said, See, here is water, what doth hinder me from being baptized? And into the Ohio River we went, and he put on the sin-covering name of Jesus, by baptism into his death, and from that time forward we stood shoulder to shoulder in disseminating the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. We held services in Cincinnati, and Newport and Covington in Kentucky, and added a few to the Little Flock to whom Jesus says, it is the Father's good pleasure to including the mother of the dear deceased brother who is still living at No. 1 Gale Avenue, who passed her 88th birth day while her son and grand-daughter were on their way to England in search of health. When we closed up our business he went home to Cleveland, determined if possible to win those near to him to the glorious gospel of the kingdom which Jesus and his apostles preached—this, as always, was slow up-hill business, but I think I can name eleven of his converts up to date, and who knows how many these converts may add to the number and be additional crowns of rejoicing to him. If we could all show such a record of work done this house would have to be ten times larger to hold them. It can truly be said of him that he never turned aside from the truth as revealed in the Scriptures,—never tired of the covenants of promise by which we can by and by be made partakers of the divine nature.

In my weak condition I dare not trust myself to speak of many matters incident to our personal relations in the household of faith, and the fellowship of those cherishing the Blessed Hope of soon seeing Jesus. In all our business matters, I found him both honest and agreeable. He hated to think others were dishonest, although he often suffered by the proof that they were; he had, however, great fortitude under exasperating losses; and while many would have sunk under such trials as his for want of hope,—it was his misfortune to have too much hope, which led him to misplace his confidence,—except, of course, the hope springing out of the oath and promise of God. This was no misplacement; and is comforting to know that his hope in that respect had not weakened. Just before retiring to rest the last time; as evidenced by a delightful and refreshing season of praise and prayer—and I doubt if any of us can remember of his sitting down after an address at the table of the Lord without an earnest exhortation to love God and to love one another,—and to remind us that and that the love of God is perfected in those who keep his Word. He that loveth not his brother is not of God—he that loveth not his brother abideth in death—he that loveth God, loveth his brother also." These were the themes he constantly introduced and we should all emulate his example in this respect.

I see before me many who do not regularly attend here, they come out respect for him as they knew him, and out of regard for the traits of character calculated to make friends everywhere. They already cherish pleasant memories of their intercourse with him, and need no other information; so, I will very briefly call attention to the why or wherefore of these scenes of sorrow, pain and death. In Rom. v. 12 we are told that by one man sin entered into the world,—and death by sin. Death entered by sin, because death was the penalty threatened for sinning. Adam was under the sentence of death before he had any children—and being mortal himself, all his descendants are mortal. All are subject to the death; liable to die as their father did. There is no way to evade it. It is appointed unto all men once to die. They are not guilty of Adam's sin. They die because like begets like. But God has provided a Savior, who on certain conditions offers to redeem man from death, and bestow an everlasting life upon him. When God's promises and propositions were read out of the book of God to our dear brother, he saw how this love of God was manifested by them. He saw that a rescue from death to an endless, joyous, glorious life, was just what man needed, and resolved that he would waste no time in securing this amazing offer.

Doubtless you all know that the Redeemer referred to is Jesus. He identified himself for us when he said to the sister of Lazarus, "I am the resurrection and the life;" and when in John's gospel he promises to believers in God, and believers in himself that he will "raise them up at the last day;" and when, after his ascension to heaven, he speaks back to the beloved John on the Isle of Patmos, to say, "I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore, and have the keys of the grave and of death, to assure us that he has the power to do for the believer what he promised to do before the crucifixion—at the last day. In the intervals of business the dear brother and I had times together when by reading and meditation we had a mental realization of that grand consummation of our hope. And all this was intensified by the words of Jesus to his disciples, "Because I live, ye shall live also,"—which brought to mind the solemn announcement that "if Christ be not raised the brethren at Corinth and all others were yet in their sins and that those who had fallen asleep in Christ had all perished if Christ be not raised. And then, an awful interest would center in the words of Paul who was in an agony of effort to obtain a resurrection like Christ's—and sacrificed everything the world calls good and great in order to know the power of Christ's resurrection. And we saw too the beautiful harmony of these announcements of God's Son and his holy apostles that he was to be glorified in his saints and admired of all them that believe; something so different from what we had been taught to believe, and we would feel as if we had climbed almost to the top of Pisgah and were getting a grand view of the landscape of the kingdom of God; and when we read of the general assembly of the ransomed host of God who will have come up out of great tribulation and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; and heard by faith their song of victory,—and their ascription of praise and adoration in the new song, to their Lord and Life-giver, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book and open the seals thereof,—for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue, and people and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth; and worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches and wisdom and strength, and honor and glory and blessing,"—then our dear brother for the first time understood what Jesus was talking about as he uttered the words found in Matthew xxv. 31, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory....And say to all the saints who have been raised from the dead and gloried together with those found living and changed, "Come ye blessed of my Father

COMING HERE

INHERIT THE KINGDOM

prepared for you from the foundation of the world,"—yes; when he saw that Jesus will have come from heaven and seated himself upon the throne of the world as King of God's everlasting kingdom, when he invites the glorified from all nations to inherit this world-wide kingdom with him, and that this information put it in his power to obtain a share of that kingdom and glory, his joy was more than he could find words to express. And what after inquiry he discovered that it was obtainable without money and without price, but on the principle of faith and obedience, he was indeed happy in anticipation. But he knew he had been a great sinner and in no sense worthy of so exalted a destiny as that of ruling the world in righteousness and filling the earth with the glory of God. How was he to become associated with Christ? How could his sin and he eligible to a resurrection from the dead like Jesus? On being told that God published which being complied with, would admit him as an adopted son, with all the rights and immunities of the only begotten Son that God has, his astonishment was great. Of what does God's law of pardon consist? was the next query. It contains three clauses, namely, Faith in what God offers to bestow,—repentance toward God, and baptism for the remission of all past sin. This faith and repentance and obedience in baptism is reckoned to one for righteousness. This is God's way of counting men and women righteous. And it is absolutely useless to think about doing something else to secure God's favor, besides the conditions which the law of pardon exacts. And when our dear brother saw the richness of God's grace, and the vastness of his love in giving his only begotten Son to die on our account, and raised him again for our justification, I tell you that he lost no time in complying with the inexorable conditions exacted, and securing an interest in

A LAW OF PARDON

THAT GREAT SALVATION

It took right hold of his affectionate and sympathetic organism, and made a new man of him. And for some 15 years during which he operated his gratitude to God for giving him the key to unlock Jehovah's eternal purpose in creation and redemption, found vent in letters that demonstrated his appreciation. Do not think I am setting him before you as a perfect example for you to emulate, I am not, but there were traits in him that were of God,—and love is of God. But we have only ONE perfect example in all things; he who gave himself for us. I can add but little more; and that, beloved, shall be about what the God of love has revealed to us to sustain us under the trials of this mortal existence. This truly is a day of sadness. But we sorrow not as those who have no hope. The blessed God of all grace tells us of

A MORN WITHOUT A CLOUD;

—tells us that his dead men shall live; tells us that by the Spirit he will say to them awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; and by the apostle Paul we are told something of what they will sing. They will shout, "O death where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The sting of death is sin,—the pardon of sin before death extracts the sting, so that they can live again when the Lord of life and glory appears. It is no wonder they sing since the Lord's all conquering arm will have turned the key, unbarred the tomb, plucked the [illegible] from their prison house, and wings them all about with immortality, and will be preparing to bind the adversary, put down human authority, establish his own empire, restore disordered nature, sway the sceptre of peace and righteousness for ever and ever.

O WHAT A PROSPECT!

The whole family of redeemed met for the first time and sing unto him who has washed them in his own blood and made them kings and priests to God. And so, although weeping endure through the night,—joy cometh in the morning, and we can afford to cheer up, seeing we have the Word of the living God to assure us. And we should cherish the blessed hope more and more. We must keep the mark of the prize in full view, and the faith will bring it near to us, and make it real, and our hope will be as radiant as the bow of promise, glorious as the morning star—reaching away beyond the storms of time—grasping the splendors of eternity. Is it not comforting to know that the whole earth will be one vast temple filled with the glory of God, and echo with the hallelujahs of an assembly such as earth never saw, and such as heaven will stoop down to see? Welcome consummation! Oh, months and years speed your tardy flight and bring the blissful day. And it is according to his promise we look for these things; what prospects compare with ours? Behind us all is dark, around us all is gloomy,—but beyond the storms and tempests there will be sunny peacefulness and rest,—the glory to be revealed, the kingdom of the Most High, the joy unspeakable,—the life eternal, the rest that remains for the people.

These are some of the objects of the hope of the beloved brother now silent in death,—and of us also, they are so bright, so glad, so glowing, that like the prophets weary, O, that thou wouldst rend the heavens and come down,—and like the apostles we love the appearing [illegible] of the glorious assurance that we shall see him as he is, and be made like to his own glorious body, and appear with him in glory; the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he shall wipe all tears from off all faces, and there shall be no more pain, sorrow, sighing, parting or death, for to us the former things will have then passed away. In conclusion—seeing our dear deceased one based his faith and hope upon the explicit Word and promise of him who cannot lie,—we are not afraid to trust him in the embrace of death for a little while; for if he was faithful to the end he will soon hear of the Son of God and come forth just as Jesus describes it in John v. 28. Oh what blessed assurance these words impart as sorrow broods over our hearts, when our loved ones leave us, that if faithful ourselves we shall see them again in the goodly land. What but this could the apostolic words mean where he says: "I would not have you to be ignorant brethren concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not as those who have no hope [of seeing them again] for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again,—even so them also will God bring with him those who fell asleep. This proves that I am offering you the medicine prescribed by the Spirit for just such a case as yours, dear ones. I would not check the flow of your tears—they give vent to the anguish of stricken hearts; but those who have the same faith and hope as those who fell asleep in Jesus, should not, they do not sorrow hopelessly, because there is wrapped up in the closing words of this fourth chapter of 1 Thes. The Spirit has taken the pains to show us that those saints who are found alive when the Life-giver comes have no advantage at all over those who have fallen asleep,—indeed the advantage is shown to be on the other side, if at all. Why the dead in Christ are raised before those still living are changed, in a moment, the twinkle of the eye, and then altogether they rise to meet the Lord in the air. And the glorious Lord takes pains to show us that he will not even trust an arch-angel to superintend this great transaction—the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, but he employs an arch angel to arouse the sleepers. Not one will be left behind. Why it is the purchase of his blood he is gathering, and he knows exactly where to find them. If one were missed he would lose part of his glory for their salvation. But he says they will hear the voice and come forth—and they will. But I want to [illegible] here that all this amounts to nothing for those who do not have the faith and hope of those who sleep in Jesus. All such

A BRIGHT TOMORROW

SORROW WITHOUT HOPE.

What a fearful condition to be in,—especially if it has been their privilege to learn something of what God has stored up in Christ for those who believe and obey the glorious gospel of the kingdom of God with eternal life, and slighted the offer. I know of those in whom the dear deceased one was intensely interested; and not many weeks before he went away he was beginning to hope that some very near and dear to him were seriously weighing the matter of deciding for God and truth and righteousness, and laying hold of eternal life—are there any before me who have encouraged him thus to hope? If so, by all the love of God and of Christ, I implore you to decide before you lay his precious dust away; so that you may meet again in glory. While the glorious Son of God who brought life and immortality to light for us will be the center of attraction at the general assembly, there will be all the glorified patriarchs, prophets and apostles through whom God spake to us,—I have no doubt there will be some complete family reunions, and church reunions that no tongue could describe, nor pen depict? Oh, what meetings,—Oh what greetings—O what congratulations, O what glory everywhere,—when that their warfare is accomplished, and they for ever with their Lord. I would most affectionately plead that you taste and see yourselves that the Lord is good before it is too late. The gate to life stands wide open today,—yes, today; you do not know that it will be open tomorrow. Today is the time to secure God's great salvation. O yield at once lest the Master rise up and shut too the door. Amen.

From the report of the Michigan Conference, and from what we hear privately, we learn that their meeting was a big success. All were full of interest and enthusiasm in the work. The Indiana meeting held over last Sunday was largely attended and the preaching was good throughout. Many were disappointed that Sister Woodward was detained by having to attend a funeral, but when the reason was given all knew it was the best way to do, but hope to see her at some future gathering.

Just at this season of the year our receipts are usually light, but this year they seem unusually light. Will our friends please bear us in mind, and if you have not yet sent your renewal, do so now, and relieve us a little.

All interested will please take notice of the change in date of Ohio Conference. It is one week later than first announced.

Conference Report.

Pursuant to the call, the churches of God in Michigan, met for the 48th Annual Conference at Dutton, May 31st, June 1st, 2nd and 3rd, 1906. All the officers were present except one. Ministers present: Bro. A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Indiana; Bro. O. B. L. Crozier, Grand Rapids; B. W. and M. A. Woodward, Dutton, and Bro. G. Eldred Marsh, of Iowa. Bro. Marsh is evangelist of the Church of God in Iowa. Bro. Marsh had been attending meetings at Fonthill, Ontario, Canada, and at Niagara Falls, New York, and stopped on his way back to Iowa, and was with us over Sunday. By request he was to stay over on Monday and speak at the church. All were glad of the opportunity to make the acquaintance of Bro. Marsh, found him to be an efficient and active worker.

Visitors from Chicago, Ill., Mrs. Clara Chaffee, Miss Ruth Smith, Mrs. Martin Aslakson, Mrs. A. Browning, and Miss Bessie Browning. We were glad to have the sisters from Chicago with us, and hope they will come again. It was a pleasure to meet with the brethren from the following places: Grand Rapids, Mendon, Richland, Vicksburg, Kalamazoo, Byron Center, Coat's Grove, Watson, Molene, Athens, Caledna, Millbrook, Battle Creek, Raisin, Fisher, and other places.

Conference opened with singing, "Work for the Night is Coming." Prayer by Sister Woodward, words of welcome by Bro. Woodward. The welcome was so hearty, that all felt it was good to be there, followed by a good practical sermon from Bro. Zilmer. Lesson Mark xiii., subject, "Watchman, What of the Night?" Social and prayer meetings were conducted by Bro. Woodward, Bro. Marsh, Bro. Payne, and Sister Chaffee. The social meetings were a joy to all. The sermons were all good, especially the subjects, "The purpose of Christ's second coming," "But know that the Lord has set apart him that is Godly for himself," "Nature of Man," and "What will the end of the wicked be from a Bible standpoint?" The subjects were ably presented, the dear Savior was wonderfully exalted. We never before so fully realized the greatness and fulness of God's plan of redemption through Christ, how perfectly he meets every need, though to do this it takes him through sacrifice, suffering and death. Yes, for the joy that was set before him he endured the cross, despising the shame and is set down at the right hand of God, and there he does not forget us, but is ever ready to help the humble and contrite ones. It was a pleasure to listen to Bro. Zilmer's eloquent sermons. He is indeed a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth." At the invitation given on Sunday by Bro. Zilmer our hearts were made glad to see Sister Ruth Richardson come forward for baptism. The baptism was administered by Bro. Woodward, and we take pleasure in introducing our young sister to the household of faith, and our prayer is that she may ever be faithful to her vow, and have an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God.

At the business session the minutes of the Secretary were read and accepted. Treasurer's and Evangelist's reports read and accepted. Treasurer's report: Money received during the year, $181.81; paid to the Evangelists and other expenses $164.44; leaving amount on hand of $22.37. A. K. Richardson Treasurer.

Evangelist's report: Report of labor of B. W. and M. A. Woodward for Conference year ending June 1, 1906: whole number of sermons of M. A. Woodward 114, days' work for the Conference 49. Number of sermons for B. W. Woodward 89, days' work for the Conference 16; traveled by railroad, 10,480; baptized 18; funerals 9.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Pres. Lorenzo Decker, Millbrook, Mich.; 1 Vice Pres. H. C. Hammond; 2nd Vice Pres. Wm. Moses; Secretary Emma Jackman; Treasurer A. K. Richardson; Evangelists B. W. and M. A. Woodward.

Sister Harriet Boice of Champaign, Ill., presented before the Conference the outline of the desired Bible school work at Torch Lake, arrangements were made to hold this Bible school sometime in July or Aug. Notice of said gathering will be given through The Restitution.

The Sisters enjoyed their meeting. The Aid Society is doing a good work. The Treasurer reported funds on hand at time of meeting $95.67. At the Sisters' meeting a beautiful tribute was given to Sister Harriet Simonds, by Sister Woodward.

The brethren at Dutton spared no work or expense to have this meeting a success, and they succeeded admirably. It is not often that we have so large a gathering together of the dear ones. Some were necessarily detained at home in caring for the sick, and some are silently sleeping, waiting. Since our last Conference our beloved Bro. L. C. Chase and Sister Harriet Simonds have fallen asleep in Jesus. The Lord's Supper was administered by Bro. Woodward. The meeting was one of the best ever held at Dutton.

Our next Conference will be held at Millbrook, Michigan. The Church at that place extend a cordial and pressing invitation for those who can to come. "The Lord bless thee, and keep thee."

Emma Jackman, Sec.

Memorial.

We unite in sorrow with the family of the late Wm. Pate, Sr., of Cleveland, O. We deeply deplore the sudden and untimely death of our beloved brother. Of him it may well be said, "We may not look upon his like again." We believe we have been, by his death, deprived of a loving brother in Christ, and a friend indeed. His nature was that of continual sunshine. His exhortations to those of like precious faith, were ever, and always a kindly appeal to the best there is in men and women. He held closely to the simplicity of the gospel, and stood faithfully by the Church in Cleveland in all its trials and triumphs. We cherish his memory as an inspiration to untiring activity in business, an open avowal of the truth at all times, in all places, at home and abroad. The members of his family are living epistles to the fact that they were brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. We extend to them our sincere sympathy. The prayer of this church is that we may all be strengthened to continue in the faith of the gospel, so that we may meet our brother when the Lord again descends from heaven.

Poetry.

BELSHAZZAR.

The midnight hour was drawing on;
Hushed into rest lay Babylon.

All save the royal palace where
Was the din of revel and torches' flare,

There high within his royal hall
Belshazzar the king held festival.

His nobles round him in splendor shine,
And drain down goblets of sparkling wine.

The nobles shout and the goblets ring;
'Twas sweet to the heart of that still-necked king.

The cheeks of the king, they flushed with fire,
And still as he drank his conceit grew higher;

And, maddened with pride, his lips let fall
Wild words, that blaspheme the great Lord of All.

More vaunting he grew, and his blasphemous sneers
Were hailed by his lordly rout with cheers.

Proudly the king has a mandate passed;
Away his the slaves, and come back full fast.

[illegible] gold vessels they bring with [illegible]
[illegible] of [illegible]

With impious hand the king caught up,
Filled to the brim a sacred cup;

And down to the bottom he drained it dry,
And aloud with his mouth obscene did cry—

"Jehovah! I scoff at thy greatness now!
I am the king of Babylon."

The terrible words were ringing still,
When the king at his heart felt a secret chill.

The laughter ceased, the lords held their breath,
And all through the hall was still as death,

And see, see there! on the white wall see,
Come forth what seems a man's hand to be!

And it wrote and wrote in letters of flame
On the white wall—then vanished the way it came.

The king sat staring, he could not speak,
His knees knocked together, death-pale was his cheek.

With cold fear creeping his lords sat round;
They sat dumb-stricken with never a sound.

The magicians came, but not one of them all
Could interpret the writing upon the wall.

That self-same night—his soul God saint

The Second Coming of Christ.

"The duty of Christians in respect to the second advent" is the subject of the initial chapter of a book entitled "The Kingdom and the Restoration by a Student of Prophecy."

The author deplores the fact that the second coming of the Christ receives so little attention, in fact is almost entirely ignored by the preachers and teachers along religious lines in this day and age. Believing that the chapter will interest the readers of THE RESTITUTION, I transcribe it in full below.

J. T. SMITH.

The subject we propose for examination in this essay is the second coming of Christ, the translation of the church, the judgments that will come upon the wicked, the millennium, or the thousand years reign of Christ with his people, and the signs of its approach, together with some other questions of deep interest connected with it and growing out of it.

This is a subject to which very great prominence is given in Holy Scripture. Scarcely any doctrine is referred to more frequently or set forth more prominently than the second coming of Christ. The New Testament contains two hundred and sixty chapters, and it is said by D. T. Taylor, that in these chapters the Lord's coming is named three hundred and eighteen times. References to this great event, therefore, are more numerous than are the chapters of the Christian Scriptures. And these references are generally very clear and forcible. Not more clearly does the New Testament testify even of the death of Christ on the cross for the sins of the world than it testifies of his coming again; yet scarcely any doctrine is referred to less frequently, or set forth less prominently than this, in what are called orthodox books and sermons. In much of the teaching of the present day it occupies no part whatever. It is ignored. In some instances it is ridiculed.

Now is it right to pass by that in our preaching which the Holy Spirit has made so prominent in the Scriptures? Ought we to be afraid to look into prophecy lest we should discover truths which might conflict with preconceived notions? If we neglect the study of so large a portion of the Word, can we claim to be Bible Christians? If events of startling magnitude are foretold, shall we not be the better prepared to meet them by giving serious attention to them beforehand? And if we neglect their consideration, may they not find us unprepared? But how can we account for the apathy of so large a portion of the professing church in respect to the second Advent? And how are we to account for actual opposition on the part of some? If they love Jesus while he is absent, one would think his presence would be an object of ardent desire. They object not to go to him, but they seem not to want him to come to them. Yet it is when he comes again that he says he will receive us to himself. We fear that much of the opposition to the Lord's second coming arises from a secret consciousness of unpreparedness to meet him. Many who are true Christians, and love Jesus with all their heart, have sat under erroneous teaching on this subject all their life. From youth upwards they have seldom heard the visible and personal coming of Christ spoken of except to oppose it or ridicule it. Some of this class only need to have the truth set before them, to induce them to embrace it. Others may be kept through blinded in their judgment. Thus mere long prejudice, the result of false instruction, has hid the precious truth from their eyes. "There are truths," says one, "which some men despise because they have not examined them, and which they will not examine because they despise them." But we trust this will not be so with you.

This apathy, this want of interest in the second advent, is the result of unbelief, and this unbelief is the result of false teaching and early prejudices. A great part of the professing church are yet unbelieving, and their unbelief seems settled, and it leads them to speak very lightly of the event; but the Word of God will not fail because of their unbelief. However they may trifle and sneer, or deride, the Lord will come, and he will come soon, and judgments will accompany him. Woe unto them who are not prepared.

The unbelief of the churches in Christ's return has done great mischief. It has hindered her progress. It has enfeebled her endeavors. It has introduced corruption in her doctrines. And it has rendered her evidences less bright and clear. Those who neglect to give due prominence to the doctrine of the second advent, are almost sure to neglect in some measure, another doctrine intimately connected with it, the doctrine of the resurrection.

It is certainly the duty of Christians—ministers and hearers, authors and readers—to give increased and more prayerful attention to this doctrine, and to realise more fully the preciousness of the second advent of the Redeemer. It is not enough before our minds. It is not often enough upon our lips. As the great multitude of professors are so sceptical on this subject, and those who do believe that Christ's second coming will be a personal coming, are sometimes treated with contemptuous merriment, it would seem as if some believers in the doctrine were almost ashamed to give it due prominence. Old and long cherished opinions to us are nothing if they are not true. Let us have truth at whatever cost. We seek it and we seek it sincerely, diligently, and earnestly. And when we find it we prize it, and will suffer none to take it from us. If we had chosen to conform to a creed—if we had promised to preach the popular doctrines—if we had drifted with the multitude, we might now have occupied a much higher position in the church. But heaven helping us, we will never sacrifice conscience; we will never smother our convictions of truth; we will never be guilty of treason against the Master. If honor comes of the preaching of the truth, we will give God the glory; if reproach follows it, we will endure the Christ's sake. We would rather please than offend those who listen to us; but in order to please, we can neither deny the truth, nor preach half the truth. We are doubtless living in the last days of the gospel dispensation, and it behooves us to give faithful warning to the church and to the world of the speedy coming of Jesus.

Once More.

It seems to me that I have written enough about the "horn" of Dan. viii. but I must thank Bro. O. R. L. C. for the caution to be "careful," when speaking of the truth of what is written in the book we call the Bible. I would here say that I did not intend to question the truth of what the angel said, but have we a correct, infallible record of what he did say? Now Bro. O. R. L. C. you say, "Quite likely 2400 days is right." Now in this statement you admit something wrong, because it is written and comes to us as the words of the angel that the time is "2300 days." It is self-evident that both statements cannot be correct. And knowing nothing of the language in which the Scripture was written I have only the rendering of the translators—and knowing the different versions do not read alike I conclude that the angel gave one number,—the trouble is with the translators or interpolators. Now in conclusion I would like to have Bro. O. R. L. C. give through THE RESTITUTION the reason of his faith that Mahommedanism is the power symbolised by the little horn; and that it came "out of one" of the four divisions of Alexander's empire—took away the daily sacrifice and so forth.

Yours in the love of the truth.

GEO. FRANCIS.

1 COR. XV. 58.

Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the [illegible]

[illegible] brothers and sisters, this exhortation is for us this morning, Be ye steadfast, always abounding in the work of the Lord, stand fast in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the gospel, all believing the same doctrine, holding forth the Word of life. Stand fast, this was ever Paul's admonition to all of the followers of Christ. Let us take this admonition and stand fast in the truth, for all the glorious promises were made by him who said, I the Lord changeth not. What a comfort in this changing world to read and to know the Word of him who changeth not. Years may come and go, kingdoms rise and fall, nations perish and turn to dust, man's promises fail, and friends forsake. But the Word of the Lord is sure, ever faithful, loving and long-suffering, tender and almighty. We who know and trust him, have a never changing friend. Brothers and sisters, let us strive to be unchanging, not carried about by every wind of doctrine, but speaking the truth in love. Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in Psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. Let us not forget to assemble together to keep in memory the Lord's death till he comes, and God grant it may be soon, and that we be ready and watching.

ELLA KNOWLES.

Selections.

What is Peace?

Peace is holy tranquility, even in the aspect of lost years; peace is a silent Sabbath of the heart at every occurrence, peace is a holy boldness before God and man; peace is a healed conscience, although fully aware of our guilt; peace is a feeling of victory as opposed to the world, Satan, death and judgment. Peace is greater than all other treasures, but no philosophy can bestow it; for how can the latter cleanse from sin? Not any works, for how are they able to justify? Descend into whatever mine, shake whatever tree, knock at whatever door in the world thou wilt, the poor world cannot offer it thee. Peace is but one. One only can give it; know ye him who says, 'These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace? In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.' His name is the "Prince of Peace."—Dr Krummacher.

The Bible.

[illegible] its [illegible] all pure [illegible] ities. From it have sprung all sweet charities. It has been the motive power of regeneration and reformation to millions of men. It has comforted the humble, consoled the mourning, sustained the suffering, and given trust and triumph to the dying. The wise old man has fallen asleep with it folded to his breast. The simple cottager has used it for his pillow; and even the innocent child has breathed his last happy sigh with his fingers between its promise-freighted leaves.

Under Bible influence all the finer faculties are expanded, invigorated, and elevated; all the purest and best emotions of the heart are refined, exercised, and ennobled; all the highest, manliest, and most beautiful attributes and virtues of the character are moulded into symmetry, and assimilated to the likeness of Christ and of God.

"If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise"—shall be saved; otherwise you are lost.

Two grains of wheat are covered in the ground. One comes up strong and healthy, and is gathered and saved. The life germ of the other is injured, the increase is scanty and shrunken, and in threshing, it is blown into the chaff pile and burned, with the "tares." Reader are you a "tare" in the chaff pile? Christian, do not neglect to seek the nourishment of the Word, and the aid of the Spirit, so you may not be one of the light unfilled heads in the great harvest.—M. A. Dake in Our Hope.

Faith and Feeling.

"If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love." John xv. 10. Abiding in [illegible] love of Jesus does [illegible] to him. The love which [illegible] is; that we should surrender [illegible] ourselves to him; lay down our lives and wills at his feet, and—in his strength, which we appropriate to ourselves by a look of faith—keep his commandments. John xv. 19. He who does this abides in the love of Jesus, not in his own. He abides in the light and the life which beam forth from Jesus, and with which his grace and love surround us. This love of Jesus is an element of life, whose mighty workings we must not measure by what we feel and realize of it. The question is, to believe it; to advance, not engrossed with ourselves and our spiritual state, but fixing our eyes, on the one hand, on the work the Lord has given us to do, and on the other, on him who has the necessary strength for it, as it were, laid up in readiness for us, though very frequently we do not realize our possession of it beforehand.

Growth in Grace.

How beautiful is the light of the morning. Behold it hovering over the distant edge of the horizon, and shedding its cheerful beams upon the hills. It is a morning without clouds. Again the mists are fled; the clouds are passing over; and the sun is still advancing in his course. Thus he rises; now behind the cloud, now, in all the greatness of his strength, shining brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Such is the path of the just. In the present world, good men are very imperfect. The best of men have reason to complain bitterly of the body of sin and death; and the best of men too, have the most ardent desire that the body of sin and death may be crucified with Christ. The highest point of Christian experience is to press forward. It is a distinguishing trait in the character of every good man that he grows in grace.

Mental pleasures never cloy; unlike those of the body, they are increased by repetition, approved of by reflection, and strengthened by enjoyment.

We wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

Sententious Paragraphs.

There is nothing so strong or safe in an emergency of life as the simple truth.

Money was a wise contrivance to place fools somewhat on a level with men of sense.

Idleness is the dead sea which swallows all virtues—the self-made sepulchre of a living man.

To judge of the real importance of an individual one must think of the effect his death would produce.

A good heart is the sun and the moon—or rather, the sun; for it shines bright and never changes.

What a world of gossip would be prevented if it was only remembered that a person who tells you of the faults of others intends to tell others of your faults.

There is nothing which helps us so much to feel that our lives have been worth living, as the humble but grateful consciousness that we have helped some other soul to fulfill its destiny.

Let your religion be seen. Lamps do not talk, but they do shine. A light-house sounds no drum, it beats no gong; yet, far over the waters, its friendly light is seen by the mariner.

Hope is the ruddy morning ray of joy, recollection is its golden tinge; but the latter is wont to sink down amid the dews and dusky shades of twilight, and the bright blue day which the former promises breaks indeed, but in another world, and with another sun.—Richter.

When our reason is raised up by the spirit of Christ, it is turned quickly into experience; when our faith relies upon the principles of Christ, it is changed into vision, and so long as we know God only in the ways of men by contentious learning, by arguing and dispute, we see nothing but the shadow of him, and in that shadow we meet with many dark appearances, little certainty, and much conjecture; but when we know him in the spirit, and see him with the eyes of holiness and the instruction of gracious experiences, with a quiet spirit and the peace of enjoyment, then we shall hear what we never heard and see what our eyes never saw; then the mysteries of godliness shall be open unto us, and clear as the windows of the morning. —Jeremy Taylor.

They tell us in some trackless lands, when one friend passes through the pathless forests, he breaks a twig ever and anon as he goes, that those who come after may see the traces of his having been there, and may know that they are not out of the road. Oh, when we are journeying through the murky night and the dark woods of affliction and sorrow, it is something to find here and there a spray broken, or a leafy stem bent down with the tread of Christ's foot and the brush of his hand as he passed, and to remember that the path he trod he has hallowed, and that there lingering fragrances, "in all points tempted as we are," bearing grief for us, bearing grief with us, bearing grief like us.—Maclaren.

Give to Others.

It is not by selfishly hugging God's gifts to our own bosoms, but liberally scattering them abroad that we taste the fulness of their delicious sweetness. As saith the poet,—

"What mystic roses in the breast will blow,
If on the wind their leaves thou straightway strow."

These lines only give poetic expression to our Lord's words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive"—a truth no unrenewed man will insert in his creed; and even regenerate minds are slow to make it their rule of action. But whoever surrenders himself to it, soon finds by sweet experience that he never tasted the full enjoyment of God's gifts until he began to dispense them to others.—Zion's Herald.

Our Helping Fund

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trustworthy.

Obituary.

The long suspended sadness and gloom upon the church in Cleveland, Ohio, by the death of Brother Wm. Pate and the attendant circumstances, was deeply intensified by the death of Raymond Tomlinson, eleven and one half years old, the only son of our beloved and esteemed Brother and Sister, W. S. and M. Tomlinson. After nearly three weeks illness Raymond succumbed to the dread malady Spinal Meningetis, at midnight May 31, 1906. During his sickness he suffered much and was greatly prostrated, but had wonderful clearness of mind. At times, his condition would give much encouragement, then a sudden change would almost dispel hope. There was much to hope for on the day of his death, the end came swiftly, but calm and peaceful. His parents have the unfeigned sympathy of the Church, also of many relatives and friends. He was a boy of more than usual ability and promise. To a healthy boy's keen zest for this life, he added much interest in the things of life eternal; showing that his home was not only a place where the glad tidings of the kingdom is believed, but that he had been carefully instructed therein. During the first week of his sickness he often asked his mother to pray for him, saying, "If it is God's will I'll get well." He used to do little services for our late blind Sister Greenbrier. It was great satisfaction for him to think he was doing the Lord's work. When a baptism took place, he would say, "I wish that was me." He had an ardent desire that a favorite relative might be baptized before he died.

Apart from the respect accorded him on account of his parents, he had many expressions and tokens of esteem for his personal worth. The highest tribute that could be paid to a boy came from his teachers, both in public and Sunday school, in short, was loved by all that knew him. The floral offerings were many and rich. The funeral was largely attended. After a short address by the writer, he was laid away in Lake View Cemetery.

P. NEILL.

Mabel Kelley died May 26, 1906, of consumption, at her home in St. Joseph, Mo. aged 25 years. She was a good and exemplarly girl. Her mother, Nannie Kelley, was a sister of A. W. Darby, who has been our evangelist for seven years. A funeral discourse was given at the residence by the writer.

J. P. BITNER.

Died April the 23rd in the 21st year of age, Eulalia Andrews, wife of Benjamin Andrews, and daughter of Virgil A. and Emma J. Crafton. Her illness was of short duration. She leaves a father, mother, two sisters, a husband and two small children to mourn her loss. Her chair is vacant and she will be missed. Words of comfort were spoken from the 15th of 1 Cor. and among the hymns were sung "Asleep in Jesus." She was laid away to await the call of the Master. O these dark hours of bitter anguish, loving Savior, be thou our guide and counsellor, thou the fountain of truth and the source of all happiness, whose wisdom is incomprehensible, who dividath the sea by his power, and by his spirit garnished the heavens, whose riches are unsearchable and his ways past finding out. Help us to be worthy when we are called before the tribunal of God to show the praises of him with songs of victory upon our lips, saying, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us." Isa. xxix. Blessed hope, may our lamps be trimmed and burning, and may we stand among the redeemed of the Lord, who shall come with songs of everlasting joy upon their heads, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 35.

1. And these are the words of the book which Hieremias sent from Hierousaleem unto the elders of the removal and unto the priests and unto the false-prophets as a letter to the removal in Babuloon, and unto all the laity,

2. After Jechonias the king and the queen and the eunuchs, and every freeman and prisoner and artisan had gone out of Hierousaleem;

3. At the hand of Eleasau, son of Saphau and Gamarios son of Chelkioe, whom Sedekias king of Jouda sent unto Babuloon's king in Babuloon, saying,

4. In this wise hath the Lord God of Israeel said unto the removal which I removed from Hierousaleem;

5. Build houses and dwell in them and plant gardens and eat of the fruit thereof;

6. And take wives for your sons, and give your daughters unto husbands and multiply and become not diminished;

7. And seek for the peace of the land into which I have removed you, and offer votive-prayer unto the Lord for them, because in the peace thereof is your peace.

8. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, Let not the false-prophets with your persuade you, and let not your diviners persuade you, and hearken not to your dreams which ye are dreaming;

9. Because they are prophesying wrong things for you in my name and I did not send them.

10. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, When seventy years are about to be fulfilled for Babuloon I will visit you and establish my words to you to turn back my laity into this place;

11. And I am reasoning for you a reasoning of peace and not calamities to give these things unto you.

12. And offer votive-prayer unto me and I will hearken unto you;

13. And may ye have sought me out and ye will find me; because ye will seek me with all your heart,

14. And I shall manifest myself unto you;

15. Because ye have said, the Lord hath established prophets for us in Babuloon.

There is no text for the 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20 verses.

21. In this wise hath the Lord said in respect to Achiab and Sedekias, Lo, I am giving them into the hands of Babuloon's king, and he will smite them before your eyes.

22. And they will take from them a curse in all the removal of Jouda in Babuloon, saying, May the Lord have done unto thee as he did unto Sedekias and as he did unto Achiab, whom the king of Babuloon roasted with fire on a gridiron,

23. Because of the transgression which they had done in Israeel, and because they had committed adultery with the wives of their fellow-citizens, and oracularly delivered a word in my name, which I did not direct them to do, and I am a witness saith the Lord.

24. And unto Samarias the Allamite thou shalt say,

24. I did not send thee in my name, And unto Sophonias, son of Maasaias the priest, say,

26. The Lord gave thee to be a priest in the place of Joodae the priest, to become an overseer in the house of the Lord for every man prophesying and for every man divining, and thou shalt give him into the prison and into the Katarsktes (lower dungeon).

27. And now why have ye joined in scoffing at Hieremias the one from Anatheth the one who did prophesy unto you?

28. Did he not send him for this namely? At the end of this month did he not send him unto you in Babuloon, saying, It is far off; build ye houses and dwell in them and plant gardens and eat the fruit of them?

29. And Sophonias read the book in the ears of Hieremias.

30. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Hieremias, saying,

31. Send unto the removal saying, In this wise hath the Lord said in respect to Samaias the Allamite; since Samaias hath prophesied unto you and I did not send him, and he hath caused you to put faith in wrong things;

32. Therefore in this wise hath the Lord said, Lo, I shall visit upon Samaias and upon his generation, and there will not be a man of them in your midst to see the good things that I shall cause for you; they will not see them.

COMMENT.

For what purports to be this chapter in the O. V. & R. V. see chapter 29th with five additional verses inserted from some other source than the best text. Compare the names also. Can any reader tell why "the eunuchs" are named next in order after the king and queen, evidently the order of rank being thus given? Why should "the eunuchs" rank higher than "the freemen" or "artisans" for instance? I will give you my opinion and I think I am correct in this matter. In these days in the east all the heads of departments governmental in an absolute monarchy were held by eunuchs. See "Potiphar" (or Petephees) in the days of Pharaoh and Joseph in Egypt. This was one of the results of polygamy and the harem. See the punishment visited upon "Samulas the Allamite" for faithlessness and false prophecy.

Announcement.

The annual meeting of the North West Conference will convene at Falida, Wash., on the evening of the 15th of June and hold over the following Sunday.

Teams will be at the Riverview hotel close by the Perry landing at Vancouver, Wash. Those wishing conveyance out should write in time that the brethren will know how many teams to send out. Address P. G. Woolf, Vancouver, Wash. R. F. D. No. 3.

Now brethren, all are invited to come and give their aid for a good meeting, both by their presence and a good word for the truth. Come, all speaking the same thing. Paul in writing to Titus says, Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine. If we all do this we will have a meeting long to be remembered.

Yours for the truth.

ALMIRA BROOKS, Sec'y.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

MRS. EVA L. STEARNS, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

P. NEILL, Pres.

J. C. THOMPSON, Sec'y.

The Central Washington Conference will meet at Waterville, Washington, June 29, 30 and July 1, 1906. All brothers and sisters who are interested in carrying on the Master's work are earnestly desired at these Conference meetings. The Master, at his departure, gave us the command, "Occupy until I come." In what manner are we doing his work? He is soon coming to take an account of our stewardship will he say, "Well done, good and faithful servant enter into the kingdom." Dear brothers and sisters, may we make these lessons living realities and show to those around us that we are surely endeavoring to keep his commandments.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and for the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. of Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana" Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The discussion is "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Lamsa's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 20, 1906. NUMBER 23.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

The World Beyond.

What holds this sinful world for me!
Not anything scarce worth a thought;
The dearest hopes and plans of life,
Have faded into naught,
And the fleeting joys that I have known,
Have been but dearly bought.

But the world beyond! Ah yes,
'Tis there my plans are laid;
Home, clear through all the ninth or years
That I've still to wade,
Into the eternal sunlight of God's smile,
Will touch gloom and shade.

Oh! haste ye coming years of time
That lie between me and the day;
That this long night of gloom and sin
May vanish like the ocean's spray;
And every tear be wiped away.

O Israel, glorious promises of God!
So deep, immutable and strong.
Toward that bright world we're marching on.
And though the intervening years be long,
We'll sing at last the ransomed song.

Man is Mortal.

This question has been discussed since time immemorial. One party claiming that man is a dual being made up of body and soul. Also claiming that the soul is immortal and not subject to death. The other party denying the immortality of the soul and claiming that man is a unit being, made of the dust of the ground into which God breathed the breath of life when man became a living soul or person. In Gen. ii. 7 "a living soul" [illegible] from the term nephesh [illegible] Num. vi. nephesh meth [illegible]." Nephesh be- [illegible] soul. It is [illegible] rendered [illegible] living [illegible] is [illegible] is life [illegible] the Spirit of [illegible] he gospel) hath [illegible] the law of sin and [illegible] doctrine of the immortal- [illegible] soul is in direct opposition [illegible] these Scriptures. If we claim [illegible] through our connection with the first Adam we cannot expect it through Christ who is the second Adam. If we work for sin we get the wages which is death. If for righteousness it will be a gift which is eternal life. Jesus says, This is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent. If we become the recipient of this grand gift it must be through the knowledge of the plan that our heavenly Father hath wrought out through his Son, the Christ, whom Peter declared to be the Christ, the Son of the living God. The gospel is declared to be the power of God unto salvation to every one who believeth. This gospel is the one that Jesus preached, viz: the gospel of the kingdom of God. This gospel declares that Jesus will in God's own good time sit on David's throne and with the saints rule the earth. A faith in this gospel is the begetting power unto eternal life.

[illegible] and testi- [illegible] according to [illegible] there is no light in you." [illegible] Gen. ii. 7 we read that the Lord God formed or molded man of dust of the ground and man became a living soul. The text rendering is of "the dust of the ground" the marginal rendering is dust of the ground. The translators supplying the preposition of. What ever man is he was moulded "dust of the ground." God gave this dust man a law which gave him the privilege of eating of the tree of the garden so long as he did not partake of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The day thou eatest thereof dying thou shalt die. (marg.) Dying thou shalt die, express a progressive act. This is a very strong proof of man's mortality. These trees were placed in the garden that man might continue his life. The phrase, "eating thou shalt eat" teaches plainly that Adam needed this fruit to produce life. In other words he ate to live. Further God placed the tree of life in the garden that man might eat of it and live. Note the difference between "eating thou shalt eat" and "man might eat of it and live." One is a progressive act, the other a complete one. If Adam would have been obedient he could have eaten of the tree of life and lived forever. And the Lord God, said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil, and now, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever. Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. Does not this prove that the power to live forever was in the tree of life and not inherently in the man? The trees perpetuated life. The tree of life caused him to live forever. Of this he never partook, therefore God could say, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

The above is a Scriptural definition of death. Mortal man dies and returns again to dust. The Psalmist agrees with this when he says, His (man's) breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish. Is not this proof conclusive? David was sadly mistaken if our thoughts continue after the breath goeth forth. Solomon said, "That the living know they must die, but the dead know not anything." "There is no knowledge in the grave whither thou goest." Job says there is hope of a tree again if it be cut down, through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant. But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he. As the waters fail from the sea and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awaken nor be raised out of their sleep. His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low but he perceiveth it not of them. It should be remembered that Job is here speaking of man born of woman. Man begotten not of corruptible seed but of incorruptible, by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever, and has a growth according to the Word of God, has the promise of being born from above or of God. We should be able to distinguish between the old and the new creation. The one in the first Adam and the other in the second Adam. The first is a generation from the "dust man" the other is a regeneration from the life giving spirit. Jesus received the power from the Father to give life to all those who took upon themselves his name through the law of pardon. The first Adam is of the earth earthy, the second a vivifying spirit. The one can only impart mortality at birth, the Paul, the apostle says I Pet. [illegible] 21 "That the figure (where in eight souls were saved,) doth now save us." Reflectively it is true; for Noah was figuratively buried—dead to the world—resting through faith in a figurative grave. "Saved by water." And when the waters had abated from off the earth, God said to Noah, "Go forth of the Ark, and every living thing with thee." Gen. viii. 16, 17. And Noah went forth into a new life, a new order of things. Now how shall we who are dead to sin live any longer therein? writes Paul in Rom. vi. 2-5.

His answer is, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even we also should walk in newness of life." (Like the type new order of things.) "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." A going forth from a figurative grave as did Noah from the ark. The one saved by water, the other by the washing of water in the water. And verily if not raised upon of the water would mean death. Even so them then "that have been baptized into Christ have put him on." Gal. iii. 27. Yes, put him on—the God provided Ark of safety. Why? Hear Paul in John v. 11, "And this is the testimony that God hath given to us aionian life, and this life is in his Son. (Diaglott).

Jesus gave up his beautiful life, and his life's blood which is the life of the flesh—and by the shedding of his blood became our Passover. The blessed Jesus truly overcame all things in his beautiful walk in life, and if this was the sacrifice only as some contend and not his death, there is then no remission for sin. "For without the shedding of blood is no remission." Heb. ix. 22. See also Lev. xxii. 11. Therefore baptism is for remission of past sins. A being converted in the act of so doing, and an adoption thereby into the family of God as sons and daughters. And the Psalmist assures that, "Blessed is he whose transgressions are forgiven, and whose sin is covered." Psa. xxxii. 1, and lxxxv. 2. Why? and how? Hear Paul again, For you died, (figuratively) and your "Life" has been hidden with the Anointed One by God. Col. iii. 3. Diaglott. Just as Noah's natural life was at that time in the keeping of God.

Going back for further testimony to the beautiful garden of Eden, after the temptation and fall there, of the improvised covering, and the confession of disobedience—what great love was manifested by Deity in covering sin figuratively with coats of skins—which foreshadowed in type the Lamb of God which was for to come. Yes, to come. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to become the propitiation for the sin of the world."

Pause a moment in silent adoration, and listen to John, the forerunner, as he exclaims, "Behold the Lamb of God, that takes away the sin of the world."

Now to be in Christ, in the ark of safety, is to know what Jesus is to us. What his name implies. "As it is the only name given under heaven whereby we must be saved." To be in him, the Life-giver, we must "obey from the heart that form of doctrine, once for all delivered to the saints." And, "when the Anointed one, our life shall be manifested, then you also will be manifested with him in glory." Col. iii. 4. Diaglott. He will know them that are his, having this "seal"—"shut in" by baptism into Jesus—who is the Anti-type of the Ark builded by Noah, in the goodness of God

It is our purpose to follow this article with two more. Biogeneuds or Spontaneous Generation which, and Psuche or Zeo Life.

"And the Lord Shut Him In."

Much has been said and written upon the subject of baptism; but as it is a saving ordinance too much cannot be said concerning it. And as there is always something good found in the grand old book, the following may perchance be an aid to some who are wavering as to the validity of their baptism, well as to those yet seeking to know the truth.

Going back to the days of Noah when God caused a flood of waters to cover the earth because of unbelief—God first made a covenant with Noah to build an ark; where in himself, his wife, his sons and their wives, together with clean and unclean beasts, fowls of the air, and all creeping things should enter there in and be saved. One hundred and twenty years Noah labored at his task, preaching and admonishing the people of their impending danger. But upon the ark being completed only Noah and his family entered the ark of safety.

When the task was accomplished assigned to Noah and all were within, "The Lord shut him in." Gen. vii. 1-16. "Adon" might here be defined Lord, Sovereign Ruler, or Elo-ah—a mighty One, a member of "the heavenly host." Dr. Thomas.

for the saving of the few, who will in the age to come as the multitudinous Christ, save the many.

Beautiful is the figure and ordinance of baptism, and as it is beautiful, so is it essential to salvation. Believe the God given testimony, ye who waver, and obey the imperative command from the heart, and God the sovereign Ruler, will "shut you in," to go forth, to Aionian life, when he [illegible] appointed by the Father to [illegible] shall come.

MATILDA WOODBERY.

To the Church of God.

Time waits for no man. Are we improving the opportunities to labor for the Master, or are we looking back over the passing days and seeing nothing to our credit but lost opportunities?

The thought that we are alone and isolated from one another as many are, has been the greatest obstacle in the way of a united effort for better work.

The early Christians were scattered by persecution, for the very purpose of accomplishing the work the Master had for them to do. The difference between them and us, is, they lived up to their opportunities, because they realized that personal responsibility rested upon them. "They went everywhere preaching the Word." We go everywhere but neglect the preaching of the Word as we go. The great commission given by Christ was to be world-wide and age-lasting. It is the greatest commission intrusted to mortals. It is the most important message ever expressed in words or heard by men.

What is our relation to this great commission. The commission deals with the gospel. Jesus is he who commands it to be carried; the disciples, the ones commanded to carry it; and the world embraced those to whom it was to be carried.

The supreme mission of the church is to preach the gospel and to teach those things "whatsoever commanded." The requirements and responsibilities placed upon each member of the body of Christ is and must be one demanding great activity. Only as the banners move forward does the army remain in discipline. It can know nothing of barracks or winter quarters, for its purpose is to move on, always on.

From this it follows that whenever the church forgets its duties, plants the banner and settles down, it becomes disorganized, it is found to be ineffectual for the camp, as it was unequal for the march.

O Church of the living God, why standest thou so idle, while millions are perishing for the bread of life? Arise, put on the Christian's armor, gird well for the work, the battle is on. Under the leadership of your Captain, "The Captain of our salvation" go forward.

There has been not absolute indifference, yet a limitation of view, a littleness of sympathy, a criminal apathy in the church.

Do not discourage a work because it is not just in your line. The good that may be accomplished may be even more far-reaching than that to which you may confine yourself. Let us exhibit the true spirit toward all Christian work. "They helped every one his neighbor; and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage. So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smooth eth with the hammer him that smote with the anvil, saying, It is ready for the sodering, and he fastened it with nails, that it should not be moved." Isa. xli. 6, 7.

The work that needs our attention most is that which concerns our young people, "Bible School Work." It needs to be impressed more and more upon us that Bible Schools are the nursery of the church. The more we do to stimulate an active work in this direction, the nearer we come to solving the problems of our church. The young people should be given encouragement to work, and if they are instructed how to teach, then they can instruct others. A united effort should be made by the Church of God for the purpose of interesting and giving Instruction to young people in Bible Study. We need to meet to advise and consult together for the purpose of extending and stimulating Bible School work.

I have endeavored to find out the peculiar needs of those who are isolated, and am in a measure prepared to give some suggestions.

In special work the Summer Bible School offers a field, which is worthy of our consideration.

A letter received from one of our young members, a teacher in a city school, reads as follows:—"I feel so discouraged sometimes. One can't neglect the social side of their nature altogether or should'nt, at least. We need help and encouragement in some way, and if we cant meet with or hear from our people we will have to look to other churches for it. It seems to me that the Bible School is just what is needed. We surely need to have the young people at college taken care of because there is a great danger of their drifting away altogether unless they do have something to help and encourage them."

This same teacher feels her inability to teach the Bible truths to others as she would like to do and is now trying to do. The same work she is doing might be done by every young person, if they were organized for it, and were given such aid as is needed in Bible School work.

I believe the young people should be given encouragement to work and something to work for and a plan to work by. They should be instructed how to teach that they may be able to instruct others.

The Summer Bible School offers a field for work which will benefit a large number of persons.

This School should be located where recreation may be had for both body and mind. The region of beautiful lakes and cool shaded streams offers us both rest and a field for labor. Here the over-worked world of city clerks, teachers, and students turn their eyes with longing for a sight of the beautiful in nature, and for a smell of the woods. The splash of the waves and the gentle balmy air of the Northland is a lesson of the goodness of God. Nature teaches us of the Fatherhood of God and of his love for man. The beautiful lessons taught, from the Mount, and beside the beautiful sea of Galilee, where Jesus taught the multitudes, and fed them with loaves and with fishes, is a lesson that has been painted with pen and brush, but nothing can bring to the mind so vividly and with such depth of meaning, as that which is taught by nature itself. "Galilee, blue Galilee, where Jesus loved so much to be" has been sung by thousands. Let us then come close to nature, learn to love the beautiful and we shall be able to understand the lessons Jesus taught.

The following list of names of those favoring organization for Bible School work and who are willing to devote a portion of their means to this work, has been received through correspondence and otherwise:—

B. W. and M. A. Woodward, Dutton, Mich.

Mrs. M. P. A. Crozier, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Mrs. Tanner, Amy Chase, Adrian, Mich.

L. D. Decker, Blanchard, Mich.

J. F. Richardson and wife, Jamestown, Mich.

Joseph Gardner and wife, Elizabeth Coffin, Champaign, Ill.

Mrs. Clara Chaffee, Mrs. M. Aelaksen, Mrs. Annie Browning, Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. A. M. Siple, Hammond, La.

Mrs. Harris, DuQuoin, Ill.

Mrs. G. W. Coats, Mrs. Alice Chase, Mrs. Ethel Hall, Coats Grove, Mich.

Miss Iva Hill, Millbrook, Mich.

Miss Esther Richardson, Kalkaska, Mich.

Many other names favoring organization have been received from different ones, but I have not been able to reply and make known the best plan to follow, so will not publish a complete list of names. Much time has been devoted to finding out the peculiar conditions and unfavorable circumstances under which we labor, and no definite plan of statement could be suggested until conditions were better understood.

It is deemed advisable that something be done the present season to start the movement in the interest of the young people.

If those who have signified their willingness to co-operate with us will act promptly we shall be able to accomplish a little, and be able to plan for the coming season of 1907.

A suitable piece of property has been offered upon which to locate a Summer Bible School, at Torch Lake, Mich. Tourist's rates can be secured from all parts to points in the resort region, which makes it more favorable than other locations for this work. The Lord willing, a Bible School will convene at Torch Lake Tent Place, Torch Lake, Mich. Aug. 1st to 15th. The school will be conducted by B. W. and M. A. Woodward, Esther Richardson, Harriett E. Boice and others who may be secured to assist in the work.

Sister Esther is a Kindergarten teacher and will suggest to us the adaptation of Public School Methods to Bible School teaching.

Sister Crozier will assist in securing books, tracts, etc., for a library in connection with the school, and it is hoped our brethren will co-operate with her and send to her address, 208 Crescent Ave. Grand Rapids, Mich. all such books, tracts, etc., as are suitable for this work. Whatever is sent must be prepaid so that no expense will be incurred in this work. We need charts, maps, camping outfits and money to secure such helps as is needed in this work. We need singing books, who will be the first to devote their talent and means to this work? Sister Siple of Hammond, La. contributes $10.00. She was the first to respond to the call and is mentioned as such. All money sent for this work will be received by Sister M. A. Woodward, Dutton, Mich., and Harriett E. Boice, 1009 South Wright St. Champaign, Ill. All charts and maps forwarded must be prepaid and sent to my address. If any have copies of the New Jubilee Harp it is desired to use these books.

All who will go as delegates from the different states please communicate with me by the 1st of July.

If there are those who have tents to contribute or other things, such as are necessary in a camp outfit, please act promptly and let me know.

As many as can, go with the purpose of making the work a success, and bearing the burden of labor.

The forenoon session will be devoted to Topical Study of the Bible. The afternoon to Outline Study of the Life of Christ. We wish to develop the ability of our young people that they may become leaders in Bible School work and this session will be given over to the young people. The evening session will be evangelistic work and it is hoped to secure one of our leading evangelists to assist in this work.

Whoever will contribute to this fund must be prompt and send to Sister Woodward so that she may secure the assistance of a worker in this field.

The Y. M. C. A. State Camp of Michigan is located near this place, Torch Lake, and will be in camp at the same date, Aug. 1st to 15th.

It is with faith that the Lord will prosper his work in our hands if we are faithful to him, that we work in confidence, trusting him fully. We are laborers together with God. He can find a place for every worker, but those who refuse to labor or assist those that are willing to do the Master's work, have only the place of an unprofitable servant. The talent must be used and not buried. God has designed that each gift of grace used has a law of increase. These gifts must be retained and used. "Grow in grace" is said to Christians. God is the bestower, man the receiver of grace and its receipt qualifies and insures responsibility. The Master has said, "Go work today in my vineyard." Labor, not rest is the upbuilding element, and victory lies in our submission and confidence in God.

"THE constituents of the world are:
The lust of the flesh,
The lust of the eyes,
The pride of life." 1 John ii. 16.

A REQUEST comes from a brother, asking that some one tell where in the Bible it tells about secret orders. He says that members of some orders claim they are taken from the Bible, and that they claim also that Christ was a Mason. Inasmuch as no mention is made in the Bible of the modern secret orders, and not a word about Masonry, and as the claims of these orders, that they have a Bible origin, is without any foundation whatever, we need not be worried about them. Just ask them for the proof of their statement. Ask them to give book, chapter and verse where it says Jesus Christ was a member of the Masonic Lodge, and when they can substantiate their claim, we can take notice of their boasts in this direction.

Model Republicans

And liberals in all parts of the world, have conceited that religion has nothing to do with politics. This is a great mistake. Politics have to do with the affairs of nations and states in their regulation and government.

The religion of the Bible exhibits the only true science of government, and is the grandest system of politics ever made known to man. If politicians only understood it, and had the honesty and good sense to adopt its principles, it would prevent them, and the actors on the pulpit stage from bewildering the public mind with the vapid outpourings of their ignorance.

Halleln Yah.

"The coming of Christ draws near; a people is in preparation in faith, zeal and service, to whom, when their development has reached a certain point, he will be revealed with thousands whom he shall bring from the dead by his power, and by means of whose recruited forces he will enter into conflict with the world, drive Gentile power from every throne, and establish his kingdom under the whole heaven. The believers' operation will then be transferred from the arena of debate and persuasion to that of military coersion. The power of Christ and his brethren will be established triumphantly in every kingdom, country, and city in the earth." At the Lord's Table.

Dear brothers and sisters:

Our meeting together this morning with the object we have in view, that of partaking of these emblems in remembrance of our Lord's death is well pleasing in God's sight and in the sight of his Son. We are obeying the commandment, "Do this in remembrance of me." This commandment we have received, and we are required to obey it until he comes. We are not to neglect to obey this commandment as long as he tarries. We can come to this table pure and holy without spot or blemish if we have confessed our sins to God and have determined to forsake them. He is faithful (able) and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. We should not bring the past with all its sins of omission and commission, our weaknesses and short comings of last month or last year to this table. These wrongs should have been righted with God before this and forgotten. Paul declared in Philippians iii. 13th and 14th verses. "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

It was Paul's desire to forget the things of the past, the things which would retard the spiritual growth and reach forward. And this is a very important matter with each one of us. It is just as important to let go of some things as it is to hold on to others. Anything that cannot help unto a growth and knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ should be forgotten. Any thing that is a drag, a stumbling block or a hindrance should be expelled from our memory. Salvation is to us a matter of keeping certain things in memory. As we read in 1 Cor. xv. 2, "By which also ye are saved if ye keep in memory what I have preached unto you." We should not keep in our memory anything that will prevent us from keeping in mind the things that we have heard, namely, the glorious gospel of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ.

It is often a difficult matter to forget injuries, misfortunes or failures, but if we allow them to continually come to our mind they will crush out the better things, the heavenly things. We ought to pattern after brother Paul and forget those things which are behind. We need all the encouragement we can get by dwelling on heavenly things. The time is too short to dwell on things which only hinder our growth. One of the important lessons in life is to learn to be absolute master of one's own mind, to clear it of its enemies, and to keep it clear. Paul was one of those who could forget, who could clear his mind of unwholesome thoughts and could keep it clear.

Paul had a well trained mind, as we can readily see by his writings; he did not permit himself to harbor thoughts which would prevent his reaching forward to the things which are to come. It is necessary for us to train our minds so that we can keep in memory the things that we have heard, and reach forward and grow.

We are told in Philippians ii. 5, "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." It requires training to get the mind of Jesus in us. We can have the promises in our head, but it needs constant assimilation of God's Word to acquire the mind of Jesus. Seeing then that this is so we have no time to brood over past injuries, misfortunes or failures. Paul said, "Be ye followers of me," and it is our duty to train our minds in order that we might follow him. It is our duty to be master of our minds, to keep it clear of all things which would be hurtful to spiritual growth.

We have the ability to call up any guest we choose) we can select our mind's company, then why not call up the best, if we call on Jesus he will come to us, and comfort and sustain us. Jesus said in Matt. xi. 28, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." And in 1 Peter v. 7, we read, "Casting all your care upon him for he careth for you." He will take care of all our burdens, if we permit him. Then let us lay aside every weight, and run with patience the race set before us.

J. C. THOMPSON.

Self Sacrifice.

MATTHEW XVI. 24.

"Then said Jesus to his disciples, If any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Somewhere I have heard the expression "No cross, no crown," and I think that would be the inference after reading the words of our text. Can we be a disciple or follower of Christ, and not follow him in his sufferings? "Christ suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." 1 Pet. ii. 21. It does not mean that we must suffer the death that Christ did, but I do think it means suffering for us. Paul implies this in Rom. viii. 17, when he speaks of our being joint-heirs with Christ, if so be, he says, we suffer with him, then may we expect a share in his glory. Suffering may be either physical or mental.

Temptations and trials are sure to come and the closer we draw to Christ the greater will our tribulations and sufferings be likely to be, for as we draw closer to Christ we will become more and more separate from the things of the world, and so the world will hate us the more. We cannot be free from suggestions of evil and evil inclinations as we possess this natural body, and so there must be a constant warfare kept up within, and I think of this as self denial—refusing to allow these natural desires to be manifested. Before entering into relationship with Christ, the natural mind sought its own pleasure and sensual gratification, but when we put on Christ, we should give him the first place in our affections and refuse to yield any place to our natural inclinations. The apostle tells us to live soberly, righteously, and godly, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts which war against the flesh. Instead of allowing angry feelings a place when we are wronged we ought to have a spirit of loving forgiveness. There should be no rendering of evil for evil by the Christian. Think of the example of our blessed Savior, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; he was oppressed and afflicted yet he opened not his mouth. Some people say it is as wrong to have an evil suggestion, as it is to give it utterance, but it seems to me when we refuse it expression we strengthen ourselves and so doing lessen the inclination to evil. We gain strength by meeting with others who are strong* in the faith. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together." Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, and let all bitterness and wrath and anger and malice be put away; be kind and forgiving to one another even as the anointed One hath shewed us and let us endure suffering as a good soldier. We are told all that will godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution and again, "It is through much tribulation we shall enter the kingdom."

It cheers and gives me courage to know that the sufferings are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed. If we follow Jesus it requires self sacrifice as well as self denial, and this involves the giving of time, talent and means. If we love Christ supremely will we not give him the first place in our plans? We have friends and like to plan gifts and pleasant times for them. Can we put these plans aside when some call comes to work for the Master? He even says to us, he that loveth father or mother or brother or sister more than me is not worthy of me, yea, and our own lives also. Our own comfort and convenience must be put farthest away. Let us all, and especially those who are young in Christ, improve every opportunity of better preparing for the Master's work. We need to be thoroughly grounded and ready to give an answer to every one that asketh us concerning our faith and hope, and how can we unless we study to show ourselves approved unto God and rightly divide the Word of truth. There is much help and encouragement to be derived from our meeting together. I am sure any one who attended the recent Conference at Dutton feel that they could not have afforded to miss it. I enjoyed it so much, I feel like urging the young people of Michigan to plan to attend the Bible school which is being planned for their benefit at Torch Lake. There is much good that we can both give and get. If you have not learned of it you will soon through THE RESTITUTION.

Your sister in the Blessed Hope.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 37.

1. The word that occurred unto Hieremias from the Lord to speak;

2. In this wise hath the Lord God of Israel spoken, saying, Write all the words which I have oracularly revealed unto thee in a book.

3. Because lo, days are coming, saith the Lord, and I shall turn back the removal of my laity Israel and Jouda, hath the Lord said, and I shall turn back into the land which I gave unto their fathers, and they will rule it as lords.

4. And these are the words which the Lord talked in respect to Israel and Jouda.

5. In this way hath the Lord said, Ye will hear a voice of fear; fear and there is no peace.

6. May ye have asked and may ye have seen whether a male-child hath been born? (brought forth) And concerning a fear in which they will hold loins and salvation? Because I have seen every man and his hands were upon his loins; they turned their faces unto a protector of the suppliant.

7. Because great hath that day become, such like there is not, and a narrow time is it for Jakoob,

8. And from it will be have been saved; in that day, hath the Lord said, I shall break the yoke from off their neck and their bonds I shall rend asunder; and they will not work any more for aliens;

9. And they will work for the Lord their God, and I shall stand up (resurrection) for them the Daniel their king.

No 10th and 11th verses.

12. In this wise hath the Lord said, I have raised up a crushing-blow, thy blow is a sorrowful one;

13. There is no one who judgeth thy trial; in a sorrowful way hast thou been healed. It is not to thy advantage?

14. All thy friends have ignored thee; they shall not have asked for thee; because thy sins have been multiplied on account of all thy injustice.

No 15th verse.

16. Therefore will all who have eaten thee have been ravenously eaten and all thine enemies will eat all their own flesh; on account of the fulness of thine iniquities have thy sins been made full, they have caused these things for thee. And those who have dispersed thee will be in a dispersion, and I shall give up to plunder all those who have plundered thee.

17. Because I shall lead up thy healing from a woeful blow I shall heal thee, saith the Lord; because thou wast called a sown one; there is a hunting for you, because there is no one who seeketh her.

18. In this wise hath the Lord said, Lo, I am going to turn back the removal of Jakoob, and his captivity I am going to treat mercifully; and a city will have been built upon her high place, and the laity will be seated according to the judgment rendered therefore,

19. And those who sing will go out from them and a voice of those who make merry, and I shall multiply them and they shall not be diminished.

20. And their sons will enter in as before and their testimonies will have been made upright before my face: and I shall visit upon them who have caused them tribulation;

21. And his will be stronger against them, and his ruler will go out from him; and I shall gather them together, and they will return unto me, because who is he who hath given his heart to return unto me, saith the Lord?

No 22nd verse.

23. Because the Lord's wrath went out passionately, a wrath that overturneth went out; it will come upon irreverent ones.

24. The wrath of the Lord's anger shall not return until it shall do and establish the import of his heart; during the last days will ye comprehend these things.

COMMENT.

What purports to be this chapter is given in the C. V. and R. V. as the 30th, but the 10th and 11th, 15th and 22nd verses not in the text and the variations are so many and so important in the reading that I shall have to ask the reader to compare and note the differences for himself. The 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th verses are especially Messianic and as usual the clear Messianic import has been utterly and hopelessly obscured in the C. V. and R. V. The ultimate restoration of Israel and Jouda as one people to their own land as a thoroughly renovated nation could not be made more specific with words and this is called "a book of words" in the first verse.

Evangelizing Trip.

My evangelizing work, of the winter and spring, taking in about 4500 miles of R. R. travel, is completed, and five months of the journey of life gone, I arrived home May 30th. On the way from the south I stopped at Corvallis, Ore., and through the courtesy of Bro. Darby, filled his regular Sunday evening appointment in that thriving town. I had the pleasure of listening to him at the 11 o'clock hour; also spending several hours in his company. I had never met this brother before. I found him to be an earnest worker, and hope that he will be appreciated, and duly assisted in his charge of the church at Corvallis. He has started on his work with a proper zeal, in holding such frequent, regular appointments, and organizing a Sunday school. May God's blessing rest on and increase the value of his work.

Concerning the new field of labor, that I passed over during the winter and spring, I can never be too grateful for the appreciation shown, both in the kindness and sympathy shown me personally, and also in the financial aid extended to the work. I left home without any assurance of further aid than my traveling expense, but met with something more almost throughout the tour. I give one illustration while in Arizona. I received a letter from Bro. and Sister Cook that they would like to have me leave the California and Oregon R. R., and come 40 miles northeast of Sacramento, and hold some meetings, and they would pay the railroad expense for the side trip. I went. I announced to my congregation that there would be no collections; but after a few meetings, the congregation began to ask for a method, by which general help could be conveyed to me. I was advised to place a contribution box on the stand. I did so. On the first evening donations were made amounting to $55.00. This gave me cheer, not only because an evangelist must have aid, but because they appreciated our doctrines. This is a thinly settled region in the picturesque rocky hills, more noted for the yield of gold in the 50's, than the wealth either in gold or agriculture at the present date. The people generally seemed to accept the gospel theoretically, though only three were ready to obey its requirements.

I hope that this seed, as well as all the regions of my labor, may have the gospel of the kingdom repeated to them again, either by myself or some one that will water where I have planted, for we have the assurance that "God will give the increase."

At the present I bid my readers "good bye," with the hope that I may meet them again, through the columns of THE RESTITUTION. My address will be Elma, Washington, till farther notice. I will be glad to receive communications from any brethren that desire gospel work.

Obituary.

Funeral services in memory of Robon C. Thomas, who died Sunday at his home in Oil Creek township after a brief illness, were held at the residence at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. There was a large gathering of friends, relatives and neighbors to pay their last measure of appreciation to the memory of one whose life was honored and respected by all his acquaintances. The ceremony was in charge of Rev. T. J. Smock of Edinboro, a minister of the Adventist church, with which society Mr. Thomas held faith. He made an eloquent address, recalling the virtues of the dead and directing the living along paths of rectitude. He presented the faith of the Advent, as held dear by the deceased, that "he believed in the restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets."

Following the services the body was interred in Curry cemetery, six grandsons of the aged man acting as bearers of his pall. They were Earl Fenton, E. E. Fenton, R. W. Reynolds, Leroy Thomas, S. E. Curry and Guy Kerr.

Mr. Thomas, who was in his 80th year, was born in Woodcock township, this county. He was the son of Hezekiah Thomas, one of the pioneer residents of northwestern P[illegible] when [illegible] the only [illegible] youth the su[illegible] mained on the fa[illegible] He was married, afte[illegible] estate, to Miss Mary G[illegible] of the late James Graham, [illegible] school teacher and formerly a cou[illegible] superintendent of schools. They first lived in Athens township and moved to Oil Creek township forty years ago. When the Civil war broke out Mr. Thomas became a member of Company I, One Hundred and Sixty-ninth P. V. I. He served three years and returned home after his discharge to make this his permanent residence. He was well known in Titusville and vicinity, where he had been a prominent figure for years. He was a member of Chase Post No. 50, G. A. R.

Besides his aged widow the deceased is survived by six children: Mrs. D. W. Curry, Mrs. D. W. Kerr, Mrs. H. M. Fenton, Mrs. Philip Lederhose, Mrs. Jasper Kerr and Dudley Thomas. The latter lives at Rootville and Mrs. Fenton is in Hydetown. The others are residents of Oil Creek township.—Titusville, Pa. Herald.

Random Thoughts. No 22.

Dear Restitutions

I have a few more random thoughts for your readers. This time growing out of my reading a paper written by one who is reckoned an able writer on certain topics concerning the law of God as given by Moses, etc., which paper as I think is very misleading, but as I don't mean to reply, but only express my own understanding of the topics, I will mention no names nor make any personal reference to any one. I simply want to bring out the truth on certain subjects, one of them being the Sabbath question. One would think enough had been written on that subject, but judging from my reading, a little more is needed. And here let me ask my readers, especially any who are not quite satisfied on that subject, to lay by for the present, all their present ideas, and come with me to the Bible, and to the Bible alone, and I venture to say, before we are through, you will be satisfied that [illegible] person in the world why [illegible] Christian or disciple of [illegible] moment think he [illegible] the Sabbath re- [illegible] commandment [illegible] er a man [illegible] vii. 1) and [illegible] is freed from sin [illegible] of us Peter puts it (I [illegible] forasmuch then as Christ [illegible] fered for us in the flesh (died) [illegible] yourselves likewise with the same mind; for he that has suffered in the flesh (died) has ceased from sin. When a man dies he is no longer under the law and cannot violate it any more, and nothing but death can deliver him from the law. So it was with Jesus. He was put to death under the law. He was nailed to the cross under the law; he died there, and left the law there nailed to the cross, for he died there, but he was not raised from the dead under the law. His dying freed him from the law. He was put to death in the flesh, but made alive in the Spirit. He was the first born from the dead to die no more, he was flesh and blood when he died, but spirit when made alive. Now note that it does not say the law died or became dead, but Christ died; and so became dead to the law. The law never died. The law still remains over all who are under it—that is Israel. And will so remain as long as they live. Christ dying did not deliver them from it. It only delivered himself from the law, unless a Jew will believe in Christ. If a Jew will believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and will be baptized into his (Christ's) death, and that (Christ's death) will then free him from the law. I know of no other way for a Jew to become free from the law—I mean free from the obligation of keeping it, except by dying himself or by being baptized into Christ's death. He then becomes a Christian—or a member of the body of Christ. And so with Gentiles! they must believe just the same as the Jew, and he becomes dead to sin. He does not become a Jew, but is on an equality with him. A Jew becomes a Christian and so does the Gentile. As many as are baptized into Christ have put on Christ, whether Jew or Gentile, then they are both or all one in Christ Jesus. In him there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond or free, male or female, but are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise made to Abraham. The middle wall of partition is taken away from them by their becoming Christ's. The middle wall of partition still remains between the Jew and Gentile just as it always was. It is only done away in Christ.

More than any other one thing the Sabbath was the middle wall of partition, it was a sign or mark to show who were Jews and Gentiles. There is no such wall in Christ, as Christ has freed the Jew from the law, and the Gentile was never under it. The church a new man, or a new body. We have three parties now instead of two. The Jew as such is not a Gentile, nor is the Gentile as such a Jew, nor is either as such Christian, nor a Christian as such either of the others, but all three should be careful to give no offence to the Jew, nor to the Gentile, nor to the Church of God. Here we see three parties, each different from the other. The law including the Sabbath belongs to the Jews and to neither of the others, no other people are under that law—no part of it. When Christ died on the cross, he died to every part of the law, and when he rose from the dead, he left the whole of the law nailed to the cross! And when a believing Jew is baptized into Christ he is freed from the law, dead to it, no longer under it but is a new creature, dead to the whole law, every part of it—all being nailed to the cross.

But it is argued that because some things were forbidden by law and also by Christ, and other things were commanded under that law and also under Christ, that the law relating to these things must have been brought over or transferred from the old to the new! Nonsense! Before that law was given it was wrong to murder, steal, commit adultery, etc., and right to love the Lord their God, etc. The right or the wrong does not depend on the law. Because the same things are taught or forbidden does not prove it is the same law! In our State the penalty for murder is capital punishment, in another imprisonment. One may be Ohio law, another may be Iowa or Michigan law. Did the same authority ordain it? Suppose a resident of Ohio commits murder in Michigan or any State where imprisonment is the penalty, by what law will he be tried? He will be tried by the law of the State in which the offence was committed. But did he not violate the law of Ohio? No. Why not? Because he did not commit the offence in Ohio, and Ohio has no jurisdiction in Michigan. But suppose he had done it in Ohio, then what law would he have violated? He would then have violated Ohio law, because he was then under Ohio law, and no other State had jurisdiction. This law would be true if the law of both States were worded exactly the same. Still one would be be Ohio law, the other Michigan, etc. And so the law of the Lord as given by Moses is one thing, the law by Christ another, even though some parts may read the same. Each law is binding on those to whom it may be given. But for the present I quit. More anon.

The Life Ideal.

Do we have confidence in all the teachings of Christ's Word? Does he promise such great gifts, that human mind doubts the ability for him to perform? Is it that the finite cannot grasp the infinite? Ah! yes that is the correct answer.

Christ's ways are God's ways; and God says that, "For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." Selfishness and self-preservation (according to the human idea) are not existent in the minds of Christ and God; but selfishness and self-preservation are always present in the minds of the human race and as a rule occupy the place of pre-eminence, and in so doing we often miss the greater promises of God, which would be ours if we would accept them, rejecting help from above, (possibly unknowingly,) and taking the weaker helps, which long usage has made preferable.

Close companionship cannot exist as a rule between the musicians and those who care little for music; the worldly are not comfortable with the true followers of Christ; the rich and proud do not associate with the poor and humble; nor the boisterous with the mild, even tempered or vice versa. So it is with the close student of the Word, who believes and desires God's will, not his to be done; more so than the student who studies occasionally and wants more of his own will done and then looses the close communion to the infinite, the divine, that he might have.

Habit causes us when we are ill to send for the physician, do what he says, but to not seek to do anything more. James v. 14, 15, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up;" not that I wish to supplant the use of the physician, but add to; may be through that means the Lord wishes to "raise one up;" we must make use of what knowledge God has permitted us to acquire and use it and add to it the admonition recorded above, which we find in Jas. v. 14, 15.

Then again habit says we must accumulate, when we have this farm paid for, buy another, go in debt again, for it is a way to help save, it is the way to success; but so different is the teaching of God's holy Word. Listen, Christ is speaking, Matt. vi. 28, etc., "And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin. And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothed the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? Where-withal we shall be clothed? (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek): for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you. Take no thought for tomorrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Also consider along with this the following. "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon. Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" Again, Matt. vi. 19, etc., "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal; For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Why not take Christ at his word and thereby find peace, "sweet peace, the gift of God's love"

It was David who said, "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Brethren, do not let us follow Christ at some distance off, but close, very close; it is hard to follow the Master at long range, because we then only do in part, his will; and a small part at that and a great deal our own will, which is nearly always contrary to Christ's; follow Christ at very close range and you will find it much easier, you will find that you will not feel so badly, if you cannot have your own way in everything, possibly it was not for the best that your way should have been followed, and God in his kindness and love and mercy and wisdom prevented, knowing what was better for you. When we can see God's hand in the events of our life and then say, praise his holy name even if it was not as we wished it at the time, knowing that he "doeth all things well." Then peace and consolation are ours, anxieties and cares are cast upon Christ and he helps us bear our burdens.

Riches do not bring happiness, they bring care and anxiety. There is one way in which the possession of riches can bring happiness, that is to do God's will with it, relieving the hungry and the cold, when winter with its chilling blasts, brings suffering to the poor, also clothe the ragged, and send medical aid to the sick, in fact see how much you can spend in doing something for some one besides ourselves and our own, then your riches will bring consolation. The rich young man, who came to the Master and asked what should he do, that he might have eternal life; telling the Master he had from his youth up, kept the commandments, and the Master told him to "go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come and follow me. But the young man went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions." Notice that he went away sorrowful, and that great possessions was the cause. It is hard to have the riches of this world and riches in heaven at the same time; we cannot have "two masters;" Christ says, "That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." And do not let us say, even if we do possess our thousands, that we are not rich, having our eyes fixed only on the million mark ere we admit we are numbered with rich.

Another thought and I will close. This desiring or seeking after worldly honor and position, in fact to be the "I AM," this desire to be looked up to by the worldly, costs so much, so much that it sometimes costs a person his heavenly reward. Christ was not favorable with the world, and if our Master was not, how can his followers expect it; the world is uncompromising and it has caused the modern church to adopt so many ways, sanctioned by the world that it is with difficulty that the modern church is detected from the world. The modern church has fallen, has fallen; for the sake of popularity it is running opposition to the theater, by entertaining instead of instructing its followers in the saving gospel; socials, young men's clubs, literary reading clubs for the study of Shakespeare, etc., things to lead them away from the study of the Word of God, it is too slow, too dry; may be that is true, but yet it has not lost its saving power, if its teachings are followed. "I love to tell the story because I know its true, it satisfies my longings, as nothing else can do. Entertainment will not save, it is an intoxication of short duration and gives no consolation. Is there any satisfaction in the fact that you were the best dressed at some certain function? No, but there is consolation in the knowledge that you tried to relieve some suffering one and did not care to have it published to the world, but what peace of mind in knowing that Christ had recorded it; seek to please God and Christ, and let the fact whether it pleases the world or displeases the world to be cast to the four winds of heaven; even do not consider self, try above all to please our heavenly Father and our Redeemer.

All The Good We Can.

If the sunshine never crept
Into hovels dark and sad;
If its glorious never shone
Save where everything was glad;
If it scattered not its beams
Over hearts by sorrow chilled,
Would the sunshine do his will?
Would its mission be fulfilled?

If the birds should sing their songs
Far from every listening ear;
If they poured them not abroad
All the earth to glad and cheer;
Would the work of birds be done
Ere the autumn breezes call,
Ere the gold and crimson leaves
O'er the grave of summer fall?

If the sunshine of our smiles
We have scattered not afar,
If our roses,—kindly deeds,—
Bloom not where the lowly are;
If our words of hope and joy
Never fail to bless and cheer,
Have we done our Maker's will?
Have we wrought our mission here?

—George Cooper.

The Filial Remembrance.

A child knelt, at the accustomed hour, to thank God for his mercies of the day, and pray for care through the coming night; then as usual, came the earnest "God bless dear mother and——." But the prayer was stilled, the little hands unclasped, and a look of agony and wonder met the mother's eye as the words of hopeless sorrow burst from the lips of the kneeling child, "I cannot pray for father any more!" Since her lips had been able to form the dear name, she had prayed for a blessing upon it. It had followed close after mother's name. But now he was dead. I waited some moments, that she might conquer her emotion, and then urged her to go on. Her pleading eyes met mine, and, with a voice that faltered too much almost for utterance, she said, "O, mother, I cannot leave him out! Let me say, 'Thank God that I had a dear father once!' so I can still go on and keep him in my prayers." And so she always does; and my stricken heart learned a lesson from the loving ingenuity of my child. Remember to thank God for mercies past, as well as to ask blessings for the future.

Boy Inventors.

A boy's elders are guilty of a foolish act when they snub him because he says or does something which they don't understand. A boy's personality is entitled to as much respect as a man's so long as he behaves himself.

Some of the most important inventions have been the work of boys. The invention of the valve motion to the steam engine was made by a mere boy. Newcome's engine was in a very incomplete condition from the fact that there was no way to open or close the valves except by means of levers operated by the hand. Newcome set a large engine at one of the mines, and a boy, Humphrey Potter, was hired to work these valve levers; although this work was not hard work, yet it required his constant attention. As he was working the levers he saw that parts of the engine moved in the same direction and at the same time that he had to open or close the valves. He procured a strong cord and made one end fast to the proper part of the engine and the other end to the valve lever; and then had the satisfaction of seeing the engine move with perfect regularity of motion. A short time after, the foreman came around and saw the boy playing marbles at the door. Looking at the engine he saw the ingenuity of the boy, and also the advantage of so great an invention. The idea suggested by the boy's inventive genius was put in practical form, and made the steam engine an automatic working machine.

The power loom is the invention of a farmer's boy who had never seen or heard of such a thing. He whittled one out with his jack-knife, and after he had got it all done he, with great enthusiasm, showed it to his father, who at once kicked it to pieces, saying that he would have no boy about him who would spend his time on such foolish things.

The boy was sent to a blacksmith to learn a trade, and his master took a lively interest in him. He made a loom of what was left of the one his father had broken up and showed it to his master. The blacksmith saw he had no common boy as an apprentice, and that the invention was a valuable one. He had a loom constructed under the supervision of the boy. It worked to their perfect satisfaction, and the blacksmith furnished the means to manufacture the looms and the boy received half the profits. In about a year the blacksmith wrote to the boy's father that he should bring to see him a wealthy gentleman who was the inventor of the celebrated power loom. You may be able to judge of the astonishment of the old gentleman when his son was presented to him as the inventor, who told him that the loom was the same model that he had kicked to pieces a year before.

Conference Report.

The Indiana Conference of the Churches of God convened at "Old Antioch" June 8, 1906.

Friday afternoon and evening was spent in listening to preaching. Brother Wince delivering the discourse in the afternoon and Brother Zilmer in the evening.

Saturday morning, at 10:00 Brother Woodward gave what he called a practical talk, his subject being "In me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." John xvi. 33.

At 2:00 P. M. the Business Meeting convened, with Vice-President J. L. Wince in the chair. Roll Call of churches showed the following represented: Argos, Antioch, Bracken, Burr Oak, Plymouth, Rensselaer, South Bend. The time of holding the Bible School was left open and in the hands of the Committee.

At 8:00 Brother Halstead delivered a discourse on "Judgment." 2 Thes. i.

Brother Zilmer spoke in the evening on John viii. 31, 32, "If ye continue in my Word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Sunday morning at 9:30 the Social Meeting was led by R. C. Railsback, and at 11:00 Brother Woodward spoke on "Love." At 2:00 P. M. he spoke again on "the Life Beyond" or "If a man die shall he live again?" At 8:00 came the Communion Service conducted by Brother Wince. In the evening at 7:00 the Social Meeting was led by J. H. Willey and at 8:00 Brother Zilmer spoke on "The Gospel."

Thus ended another June Meeting and we trust that some good was done, some seed sown that may bring forth fruit unto the harvest.

Some visiting members from a distance were Brother Fahrney, Brother and Sister Smith and Brother Alexander of Chicago and Brother and Sister Miller of California.

A Tribute.

Mrs. Harriet N. Simonds died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Niram A. Fletcher, No. 28 South College avenue, at an early morning hour Tuesday, May 8. Throughout her life of service she was a type of sweet, self-sacrificing, Puritan womanhood, around which the processes of the family revolve and upon which the neighborhood places dependence and receives inspiration.

In the home circle the firm, quiet, resourceful and sympathetic influence of Mrs. Simonds made itself felt for its full value; the impression made upon children was not of the kind to be easily effaced by the erosion of time. It was etched into their characters and has moulded and individualized their careers.

In the farm community in which a considerable part of her active married life was spent, she was a woman upon whom the entire neighborhood depended for aid and comfort. She did not count it a sacrifice to walk a mile to give succor to a sick one or to carry sympathy to the bereaved. While her own family knew there would be no neglect of the home, it was understood that the need of a neighbor for mother's service must be met by a willing sacrifice to aid in the emergency.

Mrs. Simonds was an example of what it means to carry into the service of humanity, the deep-seated, practical truths of religion. She was a religious woman, affected strongly by divine truth as she interpreted it in the Bible Word, and deeply moved by its modulated expression in poetry, song and beauty of nature. Her favorite quotations of Scripture were often alternated in conversation by bits of choice verse, either devotional in thought or expressive of service.

She had a passionate fondness for nature. The clouds and foliage and flowers and landscapes appealed strongly to her religious nature. She often spoke of the moon in its various phases as a valued possession of hers. Not only form and color, but songs of birds, the humming of insects and the fragrance of flowers made a strong appeal to her, and this attribute of character, she imparted to her children as a beautiful legacy.

Mrs. Simonds was the daughter of Deacon William B. Garfield of Genesee county, New York, in which community she was born in 1826. She was one of a family of eight children, but one sister surviving her, Mrs. Philomela Royce of Clare, Mich. Samuel M. Garfield of this city, her only brother, died in 1876.

Soon after marriage to Joel A. Simonds, early in the fifties, the family established its home upon a portion of the old Burton farm, in the township of Paris, south of this city. About twenty years later the farm was sold and the family removed to the city. The death of Mr. Simonds occurred several years ago in this city, since which date Mrs. Simonds had made her home most of the time with her daughter, Mrs. Fletcher.

She was laid away on Thursday morning in the family burial lot at Oak Hills among the trees and shrubs which had made so effective an appeal to her in life. The writer of this brief word is one upon whom the sweet influence of this rare and gracious womanly life has made a deep and lasting impression.—Charles W. Garfield in Grand Rapids Herald.

Announcement.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.
EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the Camp-grounds at Waterloo, Iowa, from Aug. 18th to 26th inclusive. Programme will be announced later.

O. J. ALLARD, Pres.
MRS. EVA L. STEARNS, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

P. NEILL, Pres.
J. C. THOMPSON, Sec'y.

The Central Washington Conference will meet at Waterville, Washington, June 29, 30 and July 1, 1906. All brothers and sisters who are interested in carrying on the Master's work are earnestly desired at these Conference meetings. The Master, at his departure, gave us the command, "Occupy until I come." In what manner are we doing his work? He is soon coming to take an account of our stewardship will he say, "Well done, good and faithful servant enter into the kingdom." Dear brothers and sisters, may we make these lessons living realities and show to those around us that we are surely endeavoring to keep his commandments.

Industries Wanted.

The Chicago & North Western Railway has information from desirable points on its lines that industries of various kinds are desired. The fine prospect of a bounteous harvest insures the continuance of the large business of former years and is causing many communities to make strong effort to secure new industries. Among the establishments wanted are iron and woodworking concerns, cereal mills, canning works, cold storage plants and mills of various kinds, as well as mercantile establishments. Requests for particulars addressed to the Industrial Department of the C. & N. W. Ry., Chicago, will be promptly attended to.—July 11

The Wisconsin and Michigan Summer Resorts.

A beautiful illustrated booklet, describing more than a hundred summer resorts along the Chicago & North Western Railway, where the greatest hunting and fishing grounds in the world are found. More than 1,600 lakes and hundreds of trout streams are contained in the area covered by five excellent detail maps, showing every trail and wagon road in this famous region. Complete list of hotels and boarding houses also included. Sent on receipt of ten cents to cover postage. W. B. Kniskern, Pass'r Traffic Mgr., 215 Jackson Blvd., Chicago.—July 4

We need what is due us on subscriptions and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

A four-page tract in the German language, by Brother M. Joblin of Cleveland, O. Subject, "What Must I do to be Saved?" After getting the opinion of one who understands this language, we have no hesitation in recommending it as simply all right. Get some for your German friends. Send to M. Joblin, 626 Woodland Ave., Cleveland, O. Price 1 cts per 100.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference:

I have moved to the state of Oregon, so all letters in the interest of the conference work will be sent to J. P. Bitner, Severance, Kansas.

A. W. DARBY.

Notice.

I expect to be in Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas this summer, and any wishing pastoral work in reach of my path, please notify me at Attica, Kan.

"The Baptism with the Holy Spirit" a 10-page booklet with cover, printed in large type on fine paper. This pamphlet is a reproduction of a series of articles which appeared several years ago. Price 5 cents per copy; 50 cents per dozen. Send orders to the author, A. H. Zilmer, at Plymouth, Indiana.

Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if printed will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Send your pledges but no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you [illegible] and the[illegible] Don't wait [illegible] time. God's bus[illegible] attention.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JUNE 27, 1906. NUMBER 24.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

"It is More Blessed to Give Than to Receive."

Give:—If only a kindly word:
Many are longing and pining to hear
Something of tenderness, something of cheer;
Wounded to pain are they, weakened to fear,
By falsehoods too often heard.

Give—If only a gladsome smile:
Many a striver well worthy the crown
Battles, and falters and stumbles down,
Bullied and beaten and awed by the frown
Of fellows craven and vile.

Give—If only a friendly tear:
Daughters of sorrow and sons of distress,
Dying for sympathy, living could bless
Him who would sweeten their life's bitterness,
And weep with the weeping here.

Give:—If only a helping hand:
Burdened and fainting, earth's wayfarers crave
Hearty "God-speed" from the strong ones and brave,
Willing good deeds from the watchful to save
Their courage—almost unmanned.

Give.—If only a brother's love:
Strongest to succor and surest to win
Fellows in suffering, fellows from sin.
Open your hearts wide and gather them in,
And bear them in prayer above.

The Bible Schools and Public School Methods.

No thinking person can question the importance of Bible school work. Upon every hand the leaders in Bible school work are advocating the special training of teachers. No one can fail to see how few in proportion to the vast numbers engaged in Sunday school teaching is the number of well equipped workers. There has been and always will be criticism of any public work. It is well there is, for it is time that we look to our methods and always to see that we are not falling behind but moving forward.

Only as the banners move forward does the army remain in discipline. The churches are coming more and more to recognize the importance of Bible schools and are providing for the training of teachers for better literature and for systematic study. The Bible schools are the nursery of of the church, and from this source we can confidently look for the trained leaders, capable of carrying on the work of the church. The church should not fail to provide for the training of young people in all departments of Christian work. If we fail in this, we have lost one of the greatest opportunities offered to build up the cause of Christ and his church.

It is essential that we consider some plan that will meet the needs of our young people and isolated members. In the early church when the number of the disciples multiplied and there arose a murmuring because some of Grecian widows were neglected in the daily ministrations, the apostles met these needs by appointing certain men to look after that matter. So with our church work it is necessary that the burden of work be shared by persons appointed for special fields of work.

We should have committees appointed to look after the needs of the poor and the sick, and many other things that fall in the line of Christian work. There should be a Bible school organization auxiliary to our church to provide for the needs in this department of work. A large per cent of those brought into the churches come from the Bible schools, hence the importance of this work.

A home department work should be provided in Bible school work, where those who are isolated and those who are not able to be actively engaged may find a place and come in touch with the organized work.

Whatever opinions one may hold in regard to the changes introduced in recent years in the methods of teaching in the public and private schools, it is a fact that the secular schools have always been greatly in advance of the Bible schools. The secular schools have a system, which is essential to success. They present to their pupils a course of study which begins with the lowest grade of the primary class, and culminates in the high school or college.

Steady rational progress is the key-note of it. On the other hand, the Bible school work is disconnected. Instead of providing a connected, orderly study of the Bible, the International lessons provide only the opportunity for personal interpretation of selected passages from the Bible and for individual sermonettes. The importance of the International Lessons committee may be judged when it is stated that this committee directs the study of nearly 28 million persons. Though there has been much criticism in this direction, and effort has been made by different individuals to offer a course of study, it seems hard to break away from old methods. Though I may not be competent to judge, I may venture to suggest, that the great trouble with the present method is, that we use the quarterly as a text book and not the Bible. We confine ourselves too much to the quarterly and read a great deal about what people say about the Bible, and but very little study is given to the Bible.

Whatever the quarterly says, is taken for granted, by most people as being true. Answers are given from the quarterly to questions that ought to be answered after a careful comparison of Scripture. The Bible should be the text book. It is the chief object of all Christian work to carry gospel truth to those that are out of Christ. It should be the aim of the Bible student to so master its contents as to make it of the greatest possible spiritual value to himself, and himself the most efficient worker possible in advancing the cause of divine truth in the world. Ones strength in Christian work is measured largely by his ability to make this use of Scripture truth.

True reverence for divine truth, and proper regard for the instrument through which that truth has been revealed, must be cultivated. Let us seek earnestly that higher life, which has been revealed in the person of Jesus, the world's greatest teacher. The method of Jesus as a teacher illustrates many of the principles which experience has demonstrated to be requisite for successful work as an instructor. Every teacher could study with profit his manner of imparting truth, of which the most notable feature was the adaptation to the minds of those he addressed. His audiences were composed of the common people. He used language common to their daily life and illustrations drawn from their occupations. He was always understood in matters he wished to make clear. The simplicity and directness of speech of Jesus constitutes this peculiar charm and power. Jesus taught with a certain reserve, with holding at first what the disciples were only able to understand later. In the training of the 12 he said nothing of his coming death till late in his ministry. Even at the close he assured them that there was very much of which he would speak but they were not prepared to hear. John xvi. 12. In all these particulars Jesus was the true teacher. Jesus taught as truly by the example of his life as by his words.

We should be very careful in the selection of Bible school teachers in this regard. How can we expect a child to put in daily practice the lessons taught by one who by his example neither learns nor lives the Word. No matter how positive the precept, it is never so powerful as the example.

If Jesus had never uttered a word upon such themes as filial regard, life in the home, obligations to God, to man, to state, to the necessity of prayer, of the study of Scripture, of love manifest in all the relations of life his conduct would have been sufficient to impress these duties on all his followers. Behind the teacher, was the life of the teacher. This is of a truth the Prophet that should come into the world. John vi. 14.

There is every reason to believe that the early life of Jesus was rich in qualities that fitted him for his matchless career. "Lo, I come in the volume of the book it is written of me to do thy will, O God." Heb. x. 7. This seems to have been the thought that took possession of his mind very early in life. The first recorded words of Jesus were "Wist ye not I must be about my Father's business." Luke ii. 49. There must be preparation for any successful career. Jesus' life was no exception to this. Thirty years of Jesus' life were years spent in preparation for three and one-half years of active ministry. At the age of twelve years, Jesus had acquired so great a knowledge of the Scriptures that the teachers in the temple were amazed at his understanding and answers.

The third recorded words were his replies to the tempter. His knowledge of the Scripture saved him in his hour of temptation. His answer was, "It is written." Three times he rebukes the tempter with a quotation from the Holy Scriptures. Then the tempter leaveth him and angels came and ministered unto him. Matt. iv.

Here seems to have come to Jesus the temptation of a short, easy road to fortune, but he put the thought aside to do his Father's will. Real success in the realm of the moral and religious life is due to no accident. If the whole of a successful life could be known one would see there the fulfilment of laws as stable as God's will. Faith in and obedience to God's will is the narrow way of life. The only guarantee of abiding power is to follow the leading of the divine—to pray "Thy will be done."

Capacity and leadership are the rewards of efforts. The public ministry of Jesus opened in Judea. It is a very interesting part of the Bible to study, to trace upon the maps the journeys of Jesus and his followers, and the adaptation of public school methods to Bible study is shown by the interest boys and girls take in map work. Map making is a fascinating occupation for boys and girls, and some very good work may be done in this way. The young people may be encouraged to use drawing crayons in picturing the scenes of our Lord's work on earth. The direction of journeys being indicated by arrows, blue being used for bodies of water, and distinguishing colors indicate Galilee, Samaria, Judea, and the province beyond Jordan. Again turning to the life of Jesus as a teacher, among the most notable features of the life of Jesus, was his choice of a group of men to be his friends and pupils. Jesus chose 12 men from among his disciples, whom he called his apostles, and whose training occupied a large portion of his time. The twelve were taught by Jesus. The group was virtually a traveling school with Jesus as teacher. Preaching, teaching and miracles were primarily for their sake. He was instructing them regarding the kingdom and the laws that must govern their lives to give them an entrance into the kingdom. The feature of his teaching seemed to be chiefly the teaching of great principles to govern human life. The Jews had not heeded the old prophetic ideals of personal and national righteousness, with its protest against formalities and ceremonies as a substitute for relations with God. 1 Sam. xv. 22. "Behold to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

They forgot the spirit of the law and laid emphasis upon the externals of religion. Jesus taught his disciples that all the law was summed up in two commands, Love to God and love to man. But the Scribes interpreted duty to God as consisting in the minute details of conduct. They came to Jesus and asked why his disciples transgressed the traditions of the elders? He answered, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your traditions? They lost sight of the real teaching of Scripture and mingled it with the commandments of men. "This people draweth nigh to me with their mouth, but their heart is far from me." Jesus judged every act by the motive that prompted it.

Any practice growing out of ostentation desire for praise could have no value. If a man made his prayers in public in order to be seen of men, he had his reward in that he was seen of men, but the prayer would be worthless. God looks on the heart. The same principle held good in alms-giving and fasting. In these acts and others of similar character the motive was weighed. One could not be judged by his external life. By the interpretation of the law, one who took human life was a murderer. But Jesus took the spirit of the law and disclosed the truth, that he who hates his brother is a murderer. Similarly his explanation of the command against lust was to include motives and desires. Jesus here discloses to his disciples the higher type of character demanded of his followers, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another as I have loved you." "These things I command you, that ye love one another." "He taught them as one having authority and not as the Scribes." Matt. vii. 29. The Scribes' manner of teaching was to repeat what certain learned men had said. It was the custom of the age that the teacher should fortify every statement with numerous references to the opinions of learned men on the subject. Jesus relied on no former teacher, but spoke with directness and force. His most frequent utterance was—"I say unto you." People noticed this and said he spoke with authority and not as the scribes. Jesus was not a writer. The only record we have of his writing was when he stooped and wrote on the ground with his finger. John viii. 8. Jesus' recorded words are few, yet they are the most profoundly influential utterances in possession of the race. John xvii. 20. There must have been a charm about his speech which few men have possessed. His audiences grew rapidly whenever he stopped to speak. Often as he taught by the Sea of Galilee he was pushed down to the water's edge and there obliged to take refuge in a boat.

Jesus' usual manner seems to have been quiet. He sat in the synagogue, in the boat, or upon the mountain while his listeners gathered about him. Sometimes his mood was more intense as when he encountered the opposition of the rulers in Jerusalem, and then his voice rose in impassioned utterances as he stood and cried, "If any man thirst let him come to me and drink." John vii. 37. Jesus used all occasions for teaching. In the temple at feasts, in the city streets, in the country, in the field and on the road, always and everywhere he taught. No audience was ever too small, and no listener too common-place.

Jesus' teaching took a great variety of forms. Conversation was held with individuals wherever they were met. Sometimes such conversation grew into sermons or formal statements as a few to whom he began to speak were joined by others and at last a great crowd was listening. In oriental countries it seemed to be the custom, that if any one stopped upon the street to speak to a friend, all who passed by were expected to stop and listen to what they had to say. Some times the gospels give us some of the teachings of Jesus in connection with the incident that called them forth. At other times they gather a great variety of sayings into one group.

Jesus' teaching was not systematic, orderly or logical. He used a great number of illustrations. People often fail to understand statements of truth, when they will catch the idea by means of a story. Jesus used many figures taken from every day life, and then used parables or stories to explain his meaning. This throws the comparison of Jesus' teaching with the proverb literature of the Old Testament. Growing out of the proverb form came the story or parable, which developed the illustration into a narrative. This was used in the Old Testament to a limited extent. Jotham's tale of the trees choosing a king. Judges ix. 6-15. Jehoash's story of the thistle and cedar. 2 Kings xiv.

Again in form of the parable, a story that conforms to probabilities without professing to set forth actual facts. The parable of the ewe lamb told by Nathan to David. 2 Sam. xii. 17. Jesus seems to have chosen this method of teaching for various reasons. Parables set forth truth in such a telling form that argument was unnecessary, such as the good Samaritan, Luke x. The great supper and the rejected invitation. Sometimes Jesus seems to have concealed his meaning, because he was watched by his enemies. He spoke to the multitude in parables and then afterward explained them to his disciples in private. The disciples did not understand why he spoke thus and they asked him why. He gives quite a long explanation as is found in Matt. xiii. Because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand. To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom, to others it is not given. Jesus used dialogue or conversation in order to widen his circle of students. This had the advantage of question and answer. Such conversations are recorded in John's gospel, with Nicodemus, John iii.; the woman of Samaria, John iv.

A third form of teaching was controversy, which played so conspicuous a part in the closing week of Jesus' life, when he was approached repeatedly by his enemies, with puzzling questions in hope that they might ensnare him and so discredit him with the people. Examples of controversy, with the Herodians regarding tribute money; with the Sadducees regarding future life; with the Pharisees regarding the great commandment.

Our efforts of teaching and preaching conform to models very different from those that prevailed in the days of Jesus and among his people. In form his teaching resembled those of the prophets and sages. Like theirs his language abounded in figures of speech, such, "If thine eye cause thee to stumble pluck it out;" Matt. v. "Ye are the salt of the earth." Reference to the "mote and the beam;" Matt. vii. "The narrow and wide gate." These examples illustrate Jesus' method of using familiar objects and actions to impress his teaching regarding spiritual things. These words are to be understood in their figurative use.

This method of teaching was thoroughly oriental. The Old Testament abounds in such language. Both prophets and wise men used it; but of the two Jesus followed the sages or proverb form of teaching, while he stood wholly with the prophets. Much of Jesus' teaching is thrown into the proverb form, which packs away into a couplet the wisdom of a volume. The beatitudes all have this form. "Blessed be the poor in spirit for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Matt. v. "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." There are symbols, figures of speech, metaphors and also allegories used in Scripture, but unless they are stated in the text or plainly indicated in the context, we should hold to the literal sense. Jesus used expressions that were familiar with the people, but he imparted a new and deeper meaning to all expressions he used. His words were with power. Luke iv. No teacher ever so crossed the thought of his own time as did Jesus when he said, "Blessed are the poor." Luke vi. "Woe unto you that are rich." Luke vi. 2; Mark ii. 1, "I came not to call the righteous but sinners." "Not that which entereth into the mouth defileth, but that which proceedeth out of the mouth this defileth the man." Matt. xvi. 1. Another quality to be observed in the teaching of Jesus was his sternness at times, no prophet ever spoke words of more severe rebuke than he. On more more than one occasion his indignation against sin, voiced its self in words that must have schorched as they fell. The "woes" pronounced upon the Scribes and Pharisees." Matthew xxiii.

In his time the common people were despised by the educated and religious classes and esteemed as accursed for their ignorance of ecclesiastical law. John vii. 49. Jesus made a deep impression on the common people, "They heard him gladly." The outcast and abandoned felt new hope in his presence. He did not overlook their wretched conditions but impressed them with a desire for better things. Though Jesus touched almost every phase of human conduct in his teaching, he [illegible] the highest themes. He did not publish a set of rules, but provided his followers with great principles in accordance with which their lives must be governed. Jesus, our prophet teacher, was a revelation of God's love. He stood on the human plane of life and sought to give us that point of view, which reveals our relationship to the Father and calls us from the world, to separate ourselves to that high and holy calling in Christ Jesus.

The lessons we learn from Jesus as a teacher are many and if put into practice in our Bible schools as they are in a measure in our public school work we should be able to interest and instruct a class that are hard to reach. If the child mind be regarded as a blank page upon which the teacher is to write Scripture texts, it would seem a simple duty. Considered rather as a living, active being, which must be fed and trained the task becomes quite a different one. The child may be considered a bundle of impulses and motives, neither good nor bad, but capable of either, so that the teacher's task is to bring Scripture truth to bear upon these motives in such a way as to direct them in the channels of purity and righteousness. But who is equal to this? Few if any are able to perform such a task as it should be. There are two main avenues by which we can approach the mind of scholars. These are the "eye gate" and "ear gate." Compared with the other three senses these are far the most often used. In childhood the eye is the pioneer of all learning, the child sees, and as soon as possible begins to ask the meaning of that which appeals to the eye. The ear is the interpreter of that which attracts its attention. The things that make the deepest impression are those that are seen. What are the things that were remember from our childhood best? Are they not the pictures that attracted us? The Bible stories which we never can forget are those which are illustrated. Even in our geographies the things best remembered are the illustrations of scenery, customs and manners of land and people. In maturer years it is in a large measure the same. If you want to give an idea of a scene or a piece of machinery, a picture is better than a page of explanations. Secular teachers know this truth, and make use of it continually.

No man lectures on matters scientific without, if possible, making use of the black board or charts prepared for his subject. Since these things are true ought not all religious teachers to make greater use of the eye in their work than they do? This goes without saying, and yet it remains true that very few Sunday school teachers ever appeal to their scholars. Jesus said, "Ye are the light of the world—a light under a bushel can't be seen, etc. There are many like illustrations used in the Bible. The Bible says much of snares and traps. Satan has many traps. He tempts boys, the boy yields and is caught. All this may be illustrated by a trap taken into class or on the platform. The trap is baited and therefore attracts the creature, and is designed to harm. To illustrate the principle of growth in grace, seed of any kind may be used. These seeds have in them the principle of life. In this they are like the Word of God, which our Master says is seed. If these seeds are not planted, and if they did not receive warmth and sunlight they would never germinate. So unless the Word is planted in the human heart and is watered by the early and latter rain of the spirit and is warmed by the "Sun of righteousness," the seed will remain dead.

To illustrate the fact that "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he

Notice the change in the Iowa Conference.

Sister M. A. Woodward stopped on her way to Warren Co., Indiana, last Friday night, and made us a brief visit. She reports Brother Woodward as not very well. We are always glad to have such visits, so call again.

We give considerable space to the proposed Bible school, as Sister Harriet E. Boice has it in mind. The work is certainly worthy of the efforts of all, and should be given proper support. Our young people should be drilled while they are capable of listening the Bible. Preaching is all right, and papers, and books and tracts are all well in their place. But methods change, and we must give proper attention to the ideas and ways of instruction and getting education now in vogue. A well conducted Bible school cannot fail to be a help to our literature, and to our public speakers everywhere. So let a proper support be given this enterprise that our Sister is so earnestly striving to establish. The beginning may be small, but we trust, with the Father's blessing, it will grow, and be a valuable factor in aiding old and young to understand better the plan and purpose of God in his dealings with man. Help all you can. Attend if possible. Send aid for the work that others may do.

Man is Mortal. No. 2.

In this article I wish to take up the subjects of Biogenesis and Spontaneous Generation. These subjects have been fought over for more than two hundred years. One party claiming that life can only come from pre-existing life. The other that life can be spontaneously generated. Scientists and religionists were at variance over these points. Those who opposed Biogenesis claimed that life is not the gift of life. It is capable of springing into being itself. It can be spontaneously generated. Experiments were resorted to in order to prove it. Glass vessels are three parts filled with infusion of hay or any organic matter. They are boiled to kill all germs of life, hermetically sealed to exclude the air. The air within the vessel is supposed to be dead. So any life springing into life after this boiling process must have sprung into life itself. Therefore it was spontaneously generated. During a number of experiments it was found that life still existed. Prof. Tyndall repeated these experiments but with more care. Exposing the matter to a greater degree of heat and found that no germs survived his experiments. After his careful experiments he announced that the doctrine of Biogenesis or life only from life, is victorious along the whole line at the present day. He stated that he wished that the evidence were the other way. I affirm says Tyndall, that no shred of trustworthy experimental testimony exists to prove that life in our day has ever appeared independently of antecedent life.

Mr. Dallinger another scientist found in his experiments that among the lower forms of life the most surprising and indestructible vitality. Some animals could survive much higher temperature than had been applied to annihilate them. Some germs almost refuse to be destroyed, they were all but fire-proof. These experiments have practically closed the question. The religious world are still divided on this question. One claiming that our future life depends upon a touch from previous existing life. The other that we are as dual beings possessed of inherent immortality in the shape of an immortal soul. If Biogenesis is true in the natural world it is as true in the spiritual world. One gives God the glory of being the author of our future life through the second Adam. The other destroys God's plan of working out our own salvation. In the religious world those who oppose Biogenesis claim that the future life is something added to the natural or Adamic life. That a man may grow gradually better until he grows into the spiritual life. They claim that it is the normal and appropriate development of the natural man. Theirs is the doctrine of a spiritual evolution. Biogenesis opposed this whole theory and claims that the spiritual life is the gift of the living Spirit. Man in his regeneration is a new creature born from above, in the resurrection which will take place when Christ comes. If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. Rom. viii. 11, 12. In this Scripture life only from pre-existing life is most conclusively taught. His Spirit that raised up Christ from the dead must dwell in us if we have our bodies quickened. The whole doctrine of the future life depends upon this truth. John, the beloved disciple teaches this same truth when he says, "He that hath the Son hath life, he that hath not the Son hath not life,' that is the future life. The Syriac translation of this text adds a new thought. "He that taketh hold of the Son taketh hold of life, he that taketh not hold of the Son taketh not hold of life." This teaches that this life is only obtainable by an act on our part. We must take hold of the means that God has put in our power. Prof. Drummond from whose work we are gleaning, gives a very conclusive argument in the arrangement of two great kingdoms of nature. The inorganic and the organic. The mineral world comprises the inorganic, the plant and animal comprising the organic. There is a gulf fixed between these two kingdoms. The inorganic of itself can never rise to the organic. It will forever remain inorganic unless it is touched by some mysterious power from above. Man in his mortal state represents the inorganic in the natural world. He will ever remain under the dominion of death unless that "Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead quickens his mortal body," and causes him to live. The plant world by its roots dips down into the inorganic soil and converts it into organic matter. The tree draws from the earth the element that builds up its whole structure. The wood, the bark, the leaves are the product of this mysterious process. The sap of the tree reaching to all parts of it leaves. Nature makes no mistakes in distributing the bark and leaves but each has its proper place. All parts of this tree were once inorganic matter and only became organic through a mysterious power dipping down from above and permitting it to spring into living matter. There can be no gradual growth of the inorganic to the organic. It receives its life from pre-existing life. God, the Creator of all things is the source of this mysterious life. If we ever become regenerated it must be a dipping down of this same mysterious force. In the language of Jesus to Nicodemus, Except a man be born again (from above) he cannot see the kingdom of God. Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. This was a new doctrine to Nicodemus. He could not understand how a man could be born again. Yet Jesus taught him plainly that such an event must take place. The religious world is divided on this subject. One claiming that the birth here spoken of is a moral or spiritual change of the Adamic man in this life. It is a gradual development of the natural man into a spiritual man. In this Scripture Jesus taught a new creation, a regeneration through Christ, a resurrection from the dead. In this we have the natural birth or the birth of the flesh. In this we have a begettal, a growth and a birth. Each in the order in which it is mentioned. The spirit birth has the same order. A begettal through a belief of the gospel, a begettal through the incorruptible seed which Peter declares to be the Word of God which liveth and abideth forever, the birth of the water and of the Spirit is our act by which we come in contact with the Spirit which is found in the Word. Paul says, Ye are complete in him, in whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ. Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. Paul says in Rom. iv. 11, that Abraham received the sign of circumcision as a seal of the righteousness of faith. Now is it not true that our baptism is a seal of the righteousness of our faith that we must have toward God. Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into his death. In this act of baptism there is shown forth a burial and a planting. The seed to germinate must be covered or planted with earth. Sunshine and moisture causes it to spring into life. Then follows the growth until it produces a ripe ear of corn. We here have the death of the old or Adamic man and the new man in Christ Jesus. We are then admonished to walk ye in him.

In the discussion of this subject we have labored to show that our future life comes from a touch of pre-existing life. That life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. Col. iii. 3, 4. May it be our lot to seek for glory, immortality, eternal life when Jesus shall come.

Your Brother in the Blessed Hope.
D. C. Rogers.

"Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice." Phil. iv. 4.

There are conditions and circumstances in nearly every life when we do not know when to rejoice, how to throw off the sadness—gloom—almost despair, and still there is hardly a condition but it might be ours. The apostle had Jesus in deep sympathy trouble himself, but it was not self he was thinking of, but his beloved brethren, that they might be faithful, "Stand fast in the Lord." He was willing to be abased, hungry, persecuted, but "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," was his stronghold, his great help in hours of spiritual need. And these same words, beloved in the Lord, must be our tower of strength these troublous times. God only knows how hard it is to see those we had hoped to lean upon in the gospel work, with gifts and talents God given, leaving the field in the midst of the battle, at a time when it seems God could use them best. For a moment it makes the strongest grow weak, paralyzes their efforts, lips almost refuse to pray, the hard efforts of a life time seem as nothing. How can we rejoice in this? Why, loved ones, God is at the helm, he has said there would be a falling away, he has cautioned us of the perils of the last days. He knows all about our struggles to keep the blessed truth moving on, and has given us this warning, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." See, dear ones, according as you work. Then we can rejoice that the Lord draweth near. Yes, there are many things in the gloom to make us rejoice. When we see dear old Bro. Crozier and wife love the gathering together of the brethren well enough to come on the midnight train to be among the gathered ones, and to listen to him as he refreshed our minds concerning the many Bible veterans of the cross. On the Saturday following, to see his earnestness in the gospel at the age of 87—this makes us "Rejoice in the Lord." Then again we rejoiced to listen Sunday P. M. of Conference to our own loved young Brother V. Blakley, not two years old in "the faith," deliver so able a sermon as he did on "love." The sermon coming just before the sacrament service was very applicable and was well received. With Bro. Blakleys educational advantages, and naturally bright mind and willingness to do his best, we are rejoicing and hoping eventually to have another added to the workers, some of whom must soon drop from the roll, and with others be numbered with those "asleep in Jesus." And we had great reason to be glad when we heard of a meeting last Sunday in Bro. Blakley's house, and that he with Bro. Crozier's help contemplated holding meetings at stated periods in Grand Rapids. July 8th they have promised to meet at Sister Hoyt's, June 24th Bro. Blakley goes to Jamestown to speak, July 1st at Dutton church, while we fill other places. So in spite of dark places the Sun of righteousness pierces the darkness and with Paul we can say, "Rejoice in the Lord alway, and again I say rejoice!"

Dear Readers of The Restitution:

To those of you who expect to spend a part of the summer at a resort or camping, I should like to offer a suggestion, and to those who are planning to stay at home as well. Last August it was my privilege to attend a Conference of the Church of God in Eastport, Michigan and I was so captivated with the lake upon which it is situated and the picturesque scenery surrounding it that I want to tell you about it. Torch Lake, eighteen miles long and from one to two wide, is one of the most beautiful I have ever seen. It lies among the hills of Antrim Co., and Eastport is at its northern extremity. At this point Grand Traverse Bay is only about a mile distant, a fine walk through the woods and from the surrounding hills of Eastport one can look out across the Bay to the west and see Seelaman Point. My first view of Torch Lake led my thoughts back in history to blue Galilee and Christ teaching upon its banks, and I thought, "What an ideal spot in which to rest, meditate and feast upon the teaching of Christ." This physical and spiritual treat which I enjoyed last summer is a joy never to be forgotten, and one which I shall wish to repeat yearly, and so I wish to suggest that you go there for rest and refreshing this summer. The Conference is not to be held there, but a Bible school instead in the interests of the Church of God. When I heard of it I wanted to tell everybody what a haven of rest is to found at Torch Lake. It is cool and clear as crystal, an ideal place for bathing, rowing, fishing and launch excursions. Horton Beach on Grand Traverse Bay only a mile distant is an added inducement and more than all is the opportunity afforded by the Bible school. I know that any one spending their vacation at such a place and in such a manner cannot help returning with a feeling of time well spent and money well invested. Try it and see.

Your Sister in Christ,
Rilla Richardson.

In Memorium.

The brevity of human life was forcibly realized by us when on June 7th I was called to the phone to hear this message, "Sister Woodward, Harry Holley is dead, and they want one of you for Sunday to preach funeral sermon." My husband and I were about to start for Indiana Conference. Our plans suddenly changed. It was decided he should go on to the Conferences, and I to the heavy-hearted sorrowing mother and children. Thirteen years ago, when the youngest of 7 children was but two years old, the mother was left to battle with life for them. But a brave and loving heart beat in each childish form, and the two older boys, Wesley and Harry, lifted the burden from mother and patiently, lovingly, earnestly bent to the task of supporting the family. Harry went west 5 years ago, hoping to do better financially. Very recently he wrote to the anxious, loving mother, "Only a few days more, mother, this job will be completed and I will come to you, and we will again be happy." But he had over-estimated his strength. Typhoid fever overtook him and a few days in the hospital at Search Light, Nevada, and the bright hopeful life was ended. The faithful head of the family and oldest brother Wesley hastened to his bedside as soon as he heard of his sickness, but too late, he had been dead 12 hours, and as soon as possible the sad journey home began. He was carried with teams 65 miles, where his body was prepared for the long, long journey home—reaching Blanchard, Mich., June 11th. O those long anxious days, and when at last we look at the once happy, joyous face, now so emaciated we could realize most forcibly the mortality of man. Truly as the quivering lips of the mother uttered his name—we could voice her words, "One of my strong towers of strength has fallen." He was the first one of the children to die—all the rest but Carl who misunderstood the telegram from far off Washington, were present at the funeral. Harry was born in Oakland County, Mich., Jan. 13th, 1879. Died in Search Light, Nevada, June 4th, 1906. He with several others made the good confession several years ago at our meetings, and was baptised by Bro. Woodward, as was also Sister Holly and Wesley, the eldest, and her two daughters. Never in my life have I witnessed such untiring, loving, tender devotion, as has always been shown Sister Holly by her children, and at this time their tender solicitude for her was something wonderful. God will reward them and may each child look to mother's God for comfort. We tried to give consolation from Christ's own words from John xiv. 19, "Because I live ye shall live also."

Obituary.

Roady Starkey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Starkey, passed from this life to sleep till Jesus' comes on June 16, 1906. Little Roady was born Feb. 10, 1896, lived 10 years, 3 months and 27 days. She leaves father, mother, one sister, three brothers, and grand parents, aunt and friends to mourn her loss. The writer spoke words of comfort from 1 Corinthians xv.

A Beautiful Parable.

Krummacher, in his Suffering Savior, quotes from an old author a beatiful parable, as illustrative of the mockery before Herod's tribunal in the last tragedy of our Savior's sorrows:—

"Adam was a king gloriously arrayed, and ordained to reign. But sin cast him down from his lofty throne, and caused him the loss of his purple robe, his diadem and sceptre. But after his eyes were opened to perceive how much he had lost, and when his looks were anxiously directed to the earth in search of it, he saw thorns and thistles spring up on the spot where the crown fell from his head; the sceptre changed as if to mock the fallen monarch, into a fragile reed: and instead of the purple robe, his deceived hand took up a robe of mockery from the dust. The poor, dissapointed being hung down his head with grief, when a voice exclaimed, 'Look up!' He did so, and lo! what an astonishing vision presented itself to his eyes! Before him stood a dignified and mysterious man, who had gathered up the piercing thorns from the ground, and wound them around his head for a crown; he had wrapped himself in the robe of mockery, and taken the reed, the emblem of weakness, into his own hand. 'Who art thou, wondrous being?' Inquired the progenitor of the human race, astonished, and received the heart-cheering reply, 'I am the King of kings, who acting as thy representative, am restoring to thee the paradisaical jewels thou hast lost!' Our delighted first father then bowed himself gratefully and reverently in the dust; and after being clothed with the skin of the sacrificed animal, fathomed the depths of the words of Jehovah, 'Adam is become like one of us.'"

Life At Home.

For all of us our life at home must constitute a great part of that life in which, by patient continuance in well-doing, we have to seek for glory, honor, and immortality; for many of us it practically constitutes the whole.

There are millions of women, millions of girls, to say nothing of little children, who have no life worth speaking of beyond the boundaries of the family. Whatever fidelity to God, whatever love for Christ, whatever justice, whatever kindness, generosity and gentleness they are to illustrate in their spirit and conduct must be illustrated there. And even men who have their business and their profession to follow during the greater part of the day find occasion in their home life for forms of well-doing and ill-doing that are not possible elsewhere. I like a broad and rich life for myself—full of varied interests; and I should like to see the lives of most men, and of most women too, animated by the inspiration and refreshed by the free air of activities and interests outside their own home. But no shining achievements elsewhere can palliate the guilt of coldness, injustice, ill-temper in the family; and the noblest public virtues have roots in the gentleness, the industry, of self-sacrifice and the truthfulness of which only those who are nearest to us have any knowledge.

Beautiful Extract.

The late eminent judge Allen Park, once said at a public meeting:—We live in the midst of blessings until we are utterly insensible of their greatness, and of the source from which they flow. We speak of our civilization, our arts, our freedom, our laws; and forget entirely how large a share is due to Christianity. Blot Christianity out of man's history, and what could his laws have been—what his civilization? Christianity is mixed up with our very being and our very life; there is not a familiar object around you which does not wear a different aspect, because the light of Christian love is on it. Not a law which does not owe its truth and gentleness to Christianity—not a custom which cannot be traced in all its holy and healthful parts, to the gospel."

There is some place in which we may all work—rich and poor, young and old. Coveting earnestly that best of all gifts, love, we shall not be long in finding opportunities. While those endowed with great intellectual abilities are grappling with deep questions and interests that present themselves to mature mind and thought, gentle, loving souls are bringing as deep thoughts into the mind of childhood, and leading the young heart into the way of life.

Jesus' Love.

Having loved his own which were in the world he loved them to the end.—John xiii. 1.

The strength of affection is a proof, not of the worthiness of the object, but of the largeness of the soul which loves. Love descends, not ascends. The might of a river depends not on the quality of the soil through which it passes, but on the inexhaustibleness and depth of the spring from which it proceeds. The greater mind cleaves to the smaller with more force than the other to it. A parent loves the child more than the child loves the parent; and partly because the parent's heart is larger, not because the child is worthier. The Savior loved his disciples infinitely more than his disciples loved him, because his heart was larger.—F. W. Robertson.

Poetry.

What is Your Hope?

Now what is your hope? saith the Scriptures,
Yea, what is your hope? O vain man,
Is it that; that in time of deep trouble
Will gird you and cause you to stand
Firm and true to the cause of your Master
Though foes may you thickly surround
And friends turn to you the cold shoulder
And none to stand by you be found?

Just think what your Master endured
When h's friends all forsook him and fled,
And one swore he never had known him,
He forgot what his Master had said,
Before the cock crows you'll deny me
Three times; and the look that he gave
Was one that caused tears to flow freely,
Though Peter was ever so brave.

Paul's hope was the hope of the gospel
God preached it to Abraham so expressed,
When he said, That in thee, and in thy seed
Shall all families and nations be blessed.
He said, when arrayed before rulers,
For this hope I am bound with a chain,
But I count all things dross to be able
The incorruptible crown to obtain.

This hope to the soul is an anchor
Sure and steadfast and reaches within
The veil, whither Jesus [illegible]
To intercede for us children that sin,
And then when he comes with his angels
To reign on his glorious throne
He'll remember his saints of all ages,
And say to those righteous ones, Come.

Inherit the kingdom I promised
To those who have faithfully trod
The paths I marked out for my children,
That leads to the city of God.
With Abraham, Isaac and Jacob,
And the hosts of the prophets of old
He'll remember and grant you a mansion
In the beautiful City of Gold.

also reap," take two bulbs, say one a red and the other a yellow canna, tell the class what they are. Ask whether, if you plant a red bulb, it will produce a yellow flower. They will reply, "Never." Ask whether if a boy sows lies, he can reap truth, or if he sows drunkenness he will reap sobriety?

The unseen power of the Holy Spirit may be illustrated by the use of a magnet. Jesus said, "And if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." The Bible is our guide to the "better land." The Bible is to us a compass. You may explain how a compass works and how it guides across the mighty deep, in light and darkness, in mist and in fog. If, however, they disregard the indications of the needle, and danger and disaster awaits them. So through all the experiences of life the Bible is our compass. If we follow where it points we are safe. The man who disregards the Bible will surely come at last to disaster.

Doctrinal subjects in senior work may be illustrated by means of charts, such as a chart on "life and death." Tell the use of the circle as illustrating eternity, immortality, the black lines going down without hope. The red lines are life lines.

Chronological order of events is more easily fixed in the mind by use of charts—important periods in Bible history. In taking an age long view of history we see crisis, points that begin epochs, dispensations, ages. The Holy Land and a study of its conditions—political and social, may also be illustrated by charts and maps. Places and dates are best remembered by such means. Of all the lands of the earth this land is the most interesting. In our own generation every inch of it has been surveyed. Exact science has constructed a map that shows every mountain, valley, dell, river, lake, spring, city and village, and every altitude and depression and the correct distance from place to place. On this raised map we have Palestine exactly as it is. It is a universal land that produces a universal book. The land and the Book match. Wonderful, a land center of the world's life. Who chose this wonderful land, this exceptional country? "The Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation." Psa. cxxxii. 13. "I will make her wilderness like Eden." "Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God." "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem, they shall prosper that love thee." The Bible, the gem of literature, the wonderful Word of God, the people, the miracle of all times, the Book, the land, the people should be studied. It is God's way to lead our feet into the paths of righteousness. "Search the Scriptures." "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth." "We are workers together with God." We are living in the days of preparation for the coming to earth of the glorified Messiah. Let us make haste to do the work the Master has for us to do." "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," was the commission given, not to angels, but to men, "Teaching them to observe whatsoever things I have commanded you. And lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

HARRIET E. BOICE.

The Little Horn.

HIS DESCRIPTIVE LIST.

Daniel vii. The Vision. American Version.

Verse 8. There came up among them another horn, a little one, before which three of the first horns were plucked by the roots. In this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man.

20. And a mouth speaking great things. Whose look was more stout than his fellows.

INTERPRETATION.

24. Another shall arise after them. He shall be diverse from the former. He shall put down three kings.

25. He shall speak words against the Most High. Shall wear out the saints of the Most High. He shall think to change the times and the law and they shall be given into his hand.

THE LITTLE HORN. HIS TIME, HIS OWN SEASON. DAN. VII.

10. The judgment was set and the books were opened.

11. I beheld at that time because of the voice of the great words which the horn spoke. I beheld even till the beast was slain and his body destroyed, and it was given to be burned with fire.

21. The same horn made war with the saints.

22. And prevailed against them, until the ancient of days come, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the time come that the saints possessed the kingdom.

25. They shall be given into his hand until a time and times and half a time.

26. But the judgment shall be set, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end.

DAN. VIII. THE VISION.

9. Out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great toward the south and toward the east and toward the glorious land.

10. And it waxed great even to the host of heaven and some of the host and some of the stars it cast down to the ground and trampled upon them.

11. It magnified itself even to the prince of the host and it took away from him the continual burnt-offering and the place of his sanctuary was cast down.

12. And the host was given over to it together with the continual burnt-offering through transgression. It cast down truth to the ground, it did its pleasure and prospered.

FIRST INTERPRETATION.

23. A king of fierce countenance and understanding dark sentences shall stand up.

24. His power shall be mighty, but not by his own power. He shall destroy wonderfully. Shall prosper and do his pleasure. Shall destroy the mighty ones and the holy people.

25. Through his policy he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; he shall magnify himself in his heart, and in their security shall he destroy many. He shall also stand up against the Prince of princes. He shall be broken without hand.

SECOND INTERPRETATION. DAN. IX.

26. The Prince that shall come.

27. And upon the wing of abomination shall One come that maketh desolate and even unto the full end, and that determined, shall wrath be poured out upon the desolate.

THIRD INTERPRETATION. DAN. XI.

21. And in his place shall stand up a contemptible person, to whom they had not given the honor of the kingdom. He shall come in time of security, and shall obtain the kingdom by flatteries.

22. And the overwhelming forces shall be overwhelmed from before him and be broken, yea also the prince of the covenant.

23. After the league made with him he shall work deceitfully, for he shall come up and become strong with a small people.

24. In time of security shall he come even upon the fattest places of the province he shall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers fathers; he shall scatter among them prey and spoil and substance. He shall devise his devices against the strongholds even for a time.

25. He shall stir up his power and his courage against the king of the south with a great army; and the king of the south shall war in battle with an exceeding great and mighty army; but he shall not stand for they shall devise devices against

26. Him, yea they that eat of his dainties shall destroy him and his army shall overflow.

27. And as for both these kings their hearts shall be to do mischief. They shall speak lies at one table but it shall not prosper.

28. Then shall he return into his land with great substance; and his heart shall be against the holy covenant; and he shall do his pleasure, and return to his own land.

29. At the time appointed he shall return and come into the south; but it shall not be in the

30. Latter time as it was in the former, for the ships of Chittem shall come against him, therefore he shall be grieved and shall return and have indignation against the holy covenant, and shall do his pleasure. He shall even return and have regard unto them that forsake the holy covenant.

31. And forces shall stand on his part, they shall profane the sanctuary, even the fortress, and shall take away the continual burnt offering, and shall set up the abomination that maketh desolate.

32. Such as do wickedly against the covenant shall he pervert by flatteries.

33. The king shall do according to his will, he shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every god and shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper till the indignation be accomplished.

37. Neither shall he regard the gods of his father nor the desire of women, nor regard any god, for he shall magnify himself above all.

38. In his place shall he honor the god of fortresses, and a god whom his fathers knew not shall he honor with gold and silver and with precious stones and with pleasant things.

39. He shall deal with the strongest fortresses by the help of a foreign god; whoever acknowledges him he will increase with glory. He shall cause them to rule over many and and shall divide the land for a price.

40. At the time of the end shall the king of the south contend with him, and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind with chariots and with horsemen and with many ships he shall enter into the countries and shall overflow and pass through.

41. He shall enter into the glorious land and many countries shall be overthrown but these shall be delivered out of his hand. Edom and Moab and the chief of the children of Ammon.

42. He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries and the land of Egypt shall not escape.

43. But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver and over all the precious things of Egypt, and the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps.

44. But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him, and he shall go forth with great fury to destroy and utterly to sweep away many.

45. And he shall plant the tents of his palace between the sea and the glorious holy mountain, yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him.

THE TIME OF THE LITTLE HORN, "HIS "OWN SEASON." DAN. VIII.

13. How long shall be the vision concerning the continual burnt offering, and the transgression that maketh desolate, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?

14. And he said unto me unto two thousand and three hundred evenings and mornings, then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.

17. Understand O Son of Man, for the vision belongeth to the time of the end.

19. Behold I will make thee know what shall be in the latter time of the indignation for it belongeth to the appointed time of the end.

23. In the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full.

26. The vision of the evenings and mornings which hath been told is true but shut thou up the vision for it belongeth to many days to come.

DAN. IX.

26. After the three-score and two week shall the anointed one be cut off—and the people of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary, and the end thereof shall be with a flood even unto the end shall be war, desolations are determined.

27. And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the oblation to cease.

DAN. X.

14. Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days for the vision is yet for many days.

DAN. XI.

27. Yet the end shall be at the time appointed.

29. At the time appointed he shall return and come into the south.

35. And some of them that are wise shall fall—even to the time of the time.

36. He shall prosper till the indignation be accomplished.

40. At the time of the end shall the king of the south contend with him, and the king of the north shall come against him.

DAN. XII.

1. At that time shall Michael stand up.

4. Shut up the words and seal the book even to the time of the end.

6. How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?

7. It shall be for a time times and a half, and when he shall have made an end of breaking in pieces the power of the holy people all these things shall be finished.

9. The words are shut up and sealed till the time of the end.

11. From the time that the continual burnt-offering shall be taken away and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.

The true little horn will exactly fit every inspired statement concerning him.

I send the above to call attention to some of the many statements about the little horn, especially those of the time of his rise as to an end.

Hiremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 38.

1. In that time, hath the Lord said, I shall be for a God unto the race of Israel and they will be unto me for a laity

2. In this wise hath the Lord said, I have found heat in a waste-place in those destroyed with a sword; Go and do not destroy Israel.

3. The Lord from afar hath appeared unto him: with an eternal way of loving have I loved thee; therefore have I drawn thee into feelings of pity;

4. Because I shall build thee and thou wilt have been built thou virgin Israel; yet again wilt thou take thy tympanium and go out with a synagogue of those who make merry.

5. Because ye have planted vineyards on mountains of Samaria; ye have planted and sung praise,

6. Because it is a day of allotment for those who are being excused on mountains of Ephraim; arise and go up into Sioon unto the Lord your God.

7. Because in this wise hath the Lord said unto Jakoob; Rejoice and hail upon a Head of nations; make it heard and sing praise; say the Lord hath saved his laity, the remnant of Israel.

8 Lo, I am leading them from the north, and I shall gather them together from a farthest of the earth in a festival phasek; and he will produce offspring, a vast multitude and they will return here.

9. With lamentation they went out and with consolation shall I lead them up camping along canals of water in a right way, and they shall not be led astray in it; because I have become a father for Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.

10. May ye have heard words of the Lord, ye nations, and may ye have announced them unto the islands afar off; May ye have said, He who winnowed Israel will also gather him together, and will watch to guard him as doth the one who pastureth his flock.

11. Because the Lord hath redeemed Jakoob he hath delivered him out of the hand of those who were depriving him;

12. And they will come and they will have rejoiced on Mount Sioon, and they will come unto the Lord's good things, unto a land of wheat and of wine and of fruits and of cattle and sheep; and their soul will be like a tree in fruitage, and they shall not hunger any more.

13. Then will virgins have joy in a synagogue of men and elder women have joy and I shall turn their sorrow into joy and I shall cause them to be those who make merry;

14. I shall magnify and intoxicate the soul of the priests, sons of Levi, and my laity will have been filled with my good things.

15. In this wise hath the Lord said, A voice of threning and lamentation and woe was heard in Hram. Rachael lamenting for her sons and would not cease because they are not.

16. In this wise hath the Lord said, Let thy voice cease from lamentation and thine eyes from thy tears, because there are wages for thy works, and they will return them from a land of enemies,

17. A solitary one with thy offspring.

18. I have heard a report of Ephraim suffering woe, saying, Thou hast chastened me and I have chastened myself; Like a yearling-bullock I did not teach myself; return me and I shall return, because thou art the Lord my God.

19. Because after my captivity I repented, and after I had comprehended I sighed over days of shame, and I showed thee that I had received reproach from my youth up.

20. A beloved son was Ephraim, a child who delighted me, because my words were in him, with remembrance shall I have called him to mind; for this reason have I made haste unto him; with mercy shall I show him mercy saith the Lord.

21. Take thine own stand for Sioon; furnish aid, give thy heart to the shoulders; by the way thou didst go return thou virgin Israel, return into thy cities thou sorrowing one.

22. Until when wilt thou not return thou dishonored daughter? Because the Lord hath generated salvation in a new plantation; in the use of salvation will men come round about.

23. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, Yet again will they say this word in a land of Jouda and in his cities, when I shall return his captivity; blessed be the Lord upon his justified, his sacred mountain;

24. And those dwelling in the cities of Jouda and in all his land together with his husbandry blessed are they and it will have been lifted up with a flock.

25. Because I have intoxicated every thirsty soul and every hungry soul I have filled.

26. (Prophet speaks for himself) Therefore did I awake and see (mental seeing) and my sleep became sweet to me.

27. Therefore lo, days are coming, saith the Lord, and I shall sow Israael and Jouda, a seed of mankind and a seed of domestic-animal kind;

28. And it will be even as I awakened over them to tear down and afflict, just so shall I awaken over them to build up and plant down saith the Lord.

29. In those days they shall not say, The fathers ate a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge;

30. But rather each one in his own sin will die judicially and the teeth of the one who ate the sour-grape will be set on edge.

31. Lo, days are coming and I shall have covenanted a new covenant with the house of Israael and with the House of Jouda,

32. Not according to the covenant which I covenanted with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of a land of Aiguptos, because they did not abide in my covenant and I disregarded them, saith the Lord;

33. Because this is my covenant which I shall have covenanted with the house of Israael after those days, saith the Lord; giving I shall give my laws to their perceptive thought and upon their hearts shall I write them, and I shall be unto them for a God, and they will be unto me for a laity;

34. And they shall not teach each one his fellow-citizen, and each one his brother, saying, Know the Lord; because they will all apprehend me from their small to their great; because I shall be favorable to their iniquities and their sins I shall have remembered no more.

No 35th and 36th verses here but later in the chapter.

37. If the canopy be lifted up on high and the foundation of the earth be laid down below I shall not reject for want of value the race of Israael, saith the Lord, for all the things which they have done.

35. In this wise saith the Lord who gave the sun for the day-light, a moon and stars for light for the night and clamor in a sea, and its waves sound deep, an all-controlling Lord is his name;

36. If these laws cease from before my face, saith the Lord, the race of Israael will also cease from becoming a nation before my face all the days.

The 37th verse already given above.

38. Lo, days are coming, saith the Lord, and a city will have been built for the Lord from the tower of Anameel unto a gateway of the corner;

39. And the diametric measure thereof will go out from in front of them unto hills of Gareb, and will have been encompassed round about with chosen stones;

40. And all those of Asareemooth as far as Nachal Kedroon unto a corner-gateway for horses at the east will be a sanctification unto the Lord, and it shall no more leave off and it shall not be removed unto the animate age.

COMMENT.

What purports to be this same prophecy is given in the 31st chapter of the C. V. and R. V. but it varies so materially in almost every verse that the reader should compare verse by verse. The whole chapter is strongly Messianic and much of it is quoted into different portions of the New Covenant Scriptures like the "Rachael lamenting for her children"—in the 2nd of Matthew. The ultimate restoration of Israael to Palestine could not be made more specific in language than it is in this chapter, and that Christianity is to bring it about is also made clear in what is said about "the New Covenant" in this immediate connection and the application of it made in Hebrews where it is quoted entire.

CHAS. GARDNER.

An Arab's Testimony.

One Sunday evening, not many years ago, a party of college students was gathered in the room of one of their number. They were intellectual leaders of their University, bright young men, and their conversation sparkled with wit and humor. Perhaps it was the influence of the day, or perhaps the sermon they had just heard from the old college president, but after awhile the talk began to wander from the usual topics of football and baseball, to more serious subjects, and finally, with the temerity of youth, they began to discuss the existence of God.

One young man professed to be a disciple of one skeptical writer, another of another; a third had a theory of atheism evolved from his own brain, while a fourth fondly clung to the teachings of the German deists. Talking, arguing, and counterarguing, they had well-nigh disposed of Christianity to their own satisfaction, when a slight young man, with a pale earnest face and honest blue eyes, sprang to his feet.

"I can't bear to hear you fellows talk that way; you know it is all rubbish as well as I do! All of you have been brought up in a Christian land, and deep down in your hearts you know that there is a God; you can't help knowing it. I can't argue the question with you for you are all cleverer than I, but there is a little story which seems to me to prove the existence of a God beyond a doubt. I dare say you have all heard it, for it isn't new, and I am not much of a story-teller, but it runs something like this:

"Once a French scientist, an atheist, had occasion to travel across the great desert. He employed as his guide and companion on the journey a certain Arab chief, a man renowned for his knowledge of the country, and personal integrity. Day by day as they traveled over the burning sand, the Arab at certain appointed hours would halt his camel, take a bit of carpet from his saddlebag, and spreading it upon the sand would kneel with his face toward Mecca, and repeat his Moslem prayer. Day by day the Frenchman watched him in scornful silence, and at last one day he said:

"'Sheik, why do you take the trouble to dismount and go through that prayer? How do you know that there is a God to hear your prayer?'

"'How do I know there is a God?' repeated the Moslem. 'How do I know? Why, sire, last night while I slept a traveler passed my tent door, I did not see him, I did not hear him, but when I rose this morning and looked out, I knew that a man had passed in the night, for I saw his footprints in the sand. And when I see that,' said the Arab, rising to his full height, and pointing to the sun, 'I know that God is, and that he is near. I do not see him, I do not hear him, but I see his footprint; it is the setting sun, and I bow down and worship.'

"This, fellows, is only the witness of a Moslem, a heathen, but what utterance of sage or philosopher could give a clearer, more decisive, more noble proof of the existence and greatness of God?"

We wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

Announcement.

The 19th Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the beautiful Campground at Waterloo, Iowa, August 16th to 26th, inclusive. Rates of one and one-third fare from all points in Iowa have been granted by all railroads; going tickets to be purchased any time from August 17th to 23rd, inclusive, and holders of Certificates for tickets bought during that time will be entitled to return ticket for one-third fare if bought before August 30th. A certificate must be secured with each ticket bought.

Bring straw ticks and a few comforters. Tents will be furnished free. Board at our Dining Hall 25 cents per day.

We expect to have the following preaching brethren with us: A. J. Eychaner, S. J. Lindsay, L. E. Conner, Almus Adams, H. M. Lucas, G. Eldred Marsh, John Garton, and others.

For entire program of meeting with full instructions, etc., address G. P. Allard, Corresponding Secretary, Box 86, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.
EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

P. NEILL, Pres.
J. C. THOMPSON, Sec'y.

The Central Washington Conference will meet at Waterville, Washington, June 29, 30 and July 1, 1906. All brothers and sisters who are interested in carrying on the Master's work are earnestly desired at these Conference meetings. The Master, at his departure, gave us the command, "Occupy until I come." In what manner are we doing his work? He is soon coming to take an account of our stewardship will he say, "Well done, good and faithful servant enter into the kingdom." Dear brothers and sisters, may we make these lessons living realities and show to those around us that we are surely endeavoring to keep his commandments.

Industries Wanted.

The Chicago & North Western Railway has information from desirable points on its lines that industries of various kinds are desired. The fine prospect of a bounteous harvest insures the continuance of the large business of former years and is causing many communities to make strong effort to secure new industries. Among the establishments wanted are iron and woodworking concerns, cereal mills, canning works, cold storage plants and mills of various kinds, as well as mercantile establishments. Requests for particulars addressed to the Industrial Department of the C. & N. W. Ry., Chicago, will be promptly attended to.—July 11

WHEN YOUR TIME IS OUT PLEASE RENEW.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." DR. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

T. J. DANIEL.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.05 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Will All Men be Saved?

I have written and published, and now offer for sale at ten cents per copy, a book of 80 pages, which is intended to be, as indicated in the sub-title, "A Consideration of the Doctrine of Universal Salvation." Some of the divisions are, An Introductory section, A section treating the historic origin of the doctrine, Tendencies and effects, God's methods of dealing with men, The Savior of all men, Who will have all men to be saved, The paid debt, the sovereignty of God.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

A four-page tract in the German language, by Brother M. Joblin of Cleveland, O. Subject, "What Must I do to be Saved?" After getting the opinion of one who understands this language, we have no hesitation in recommending it as simply all right. Get some for your German friends. Send to M. Joblin, 626 Woodland Ave., Cleveland, O. Price 75 cts per 100.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference:

I have moved to the state of Oregon, so all letters in the interest of the conference work will be sent to J. P. Bitner, Severance, Kansas.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Each Lecture of 16 pages $1 per 100 post free; or an assortment of the whole, same price. Address M. Joblin, 624 Woodland Av., Cleveland, O.

Grace Abounding.

Kind hearts are here, yet would the tenderest one
Have limits to its mercy, God has none.
But man's forgiveness may be true and sweet,
But yet he stoops to give it; more complete
Is love that lays forgiveness at thy feet
And pleads with thee to raise it. Only heaven
Means eternal rest, not vanquished, when it says
"Forgiven."

Man is Mortal. No. 3.

Many of those who profess to believe in a future life take no notice of the fact that the Scriptures very plainly teach that there is a present or animal life, and there is a future or eternal life. In 1 Tim. iv. 8, Paul says, Bodily exercise profiteth but little, but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. This text very plainly teaches that the life that now is and that which is to come are very different. They come from two different source. The life of that "now is" is a product of the birth of the flesh. The life that is to come will be the product of the birth of the spirit through the resurrection from the dead. Jesus said to Nicodemus "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Here are two births spoken of distinct and apart the one from the other, each producing different results. One is man born of woman of few days and full of trouble. The other born of God or from above and with a nature like unto the angels and cannot die. If we have borne the image of the earthy we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. And so it is written, The first man was made a living soul, the last Adam was a living Spirit (a vivifying spirit," Syriac trans. Adam, the first man, became a living soul; the second Adam (became) a quickening Spirit. The spiritual was not first; but the animal, and then the spiritual. I wish my readers to note the fact that the two, animal and spiritual are entirely separate. There can be no evolution or gradual growth from the animal to the spiritual but the animal ceases to exist and the spiritual is a new creation. Created anew in Christ Jesus.

The only growth that can take place in the animal is to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. We must add to our faith the Christian graces. If these be in us and abound they make us that we are neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. This is our education for positions in the kingdom of God. If we do these things we shall never fall.

We have the truth concerning the two lives taught in the following Scriptures. Psuche is a Greek word and should be translated natural or animal life. Zoe is also a Greek word and is translated life, and is the only word that is modified by the words eternal and everlasting. We find them in the following texts, Jesus says, I am the (zoe) life. John xiv. 6. He that hath the Son hath (zoe) life. 1 John v. 12. Your (zoe) life is hid in God with Christ when Christ who is our (zoe) life shall appear we shall appear with him in glory. Col. iii. 3, 4. He that loveth his life (psuche) loseth it, and he that hateth his (psuche) life in this world shall keep (preserve) it unto eternal life (zoen aionion). As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so shall the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting (zoe) life. For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life (zoe). John iii. 14, 15, 16. This life "to come" is produced by faith in the only true God, and Jesus Christ his Son. The gospel of Christ is the only power of God unto salvation. And only to those who believe it. In 1 Cor. iv. 15, Paul says, For in Jesus Christ I have begotten you through the gospel.

No one has ever had the good seed planted in any other way than that spoken of in these Scriptures. The gospel of Christ becomes the power of God through faith in the gospel. We are begotten unto eternal life through the gospel. Those who reject the gospel of the kingdom of God reject the life that comes through faith and obedience. The doctrine that the future life is a product of the natural life is a snare and an untruth. There is nothing in the natural life that can produce the spiritual man. The natural man has no life higher than natural life to impart. He is the inorganic substance and must be touched by that mysterious power which produces a new creature. The old man is put to death when he is buried in the liquid grave. Here is the place in which the old or Adamic man is crucified. The new man comes to life in the act of being raised from this grave. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection. Knowing this that the old man man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is free (mar. justified) from sin. Rom. vi. 5-7.

The doctrine of the immortality of the soul denies the fact that there is such a thing as death. Death they say is a separation of soul and body. The body dies but the soul lives. They argue there is an outer and an inner man. One is the natural man, the other is the spiritual man. Why not accept the Bible definition of death? Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return. We can only determine death by life. The dust man was given life. His environments were such that he could live so long as he had the privilege of eating. "Eating thou shalt eat. Dying thou shalt die," was the law under which the man was placed. He might eat so long as he was obedient. The only power he had to live forever was the tree of life. If his environments to the tree of life had have been properly adjusted he could have lived for ever. Yet we have the most conclusive proof that he did not eat of it. Therefore, his environments were disturbed and he would naturally die.

Herbert Spencer defines life as "The continuous adjustment of internal relations to external relations." Just so long as we are able to partake of food and digest and assimilate the same we live. When this relation is disturbed we cease to live. It is a physiological fact that the food must be assimilated before it can build up waste tissues of the body. The chemist cannot supply this. Food cannot be prepared by the chemist and injected into the veins and continue life. The internal relations are not adjusted to external relations, therefore death occurs. Death is therefore the antinomy of life.

We are in direct contact with the earth, air, sunlight and moisture. Now if we are unable to adjust ourselves with these surroundings we cease to live. The oxygen in the atmosphere is the "vital spark" and when removed from that we cease to breathe and death is the result. We are so constructed that our blood must have so much oxygen each day or oxidation will not take place therefore death is the result. A misconception of death leads many to accept the heathen dogma of man's inherent immortality. May we become diligent seekers for the truth is the prayer of your brother in the Anointed.

Report of Labor.

Dear brothers and sisters:

Some time since I received a letter from Bro. J. S. Butcher, of Blackwell, Okla., requesting me to come and dedicate a new church for them near Arkansas City, Kansas. So on Thursday evening before the fourth Sunday in May, I boarded the train for that place. I will not take the space to speak of the beautiful country over which I traveled, but will say I traveled through the Indian Territory and Okla., and saw some of the most beautiful country I ever before beheld. I arrived at Arkansas City, about eight or nine o'clock in the night, took a cab and was driven to Bro. Chaplin's. Bro. Chaplin is a nephew of our old Bro. Chaplin who was once editor of THE RESTITUTION. I had never seen him, but his name was a recommendation of him to me. There I found a hearty welcome and was treated like a brother. Next morning Bro. Chaplin had his son drive me out to the church. As we rode along the beautiful fields of wheat, oats, corn, etc., greeted my eyes as far as my vision extended. It was simply sublime. The homes were beautiful, and I wondered if it were possible for them to be made more beautiful, when the kingdom comes.

On our way we met Bro. Vickery and Bro. Williams. The latter is a preacher of the faith and a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Would to God we had more young men like him. He is young, and educated, very devoted, of good report without, and, the brethren tell me, that he certainly "rightly divides the Word of truth." We finally arrived at the church where we found Bro. Butcher and Bro. Reed preparing tables on which to spread dinner the next day as they were expecting to have dinner on the ground. After greeting each other and clasping hands in brotherly love, having the tables finished, we went to Bro. Reed's, where we met, for the first time, Sister Reed, Sister Chambers and Sister Rahe. Soon dinner was announced and we sat down to a table covered with good things to eat.

After dinner we went back to the church where we met with more of like faith, and among them Bro. Oliver, one of our preachers. I preached a short sermon on the importance of overcoming. Bro. Oliver preached that night on the importance of right living, and I tell you it was timely and good. Sunday morning we met and after a beautiful song service led by Sister Chambers and Bro. Williams, I preached upon the "Promises made to Abraham." The people seemed to be spell bound for one hour while I talked of the glorious promises, which are sure to be fulfilled in the near future. After preaching, we gathered around the different tables, spread with all manner of good things to eat and plenty of it. The crowd was large, but there was plenty and to spare. At 2:30 we preached again. This time on the promises made unto David. Oh! how the brothers and sisters seemed to enjoy hearing us tell how Christ was the rightful heir to the throne and kingdom of David, and that it would not be long till he would return, build up the throne, take his seat upon it, with his bride by his side, and they would reign in righteousness over the nations. Then the "sun would be confounded and the moon ashamed." Then "swords would be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks," because Christ would "dwell among the people" and would "rebuke strong nations afar off." Thus David's last prayer would be answered and "all kings would fall down before him, and all nations would serve him." Then Abraham and his seed would take possession of the long promised land, and "delight themselves in the abundance of peace." The sermon being over, we went to Bro. Vickery's and ate an early supper, returned and preached that night upon the Christian warfare. At the close one came forward and demanded baptism. We then bade the dear brethren and sisters farewell. Went to Bro. Chaplin's that night after preaching, a distance of nine or ten miles. Spent the balance of the night, and the next day took the train for home. I never shall forget those dear ones of the faith at that place. They have built a beautiful little house. Plastered nicely on the inside, and furnished with good seats, lamps and an organ. From what the brethren told me, Brother and Sister Reed deserve praise for their untiring effort and work in building the house. Sister Reed not only helped with her means, but she and other sisters took their saws and hammers and worked on the house. We have many there of whom I am proud and of whom we would like to speak, but space forbids. Returning home I preached the next Sunday near there, to a good congregation upon the "Way of Salvation." Sunday night I preached in the town of Macksville. I preach every Sunday somewhere, when it is possible. What we need in this part of the country, is more preachers. Our Conference meets the 29th of July, near Morrilton, Ark. [illegible] railroad. Come to it brethren, if possible. I pray for us.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

Impressions By The Way.

Accepting an invitation from the brethren at Fonthill, Ontario, to attend their annual May meeting, I left my home in Manchester, Iowa, on the 23rd of May for Chicago, arriving there in the evening. The following afternoon I boarded a Wabash train for Niagara Falls, N. Y., and on the morning of the 25th I viewed for the first time that remarkable work of Nature. My first impression of the Falls was a feeling of disappointment. They did not appear so grand or so impressive as I had supposed they would. But as I continued to watch that mighty volume of water, driven by the irresistible power of the Great Lakes behind it, rush down over the rapids, plunge over the brink of that lofty cliff, and with a roar as of distant thunder, dash itself into billows of snowy foam and clouds of mist on the rocks below, I came to understand something of the awful sublimity and stupendous power of this marvelous work of the divine Creator.

After spending almost an entire day at the Falls, I proceeded to Port Robinson, Ontario, where I was met by Bro. Wm. Platts and conveyed me with his horse and buggy to his house a short distance south of Fonthill.

Limited space forbids my detailing the many enjoyable events that transpired during my stay in Fonthill. I will only say I found the brethren in Ontario, earnestly and perseveringly contending for the faith, and manifesting in their daily lives and conversation those characteristics of love, humility and Christian fellowship which distinguish the children of God throughout the world.

During the course of the Fonthill meeting, which continued from the 25th to the 27th of May inclusive, we greatly enjoyed several excellent discourses delivered by Brothers Cosner, Austin and others. There is an Italian proverb which says "A good preacher gives fruit instead of flowers," but in that meeting we were given both. The flowers of eloquence but added to our pleasure as we feasted on the fruits of truth.

Having been requested at the close of the services in Fonthill, to deliver two addresses to the young people of Fenwick, a village some four miles from the former place, I did so, speaking Tuesday and Wednesday evenings to attentive and appreciative audiences. Brother Austin has certainly accomplished a remarkable work at this place with the help of God and the willing assistance of the Fonthill brethren. Starting in last winter to work in Fenwick, where was not a single believer, he has succeeded in baptizing fourteen and forming an organization of twenty-five or thirty.

On the last day of the month I accompanied brother and sister Platts to Niagara Falls Ontario. On the way we passed through the historic "Lundy's Lane," where the Canadians and British achieved a victory over an American force during the war of 1812. Parting with my friends at the Falls I took an interurban car for Buffalo, and continuing my journey on board the beautiful lake steamer "Western States", I reached Detroit, Mich., on the morning of June first. Aside from my appreciation of its beautiful parks, broad avenues and imposing public buildings, I was especially interested in this city, it being the birthplace of my father, Elder E. V. Marsh.

Going from there to Dutton, Mich., I received so hearty a welcome at the hands of brother and sister Woodward, and the friends assembled there for their annual conference that I was made to feel at once at home.

After thoroughly enjoying the uplifting discourses and social services of the conference, and the loving hospitality of the brethren at Dutton, I resumed my homeward journey, making but one more stop before reaching Iowa.

I had long had a desire to visit the religious colony at Benton Harbor, Mich., who call themselves "Israelites of the House of David," as three young men who were personal friends of mine, had accepted the teachings of "Benjamin and Mary," and left their homes in Iowa and joined the leaders of the movement at Benton Harbor. I can give but little more than a very general view of this peculiar people as their theological system is too complicated and extensive to be discussed at this time. The organization is conducted on the communist principles. They own or control some eight hundred acres of land, producing a variety of grains, fruits and vegetables. Their buildings are substantial and built with an eye to architectural beauty, and are surrounded by well kept grounds and flower beds. The one thing that impressed me more than all else was the great industry manifested by all the members. Though they are continually engaged in some useful duty they can always find time to stop and talk of the singular doctrines they believe. Men, women, and children wear their hair long, having it fastened up with ribbons or pins while at work, but allowing it to hang loose when at leisure. What may be termed the predominant or especially distinguishing tenet of their faith, is their belief in the continued existance of the present bodies. In short, to express it in the language they themselves use, they never expect to "pass through the chambers of the grave." As to the nature of man they believe in the pre-existence of all "spirits." That after the "war in heaven", Lucifer and his followers were cast down to the earth where they are given an opportunity to "work out their salvation", and regain their former exalted position before the throne of God. I found the "Israelites of the House of David" a kindly disposed and hospitable people, in spite of their mysticism and peculiar theology. Like the Mormons they have an "inspired" book, which they claim is the little book in hand of the seventh angel referred to in the Revelation.

Leaving Benton Harbor by boat for Chicago, where I arrived about nine o'clock in the evening, I boarded a C. N. W. train for Marshalltown, Iowa, reaching that place and the conclusion of one of the most profitable journeys I have ever taken, on the morning of the eight day of June.

G. ELDRED MARSH.

Read at the Sister's Meeting in Cleveland.

The meeting was held at the home of Sister Sarah Neill. Notwithstanding the very warm weather, there was a good attendance. Sister Glazier spoke as follows:

At our last meeting the subject was Rom. ix. The chapter shows us that not the children of the flesh are the children of God, and of Abraham. Only those who believe in the promises made to the fathers, are children of God and Abraham. Paul declares his heaviness of heart, and sorrow, because his brethren, after the flesh, that is the Jews, would not accept these promises through Christ the seed, who came especially, and first to save the Jews, afterwards the Gentiles. The fathers were their fathers to whom God gave all the precious promises. They were favored above every other people on earth. Through these their forefather the seed was called. Paul lays great stress on the fact, that, the children of the promise are God's children and not the children after the flesh, who think it is sufficient to have Abraham for their father. This shows us plainly that our faith must lay hold upon heart promises. Else we cannot be the Children of God. By God's foreknowledge he knows before birth, who will and who will not believe the promises. Therefore, before the children of Isaac and Rebecca were born, "it was said to her, The elder shall serve the younger and it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." This explains how and why the purpose of God, according to election, must stand. We then, who believe the promises, have been called and elected. What a plain insight into God's plan of salvation we get shown here. This ought to become a very strong motive for us to make our calling and election sure. There is no unrighteousness in God's dealings with us. He will have mercy on whom he will have mercy. It does not depend upon us, but upon God's mercy that we have any hope of salvation. "By grace are ye saved through faith: and that not of ourselves: it is the gift of God." Pharaoh was raised up that God might show his power in him, that God's name might be declared throughout all the earth. Whom he will he hardeneth, and we are not to find fault with him, nor to resist his will. The thing formed may not choose the form. This is illustrated by reference to the master potter, who of the same lump of clay elects—chooses to make a choice vessel, fit for the highest and best use, and another for the opposite purpose. The clay does not object or find fault nor resist the will of the potter, neither should man find fault nor resist the will of God. For God formed man of the dust of the ground, and therefore is the Master Potter. He endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath, fitted to destruction, in his desire to make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles, to fulfil his word spoken by Hosea, "I will call them my people which were not my people." Those beloved which were not beloved, and in the place where it was said, they were not God's children, they shall be called the children of God. God said, through Isiah, that he would save a remnant of the children of Israel, that he, the Lord would bring it to pass. He would cut his work on the earth short in righteousness. For, if the Lord leave not a seed, the Jews would be as Sodom and Gomorrah. Beloved, we come to the conclusion that we, the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to it, through faith in the promises. Wherefore, let us rejoice that it is written, "Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious, and he that believeth on him, shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore, which believe, he is precious.

MRS. C. GLAZIER.

The Ages to Come.

How soon will they be here! With their untold riches of joy, and song, and brightness, they will soon be here. With their happy reunions, their everlasting fellowships, their never-ending rest, their never-setting suns, they will soon be here! Our labors done, our victory gained; our weariness at an end; our vexations and troubles gone like a dream of the night; our wounds all healed; our heartaches soothed; our heaviness of spirit exchanged for heavenly buoyancy; our ignorance all forgotten in divine wisdom and knowledge; our hanging hands lifted up, and our feeble knees made strong; our wrinkled foreheads smoothed by the same tender hand that wipes all tears from our eyes; all the imperfections of earth lost in the perfection of heaven—Bonar.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 4, 1906. NUMBER 25.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

RUSSIA is having her full share of troubles. The CZAR has been having a time of it with his Douma. There have been assassinations of high officials in various part of the empire. In other places have been massacres of Jews, and more or less disturbances over the whole country.

WE dislike to have to again state that some have not yet paid for this year. We need the money very much just now, and ask you kindly to hear us in mind, and send at once. This is not for those who have paid, but for those who have not. You surely know if you have sent payment.

Sunday Morning Address.

Brethren and sisters, On this day of privilege, I want to direct your attention to several Scriptures intimately connected with our present, and also with our everlasting welfare. The first is found in John xvii. 15, "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil. That is, the evil of the world. I have no doubt that the principle embodied in this intercessory prayer for his disciples, was applicable to the faithful all down the ages, because of the ultimate sweep disclosed in the 20th verse, where our Lord prays, saying, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for all them also, which shall believe on me through their word;"—the apostles' words. I have no doubt these words have furnished rich pasturage to the little flock all along the ages since. There is no room to doubt but that this prayer was in perfect harmony with God's will, and will be answered for, or to the parties named, to the very letter. The word world here stands for the present, narrow, trammelled, checkered relation we sustain to things around us; things of time and sense; the world we have been taken out of, if we have a living faith in the gospel of God. I trust you see that this prayer shows

THERE IS DISCIPLINE

for disciples of Christ;—shows that they like him, must be made perfect through suffering. It struck me that our prayers often run contrary to this petition for us. We are too apt to pray that our environments, our surroundings, our circumstances may be changed; and apt to feel as if we cannot bear the things that interfere with our comfort or happiness; and so pray for more congenial associations; but that, I am persuaded, is the work of unsanctified human nature. It just prays for self;—thinks of self, and orders for self,—and, in thought, gives God's plan, and his right to plan, the go-by, so far as such thing is possible. The prayer of Christ before us teaches us the folly and fatality of such petitions. They are grounded in error. Asking of favors is the prevalent definition of prayer. When a person gets into

A TIGHT PLACE

he prays. I read of two boys who were caught in a storm as they fished two miles from shore. In their terror they broke one oar and then another,—and thought they were surely going to be drowned; but they fell to praying in such agony that sweat rolled off of them. They were at last rescued,—but the end of their perils was also the end of their prayers. And it is often that way. All sorts of promises are made to be broken. We see from the prayer of Jesus that the place for his disciples was in the world. They were there for a purpose. They had work to do for him in the world. They have to work for him in the world now,—as then, and they had a life to live in the world, in keeping with their faith and as a testimony to their mission, and it is just the same now. They needed to be kept from the evil of the world, and they need to be kept now. And this treatment finds an analogy in experiences with children. They are not put entirely out of harm's way by isolation. They have to gradually meet the ills of life,—they have to be schooled into resistence of the spirit of the world, and its work. They cannot always cling for support on their parents. No parent likes to make a child suffer,—indeed the parent sometimes suffers more than the child when punishing it, but the discipline is decreed, because it is deemed necessary. "Don't make me do this thing or that."—"Do not send me to that place," "I don't want to go there," pleads the child,—and that is just the spirit of many

PRAYERS TO GOD—

he is pleaded with to modify his plan let the consequences be what they may. But remember our place is in the world. We can do the work no where else. This is the wilderness of our temptation,—the field where our faith has to be tested. There is a noble individual record to be made,—but it touches sorrow, affliction, wretchedness and is in close contact with crime. This situation has to be accepted fully and unreservedly and then we may depend upon having an answer to this wonderful prayer: "I pray that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." Even the blessed Jesus in the hour of greatest anguish did not venture upon such unqualified terms as are often made to the God of heaven. He asked "if it were God's will the cup be passed. Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." Prayer to be kept from the evil is what we need to offer. If we chafe under trial, and want to run away from it, how is faith to be tested? The wisdom, the rightness and the blessedness of praying to be kept from the evil we are exposed to will be more and more realized, the more closely we follow it. They are the very experiences designed by God to shape us into nobility—the very occasions we seek to avoid, are indeed the means of the very closest approach to God and to bring us into the assurance of divine helpfulness, and the realness of his presence. And so it is, that every sphere in life has its own career of trial and gloom. For men of business and women of sorrow there is a line of prayer for each. Whatever the sphere and condition of life,—be it health or sickness, household worries, family trials, or community persecutions,—envious successes, or ignoble defeats, there is a line of prayer to suit the line of labor or trial. We have unmistakable evidence in Rom. viii. 17, that suffering with Christ is a condition upon which glorification with him is possible. And in Acts v. 41 we find the apostles acting upon this principle. They were admonished and flogged, and then let go,—and they went out rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name, and pain beside shame. So you see it is not every one who is deemed worthy to suffer for his name. Again in 1 Peter v. 10 we are told that the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect, strengthen, settle you,—to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. We cannot be made perfect without suffering, you see. And depend upon it the Father who chastens every son whom he loveth, knows exactly what suffering is needed to fit us for his use; and when we grow restive, and think almost any other suffering than that we have to undergo would be just as well, if not better—it shows that we are as yet a long way short of the shape required of stones in the Temple for God to dwell in. And if we try to evade the discipline of suffering we will be thrown out, as useless material,—and the labor spent upon us so far lost. Without multiplying words, we need to consider it an honor to suffer reproach for Christ or the danger of contamination. We must learn to brave the world; use the world; meet the ills and allurements and contradictions of the world with such faith in the support of God and Christ, and such an appropriation of the strength in Christ, that we shall be more than conquerors through him who has loved us, and gave himself for us.

JOY OR GRIEF

Brethren and sisters, we are so intimately associated with toil, care, pain, tribulation and worry, that we often miss the majestic conceptions of truth calculated to inspire noble impulses, and infinite power for good; and I feel like inviting your attention for a few minutes to a Scripture that should call us off from the afflictions of the present and point us to some of the things laid up for them that at the same time, revealing the fact that if we are living in harmony with the high calling of God in Christ, it richly pays to be followers of the Nazarine, even now. The first chapter of the epistle to the Ephesians contains so much of present and future good for God's children,—that I feel constrained to refer to some of the exalted privileges we are entitled to. Beginning with the second verse we read, "Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from our Lord Jesus. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto

LOVE GOD,

THE ADOPTION OF CHILDREN

by Jesus Christ, by himself, according to the good pleasure of his will;" and the next words explain his purpose in all this. It was to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved,—in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins; according to the riches of his grace. He hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence;" as if his infinite wisdom could devise nothing better or greater for us; "having made known unto us the secret of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself." This, doubtless, was an inducement to live lives that shall fit us for the amazing destiny intended for us,—a comprehensive statement of which is made in the next verse, as follows:—"That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one, all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him; in whom also we have obtained an inheritance,—being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, that we [sinners being saved by grace] should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ; in whom ye also trusted after that ye heard the Word of truth, the gospel of your salvation; in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with

THAT HOLY SPIRIT

of promise, which is the earnest, or pledge of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession,—unto the praise of his glory; yes, unto the praise of his glory—no less than three times recorded within eight verses; and this is followed by an astonishing prayer for them that discloses still more of Jehovah's ultimate purpose in calling us out of darkness into his marvelous light. Listen to it:—"That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him,—the eyes of your understanding being enlightened that ye may know what is the hope of your calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints; and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly, far above all authority, and government and power, and Lordship, and every name being named, not only in this, but also in the future age, and subjected all things under his his feet, and constituted him a Head over all things for that congregation which is his Body, the

FULL DEVELOPMENT

of him who is filling all things with all. Brethren and sisters, I regard this as one of the sublimest—most wonderful passages of Holy Writ. I am astounded to think that the high and lofty One who inhabiteth eternity, the Creator of heaven and earth,—the upholder of all things and out of whom are all things,—should use such superlative expressions, to show his estimate of sinners of a mortal race who are being saved by his sovereign grace,—through faith; the glorious wealth of his inheritance in the saints, is the way he speaks of them, as rendered by the Diaglott; and the surpassing greatness of his power toward us who believe,—is to be according to the energy of his mighty strength that was exerted in the Anointed One when he raised him from the dead and seated him at his own right hand in the heaven, far above all authority and government and power and Lordship. In view then of the transcendant destiny of the godly in Christ Jesus, what manner of persons ought we to be in all conversation and godliness! Oh, that we could always have the stimulation and exaltation of this

MOUNTAIN-TOP-VIEW

of Jehovah's purpose! And the amazing love and condescension is whelming to lift us up to a participation of his own divine nature of existence. Oh, when I think of my own frailties, and unworthiness in view of the exceeding riches of his grace stored up for me if I prove faithful to the end, I am amazed at his goodness,—and I am amazed at my inadequate appreciation of it. O can it be, that I shall one day be numbered, through his favor, with those who shall be to the praise of his glory? If so; it will be through his infinite mercy and rich grace. It is a source of comfort and hope to know that God knows our frames and remembers that we are dust,—and pities us as a father pities erring children. Yes, it inspires hope when we realize that unlike our harsh judgments of one another, he knows all about our

and untoward circumstances, and, taking all these things into account, if he sees that from the bottom of our hearts we want to love and obey him, he is longsuffering, and permits us to call him our Father still; and this means that we are his children still; and blessed be his holy name.

There is another very remarkable statement made in this wonderful first chapter of Ephesians; that I want to direct attention to it. In keeping with the wisdom, all-mightiness, goodness, mercy and love of God as displayed in the great drama of redemption, it seems just right to read in Col. ii. 9, 10 that in Christ "dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power. Before being declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead, God manifested himself to us in his flesh; mentally and morally revealed himself to us through him; it is far different now; the fulness of the Godhead now dwells in him bodily; that is, he is no longer flesh and blood,—being physically transformed,—is divine of nature—lives by God's incorruptible nature; and it is wonderful in view of this to read that we are complete in him; which I understand to mean that we are to be made like him,—divine of nature; that our life of the divine type is at present concealed with him in God. And while truly wonderful, there is a fitness of things in this arrangement that commends itself to us. Our radical or physical completeness in him is prospective. But morally, we are complete in him, after justification by faith in him,—because accounted righteous on the principle of faith and the obedience of faith, as long as we retain our confidence, and walk worthily. Yes; it is fit that our completeness should be in Christ. But it is most astounding to see the tables completely turned in the 2nd chapter of Ephesians. After speaking of the raising of Christ from the dead, and of his exaltation to the right hand of the Father far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion and a name above every name, and of his being Head over all things for that congregation it adds which is his body,—the full development of him who is filling all with all. Is it not amazing? The Church is in whom the church is complete. Just take the time to turn this divine idea over in your minds. The Church is the full development of the Anointed; illustrating 2 Cor. i. 21 where it says God had anointed the members of the church at Corinth, and if the saints at Corinth, then at Ephesus, Philippi, Rome, Galatia, Colosse, Thessalonica and Cleveland, Ohio and all others. They became a multitudinous seed of the woman that is to bruise the head of the serpent—the multitudinous seed of Abraham in whom all the families of the earth shall be blessed. As Christ is antitypical tree of life,—they are the leaves of that tree, which are for the healing of nations. And further permit me to say, this is what the great God meant when he said his name was, "I will be who I will be." It was his eternal purpose to manifest himself in Spirit by a multitude that no man can number who shall come out of great tribulation and wash their robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb. This is how God will tabernacle with men. And beloved, if we ever reach that realm of glory, each of us will be an Emmanuel—God with the people. Matt. i. 23. In concluding these homely talks about the worries, cares, sufferings and discipline of this life,—I would say,—that while every divine assistance has been supplied for those who put their trust in God,—there will always be some things involved in mystery; many things happen that we cannot plainly read now. Many a cloud will cast its shadow over us, doubtless, that we will not be able to see the why or the wherefore of at the time; but I apprehend it will all be clear by and by. The staggering blows that cannot be thought of without tears of bitterness; will then be seen to have been but the touch of a loving Father; and many dealings of Providence which could not be comprehended at the time, will be seen to have had a beneficent end in view, which awaken new songs of gratitude. Then the vision will be clear enough to see that all things have been working together for good,—and that even the darkest cloud concealed indeed, all things that we now see through a glass darkly shall then be seen face to face. We are on the eve of grand events,—the night is far spent,—the day is at hand, that shall ere its close see the whole earth filled with the glory of God,—and the people will no longer follow the flashes of passion, or the ill-regulated fancies or guesses at truth,—but the law shall go forth from Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Every province of nature,—every path of the redeemed, every work of Providence,—every product of grace shall reflect the glory of God. As we go about our business, may we in its intervals recollect that we have been chosen in Christ, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love,—having adopted us as children according to the good pleasure of his will,—to the praise of the glory of his grace where in he hath made us accepted in the beloved. One and all, as the day approaches,—let us ever remember that our completeness,—full-development—perfection is in Christ,—and on the other hand that the Church,—his body is the completeness, full development of him. If this high destiny, as marked out by the eternal Father be kept in mind, the glorious hope of it will be anchor to our soul both sure and steadfast. God grant that it may steady us in all the trials of life. But we must not forget that if we ever add our quota to the fullness of him in whom is our completeness, we must live to his praise now. Our deep concern should be to do the will of the Father by keeping the commandments of his Son. Whether we eat or drink, or toil at the bench, the forge, the office desk, the sales counter, or the common round of domestic duty, or whatsoever we do, it has to be done with a view to God's glory religiously done. It is an every day religion we profess,—not one that goes on with our Sunday clothes and off with the same. But if we fret and chafe at the trials incident to our particular calling, and think we are needlessly tried, and are envious of another's lot. This is anything but to the glory of God. Besides, those thought to have smoother sailing, may not be candidates for God's kingdom and glory. Let them have their good time now,—ours is future—our discipline is just what we need, if we would swell the triumph of him who has redeemed us to God by his blood. And the promise that all things shall work together for our good is as true as any other promise—we must learn to trust him in the dark. His word was never known to fail. By maintaining this attitude we shall be ready to meet Jesus when he comes, and will be sure to meet his approving smile—may this be our happy lot. Amen.

THE COMPLETENESS OF HIM

A SMILING FACE,

Purity of Character.

Over the beauty of the plum and apricot, there grows a bloom and beauty more exquisite than the fruit itself—a soft, delicate flush that overspreads its blushing cheek. Now, if you strike your hand over that, and it is once gone, it is gone forever, for it never grows but once. The flower that hangs in the morning, impearled with dew—arrayed as no queenly woman ever was arrayed with jewels—once shake it, so that the beads roll off, and you may sprinkle water over it as you please, yet it can never be made again what it was when the dew fell silently upon it from heaven! On a frosty morning you may see the panes of glass, covered with landscapes—mountains, lakes and trees, blended in a beautiful, fantastic picture. Now lay your hand upon the glass, and by the scratch of your finger, or by the warmth of the palm, all the delicate tracery will be obliterated. So there is in youth a beauty and purity of character, which, when once touched and defiled, can never be restored; a fringe more delicate than frostwork, and which, when torn and broken, will never be re-embroidered. A man who has spotted and soiled his garments in youth, though he may seek to make them white again, can never wholly do it, even were he to wash them with his tears. When a young man leaves his father's house, with the blessing of his mother's tears still wet upon his forehead, if he once looses that purity of character, it is a loss that he can never make whole again. Such is the consequence of crime. Its effects cannot be eradicated; it can only be forgiven.

How Scholars Are Made.

Costly apparatus and splendid cabinets have no magical power to make scholars. In all circumstances, as a man is under God the maker of his fortune, so he is the maker of his own mind. The Creator has so constituted the human intellect, that it can grow only by its own action, and by its own action it will most certainly and necessarily grow. Every man must therefore, in an important sense, educate himself. His book and teachers are but helps: the work is his. A man is not educated until he has the ability to summon, as an act of emergency, all his mental powers in vigorous exercises to effect his proposed object. It is not the man that has seen most or has read most, who can do this; such a one is in danger of being borne down, like a beast of burden, by an overloaded mass of other men's thoughts. Nor is it the man who can boast merely of native vigor and capacity; the greatest of all the warriors that went to the siege of Troy, had not the pre-eminence because nature had given him strength, and he carried the largest bow, but because self-discipline had taught him how to bend it.

The Goal.

"I have finished my course." 2 Tim. x. 7. Final success—the joy of life's ripe harvest—is the goal of our human hopes. No wise or thoughtful man will life merely for today. The pilgrim who seeks a home is not content to linger and loiter for the mere flowers beside his way. The sower looks onward to fields white and ready for the sickle. Wisdom has regard to the grand issue. The triumph or the pleasure of today is transitory. We want a hope that does not sink with the setting sun. The true success in life is that which does not fail the evening of our days, or leave them to blight or barrenness We want that shout of "harvest home," that will not die into silence with the fainting breath, but make the passage of the grave a whispering gallery where heaven and earth talk together. We want something that will reach beyond time—beyond the things of the present—something that will take hold on eternity.

Divine Sympathy.

"I know their sorrows." Ex. iii. 7. Man cannot say so. There are many sensitive fibers of the soul the best and tenderest human sympathy cannot touch. But the Prince of sufferers, he who led the way in the path of sorrow, "knoweth our frame." When crushing bereavement lies like ice on the heart, when the dearest earthly friend cannot enter into the peculiarities of our grief, Jesus can, Jesus does. He who once bore my sins, also carried my sorrows. That eye now on the throne was once dim with weeping. I can think, in all my affliction, "he was afflicted," in all my tears, "Jesus wept."

Influence of the Fireside.

The fireside has always been regarded as the altar of home—the seat of all domestic virtues. Round that hallowed spot are supposed to be nourished all those tender feelings and sentiments which soften the harder features of humanity. There it is that the true father, the true mother, the true sister, and the true brother are grown; and there it is that society looks for its brightest ornaments. No patriot or philanthropist, worthy of the name ever sprung from any other soil, or was really moulded by any other influence.

Be at peace, without thinking of the future; there may be none for you!—Fenelon.

Poetry.

He is Risen.

"Destroy this temple and in three days,
I will from the dust its form upraise."
—St. John ii. 19.

The prophet had spoken, and now alone
In a snow-white shroud he lay;
The promised heir to David's throne,
Was dead, and place in a tomb of stone,
In the twilight dim and grey.

No longer he felt the soldier's spear,
Nor the feverish thirst and pain;
No longer the shout and the heartless jeer
Of the rabblers amate on his listless ear,
As he lay in death's domain.

But stern and silent in dark array,
The guard in its ranks of steel,
Remembered the wonderful prophecy,
And sneered at the power that dare essay
To break for a moment the Roman Seal.

"He is risen," the beautiful seraph said
To the women of Galilee:
Why seek the living among the dead?
Go, hasten the joyful news to spread
To those that love him as well as ye.

"He is risen." The message was not deferred,
But passed like a flame from tongue to tongue:
Ah! there were hearts with emotions stirred,
And tears of joy were shed at the word,
And lips to its music clung.

He had broken the dark relentless bond,
And conquered the dreaded tomb;
And oh! ye mourners, at his command,
Your loved ones shall come from the enemy's band,
To live in immortal bloom.

"His disciples," they said, would come by night
To steal his body away;
So they silently watched the hours in flight,
'Till they saw the plumes of the dawning's light,
Throw open the gates of day.

And then from the sky serene and far,
In dazzling bright array,
An angel swept like a blazing star,
And the earth did tremble, and shake, and jar,
As he rolled the stone from the grave away.

The guard, appalled at the fearful sight,
And the broken Seal of Rome,
Became as dead men with affright,
For the angel's countenance was as bright
As the Sun in the Zenith's dome.

Pacific Coast Work.

Our N. W. Conference of the Church of God, held its annual meeting June 15th, 16th, and 17th, at Felida, Washington. Perfect harmony prevailed. Interest was shown in the work, both at home, and in other localities. Strong sentiment was expressed concerning our duty to use our means to advance the work, as well as our ability. A move was started to build a church building at Felida, to accommodate the Felida and Lake Shore Brotherhood. This move was prosecuted to a certainty of success.

As brother Lewis Montgomery believes that we should give as we are prospered he willingly headed the subscription list with $500; others pledged their help, until, in a short time, the sum reached over one thousand dollars. So we are assured, with some more help, of having a good church home at Felida Washington. I think work like this is not only a great help to the growth of the soul of a church; but will tend to attract, and gather others into the fold.

The Brethren at Felida propose to be liberal in opening their church building to other denominations.

This is well! We gain more than we loose by liberality, and charity. We feel hurt when others close their buildings against us, and we call their action selfishness, and it is often done from that cause. We should be sufficiently strong in the faith, to uphold it with, and against others; and should, in the use of our building, as well as in all other things, "do unto others, as we would have them do unto us." We felt again, in all this manifestion of zeal, that our gathering together was not in vain. The Brethren selected the writer to continue as evangelist for another Conference year. They have also, by my recommendation, extend the Conference so as to include Western Washington, and Oregon, also California, and Arizona. This is a large field, for gospel work, and in order to handle the work successfully, my plans should be arranged at the beginning of the conference year. This can only be successfully done, by corresponding with Brethren in all locations where work is desired, as early as possible. That this may be done I ask all who desire work to write me, at as early date as possible.

The work is due first in Washington and Oregon and later in California and Arizona. But the work must be planned to save travel, as much as possible.

I am already engaged in the work. I came from conference to Eden, situated near the lower Columbia, in Washington. We have a company here of sixteen members, organized by the writer 1902. They maintain their first love and zeal in the cause of the Master. We can not yet determine results of present meetings, as we have held only six meetings. Other meetings are contemplated at other places on the Columbia River.

How different, in every respect, this Columbia region is from the scenes in California and Arizona.

From the place where I am stopping by following Crooked Creek down two miles, we reach the magnificent Columbia River, at a point where, if you should decide to cross to Oregon you would have to row your boat twelve miles to reach the other shore. You will not understand, by this, that you would find the Columbia twelve miles wide at all places below this, but widening of the River into Grey's bay, which makes only a wider expanse of the river, gives that distance across. By going down and across the river fourteen or fifteen miles, you reach Astoria, one of the earliest trading posts of this N. W. country, and at present a flourishing lumber and fish port.

The lumber and fishing business gives employment to many laborers in this region, and adds capital to the capitalist. As it is in other regions, with the masses Mammon is God! Address me at Etna Washington.

At the Breaking of Bread.

"A faithful man shall abound with blessings." Prov. xxviii. 20.

Gen. xxxix. 5. And it came to pass, from time that Joseph was made overseer in the house of the Egyptian, and over all that he had, that the Lord blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake. And the blessing of the Lord was upon all that he had in the house, and in the field."

God said to the Children of Israel, Behold I set before you this day a blessing and a curse. A blessing if you obey the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you this day.

And all these blessings shall come on thee.

Blessed shalt thou be in the city and blessed in the field. Blessed be the fruit of thy body. Blessed shall be all thy cattle and thy flocks.

Blessed shall be thy basket and store. Blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in and when thou goest out. All of these blessings and many more were promised to the Children of Israel as long as they kept the Commandments of the Lord their God.

All of these blessings promised to the Children of Israel, if they were faithful, I understand were on the same order as the miracles that were done by Christ and the disciples. The miracles were done to confirm the word, and I think these special blessings followed the Children of Israel to show that they were God's chosen people. I do not understand that we need look for special blessings in this life. We are assured that we shall not want for food, nor raiment. And all other blessings that we receive we thank our Father for. As we realize that all comes from him.

Paul in speaking to the Church at Rome said "And I am sure that when I come unto you, I shall come in the fullness of blessings of the gospel of Christ.

It is through this gospel that we look for blessings. And these are some of them. Blessed are the poor in spirit: For theirs is the Kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled.

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

Blessed are the peace makers: for they shall be called the Children of God.

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake.

These blessings differ very much from those promised to the Children of Israel. Theirs were present blessings. The last are future. One is temporal the other eternal. May we all live worthy of these eternal blessings.

Show Us Your Samples.

An humble Christian worker was holding a preaching service in the open air, when a well-dressed man drew near, and at a pause in the service asked permission to address the meeting. Permission being given, he denounced religion as a humbug and a sham, and advised men to go to the socialist meetings, which he said would do more good.

While he was speaking the leader of the meeting learned from one of the men there that he was a drummer for a dry goods house, and a noted infidel. As he closed, the Christian man said to him,

"I hear you are a drummer, and go from town to town with samples of the goods manufactured by your firm. Now you are engaged in another business, I ask you to show your samples. I will show you what we are doing."

Beckoning to two men to stand up beside him, he continued,

"Here are two brothers. You see them now. Five years ago they were the biggest scamps and drunkards in the district. They were wife-beaters and even a terror in the saloon. But five years ago they went to a little gospel meeting, and there they gave their hearts to Jesus. Now they and their wives are well dressed and their homes comfortably furnished, yet they are earning just the same wages as they did before their conversion, and in their homes all is happiness. That is the work of the gospel. They are samples of what it can do. Now show me the samples of socialism. Show me one drunkard made sober, one dishonest man made honest, one immoral man reclaimed, and then we will listen to you. If socialism is better than Christianity show your samples."

There was a general laugh at the confusion which sat visibly on the face of the socialist, and amid the roar of derision he slunk away.

One Good Deed.

One pound of gold may be drawn into a wire that would extend around the globe. So one good deed may be felt through all time, and extend its consequences into eternity. Though done in the first flush of youth, it may gild the last hours of a long life, and form the only bright spot in it. Let us not be weary of kind acts, but see to it that every day of our lives is made bright by them.

Prayer has divided seas, rolled up flowing rivers, made flinty rocks gush into fountains, quenched flames of fire, muzzled lions, disarmed vipers and poisons, marshalled the stars against the wicked, stopped the course of the moon, arrested the rapid sun in his great race, burst open iron gates, recalled the dead from death, conquered the strongest devils, commanded legions of of angels down from heaven. Prayer has bridled and chained the raging passions of man, and routed and destroyed vast armies of proud, daring, blustering atheists. Prayer has brought one man from the bottom of the sea, and carried another in a chariot of fire to heaven! What has prayer not done.

The world is not a vessel which is suffered to drift about without a pilot, mast or sale; but one in which an Almighty hand guides the helm. The human race is not an unbridled, ungoverned mass—but an immense flock, led by an all-satisfying Shepherd. History is not a web of human will and blind chaos—but a work of art, for which he, who orders all things, twists the thread of all human doings and undertakings. And if it does not everywhere manifest itself as such a work of art, we must bear in mind that it is still only a fragment, and that our eyes are obscured, with regard to the ways of God. Wait till the Lord Almighty reaches the end of his great designs, and till eternity removes every veil, and sharpens the eye and the understanding. O, how shall we then sink down in adoring astonishment before the feet of the Eternal, when we perceive how everything, even that which was the most opposed and inimical to his holy will, was obliged to submit—become subservient to and even promote under his all-powerful hand, the exalted plans of his rule and government! How rich the consolation which already springs from the consciousness that high above the tumult here below, the throne of the universe rests in eternal glory; and that all that takes place on the earth is guided as if by leading-strings, the ends of which run together into his all-powerful hands!

The Cross of Christ.

"For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." 1 Cor. ii. 2.

Paul must have felt this truth to be very important. He repeats it so often, and so earnestly; and expresses the same thought in many texts, some almost verbatim, and others only more vividly and variedly unfolding it. "We preach Christ crucified;" and again, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of Christ;" and again "Looking unto Jesus, who, for the joy set before him, endured the cross;" and again, "I count all but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus."

This sentiment is so often and so emphatically repeated that one feels that it must, in his inmost soul, have attached to these simple words a very deep, even an inexhaustible, meaning. There must have been something infinitely precious in "Christ crucified," to have thus absorbed the intensest thoughts, and have engaged the whole heart of St. Paul, and to have been felt worthy of being expressed so often and in so varied phraseology. He had accurately gauged its excellence. He thoroughly understood it. Amid all the splendors of Athenian architecture, and attractions of philosophy; amid the military cohorts and legions of the conquerors of the world itself, he set forth in endless variety this great truth. It was luminous in his every address, was the end, and aim, and basis of every appeal, till Paul seems to us to have been a man of one idea, but that idea, how magnificent and precious! In all his addresses we find allusions to it—it is the tone that runs through and is audible in all—the coloring that overspreads all; it is the substance of all his epistles, the text and peroration of his sermons and most eloquent appeals. Paul's hope of the world's salvation was in "Christ crucified"—not in the disbursements of the treasury, nor in the swords and shields of the army, nor in the schools of philosophy, nor in the disclosures of science, nor in the the stores of literature, but in this one central truth, unfolded clearly, preached earnestly, applied to the heart and conscience by the Holy Spirit of God.

Report of Labor.

On Friday June 1, Bro. S. J. Lindsay of Oregon, Ill., came to Coopers-town, Ill. Commenced a series of meetings in the Baptist church, which ended Friday evening June 8th. There were no additions, but the few that are in the faith were built up and encouraged to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." From there he came to Ripley, Ill., and on Sunday June 10th, in the afternoon, we gathered at the Lamoin River near by where old Uncle George Busby and Mrs. Elsie Doyal were buried in the waters of baptism and rose to walk in newness of life. We welcome our old brother and young sister most heartily, and commend them to God our Father, and his Son Jesus Christ to keep them in the way of life. Our meetings closed Tuesday evening June 12th. Bro. Lindsay is indeed a light bearer and should be kept in the field.

Jennie Cox.

Married.

It was my privilege and pleasure on Tuesday June 26, 1906 to perform the ceremony of marriage for our much esteemed Brother D. C. Robison of Mount Vernon, O., and our no less esteemed Sister Mrs. Nancy Barber of Salem, Ohio.

To readers of The Restitution this introduction is sufficient. Those who know them doubtless wish them all the joys that can come to them in this life. I am pleased to record that the pleasures of this life was not the motive of their union, but that they unitedly might be of more value in the great cause of the truth to Salvation. To be of more service, "In the vineyard of the Master."

They were married at noon at the home of Bro. and Sister Neill, which will be the home of Bro. and Sister Robison when they return.

The witnesses were a few relatives and friends. Afternoon they left for Alabama to visit other relatives and hold meetings for several weeks, coming back in time for the Ohio State Conference of the Church of God, at Brush Creek, Aug. 23 to 26.

May the Lord bless them, and bless their efforts to spread "the glad tiding of the kingdom."

P. Neill.

The Little Graves.

"It's only a little grave," they said,
"Only just a child that's dead;"
And so they carelessly turned away
From the mound the spade had made that day.

Ah! they did not know how deep a shade
That little grave in our home had made.

I know the coffin was narrow and small,
One yard would have served for an ample pall;
And one man in his arms could have borne away
The rosewood and its freight of clay.
But I know that darling hopes were hid
Beneath that little coffin lid.

I know that a mother stood that day
With folded hands by that form of clay;
I know that burning tears were hid
"Neath the drooping lash an aching lid;"
And I know her lip, and cheek, and brow
Were almost as white as her baby's, now.

I know that some things were hid away,
The crimson frock, and wrappings gay;
The little sock, and the half-worn shoe,
The cap with its plumes and tassels blue;
And an empty crib, with its covers spread,
As white as the face of the sinless dead.

'Tis a little grave but, oh! have care!—
For world wide hopes are buried there;
And ye, perhaps, in coming years,
May see, like her, through blinding tears,
How much of light, how much of joy,
Is buried with an only boy!

Speak Gently to Each Other.

"Please help me a minute, sister."

"Oh! don't disturb me, I am reading," was the answer.

"But just hold this stick, won't you, while I drive this pin through?"

"I can't now, I want to finish this story," said I, emphatically, and my little brother turned away with a disappointed look in search of somebody else to assist him.

He was a bright boy of ten years, and my only brother. He had been visiting a young friend, and had seen a windmill; and as soon as he came home, his energies were all employed in making a small one; for he was always trying to make tops, wheelbarrows, kites, and all sorts of things such as boys delight in. He had worked patiently all the morning with a saw and jack-knife, and now it only needed putting together to complete it, and his sister had refused to assist him, and he had gone away with his young heart saddened.

I thought of this in the fifteen minutes after he had left me, and my book gave me no pleasure. It was not intentional unkindness, only thoughtlessness, for I loved my brother, and was generally kind to him, still, I refused to help him. I would have gone after him, and afforded the assistance he needed, but I knew he had found some else. But I neglected an opportunity of gladdening a childish heart.

In half an hour he came bounding into the house, exclaiming, "Come Mary I've got it up; just see how it goes!"

His tones were joyous and I saw that he had forgotten my petulance; so I determined to atone by unusual kindness. I went went with him, and sure enough, on the roof of the woodhouse was fastened a minature windmill, and the arms were whirling round fast enough to suit any boy. I praised the wind-mill and my little brother's ingenuity, and he seemed happy, and entirely forgetful of my unkindness, and I resolved, as I had many times before to be always loving and gentle.

A few days passed by, and the shadow of a great sorrow darkened our dwelling. The joyous laugh and noisy glee were hushed, and our merry boy lay in a darkened room, with anxious faces around him, his cheeks flushed and his eyes unusually bright. Sometimes his temples would moisten, and his muscles relax, and then hope would come into our hearts, and our eyes would fill with thankful tears. It was in one of these deceitful calms in this disease, that he heard the noise of his little wheel, and said:

"I hear my windmill."

"Does it make your head ache?" I asked. "Shall we take it down?"

"Oh, no," replied he, "it seems as if I were out of doors, and it makes me feel better."

"Don't you remember, Mary, that I wanted you to help me fix it, and you was reading, and told me you could not! But it did not make any difference: mamma helped me."

Oh, how sadly these words fell upon my ear and what bitter memories they awakened! How I repented, as I kissed little Frank's forehead, that I had ever spoken unkindly to him! Hours of sorrow went by, and we watched his couch, hope growing fainter and fainter, and anguish deeper, until one week from the morning on which he spoke of his childish sports, we closed the eyes once so sparkling, and folded his hands over his pulseless heart. He sleeps now in the grave, and home is desolate; but the little windmill, the work of his busy hands, is still swinging in the breeze, just where he placed it, upon the roof of the old woodshed, and every time I see the tiny arms revolving, I remember the lost little Frank, and I remember also the thoughtless, the unkind words. Brothers and sisters, be kind to each other; be gentle, considerate, and loving.

Reproved by a Child.

Some little children were sitting one day on the step of a door singing as they often do, some of their favorite hymns. They were suddenly surprised by a half-drunken man, who came up to them, and muttering an oath, said:

"Does your master teach you nothing but singing those foolish hymns?"

"Yes," said a sharp little fellow about six years of age, "he tells us it is wicked to swear."

The poor man seemed ashamed of his conduct, and passed on without further remark.

The Conquest of Death.

Like other great monarchs, Death also has his harbingers to proclaim and prepare his approach. He sends before him the most agonizing pains and afflictions; diseases that consume our strength and vigor, and sometimes induce us to expect his arrival every moment. By the trembling joints, the dimness of the eyes, the changed countenance, the breaking of the bowl at the cistern, and the loosing of the silver cord, we know that he is near at hand. There is a shadow cast before him extending according to the height of his terrible majesty, and stretching over part of the vale of life. Yes, all that precedes our dissolution, all that is preparatory to the last stroke, are harbingers of death, afflictive in themselves, and to be dreaded on their own account, but peculiarly fearful as precursors of this great adversary. As these are his forerunners, so he has innumerable and dreadful instruments to destroy. The famine and the pestilence are in his hand; he kindles the fury of the battle, and riots in the field of slaughter; he wings the forked lightning, and expands the jaws of the devouring earthquake; the air we breathe, the elements by which we are supplied, and the food upon which we subsist, are often converted into instruments of death; he levies a contribution upon all, extracts the poison of mortality from that which is given for the sustentation of life. The empire of death, which it has required so many ages to overthrow, which has seemed to recover from its defeats, will at last sink by one powerful stroke, never to rise again. It will not require more than a moment of time to raise all the dead, to lay open every sepulchre, to restore every particle of dust that is fit to be restored to its proper body, and for all the bodies of the saints to be prepared for the mission of eternal glory. How insipid and tame are the histories of all other conquests, of the rise and fall of these kingdoms and empires, when compared with the grand and wonderful achievements of the King Immortal and the fall of Death beneath His power, and the giving up of all his prey. Death shall be known and feared no more. Millions of millions shall join in everlasting praise to him whom all the redeemed will acknowledge as the Great Deliverer.—Robert Hall.

Evangelizing Notice.

The N. W. Conference has selected me again as Evangelist. The Brethren have added Arizona, and California to my field of labor. Any church or isolated brethren that want meetings during the Conference year should correspond with me at an early date so I can plan my year's work for this extensive territory which now includes western Oregon, Washington, California and Arizona.

Address W. L. Skeels, Etna, Wash.

Grand Army of the Republic.

Send 2 cent stamp for itinerary of special trains to the 40th Annual Encampment, Minneapolis, August 15th to 18th. Extensive arrangements are being made by The North Western Line to provide first class accommodations for the veterans and their friends. Four regular trains per day between Chicago and the Twin Cities via the direct route. The rate to Minneapolis from points in the Central States will be one cent per mile. Rate from Chicago only $8.00 round trip. Address A. H. Waggener, Trav. Agt. 215 Jackson Blvd. Chicago, Ill.—Aug. 1.

Announcement.

The 19th Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the beautiful Campground at Waterloo, Iowa, August 18th to 26th, inclusive. Rates of one and one-third fare from all points in Iowa have been granted by all railroads; going tickets to be purchased any time from August 17th to 23rd, inclusive, and holders of Certificates for tickets bought during that time will be entitled to return ticket for one-third fare if bought before August 30th. A certificate must be secured with each ticket bought.

Bring straw ticks and a few comforters. Tents will be furnished free. Board at our Dining Hall 25 cents per day.

We expect to have the following preaching brethren with us: A. J. Eychauer, S. J. Lindsay, L. E. Conner, Almus Adams, H. M. Lucas, G. Eldred Marsh, John Garton, and others.

For entire program of meeting with full instructions, etc., address G. P. Allard, Corresponding Secretary, Box 86, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.
EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

T. J. DANIEL.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

WHEN YOUR TIME IS OUT PLEASE RENEW.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill., we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

A four-page tract in the German language, by Brother M. Joblin of Cleveland, O. Subject, "What Must I do to be Saved?" After getting the opinion of one who understands this language, we have no hesitation in recommending it as simply all right. Get some for your German friends. Send to M. Joblin, 626 Woodland Ave., Cleveland, O. 25c per 100.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference:

I have moved to the state of Oregon, so all letters in the interest of the conference work will be sent to J. P. Bitner, Severance, Kansas.

Excursion rates less than one fare round trip, daily, July 12th to 29th, $26.70 from Chicago, via the Chicago & North Western Railway, the only all rail route to the Reservation border. Dates of registration July 16th to 31st. Write for pamphlets telling how to secure one of these attractive homesteads. All agents sell tickets via this route. W. B. Kniskern, Pass'r Traffic Mgr., Chicago.—July 18

Industries Wanted.

The Chicago & North Western Railway has information from desirable points on its lines that industries of various kinds are desired. The fine prospect of a bounteous harvest insures the continuance of the large business of former years and is causing many communities to make strong effort to secure new industries. Among the establishments wanted are iron and woodworking concerns, cereal mills, canning works, cold storage plants and mills of various kinds as well as mercantile establishments. Requests for particulars addressed to the Industrial Department of the C. & N. W. Ry., Chicago, will be promptly attended to.—July 11

We wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if priated will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Send your pledges but no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended to.

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 11, 1906. NUMBER 26.

...at if we die believing in him, we shall ...ve again. Death is not the end. ...here is hope of life beyond the grave.

"We shall sleep, but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn,
We shall meet to part no never,
On the resurrection morn."

But in order to obtain this priceless gift of eternal life, we must tread the path the Savior trod. We must take up our cross daily and follow him. No one knows better than our heavenly Father the difficulties, the trials and discouragements of those who walk in the straight and narrow way that leads to life everlasting. And in his Word he has given us countless promises to cheer us as we walk in this way. There are promises to suit our every need, our every mood. When we are weary and sad, anxious and distressed, we hear the promise, Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. When we are hard pressed and beset with foes who seem about to conquer us we have the promise, "Fear thou not for I am with thee." When we are forsaken by our friends and deserted by those whom we trusted, we have the comforting assurance of the Master, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee, I will be with thee to the end." If we are striving to scatter the precious seed and we see no results—if all our labor seems in vain, we may turn to God's Word and read this promise, "My Word shall not return unto me void but it shall accomplish that which I please and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it." And again, "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." And yet again, "Be not weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

GOD'S PROMISES.

The promises of God! What a blessed source of joy, comfort and inspiration to the true believer! What a store house of love, mercy and kindness they reveal unto us! How they cause our hearts to rejoice in hope! God in his goodness has through his holy Word, given unto us exceeding great and precious promises whereby we may be partakers of the divine nature. But of all these precious promises there is none perhaps which gives such joy to the sons of men as these: "He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die;" and "He that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live." What greater promise could we ask than that of eternal life? What greater blessing could God give us than an endless life of joy and happiness? Without this promise how dreary would the future appear! We would have no glorious hereafter to cheer us on our way. No hope to spur us on when we would falter and fall by the wayside. All would be dark, gloomy and dreary. We should have nothing to look forward to—no blessed thought of meeting our Savior, of seeing him face to face, or of meeting our lost loved ones. But thank God! He has given this promise. We know that if we believe in him we shall live again. Death is not the end. There is hope of life beyond the grave.

tory that overcometh the world; even our faith. Our faith is the victory, we have faith, for we believe that Jesus is the Son of God and he will give us the victory over the world, not the earth itself, but over the things in it that are evil. And each one must do their best and in so doing help to bring the world to Christ. By faith Abraham offered up Isaac, his only son. But the greatest sacrifice, which means the most to us, was the Son that God gave, his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have everlasting life. He giveth us faith, the victory that overcometh the world.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

We read the story in Luke x. 30 to 37, Jesus said a man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and on the way he met some robbers. They stole his clothes and wounded him and left him by the roadside to die. Soon a priest came along and saw the poor man; but instead of helping him he crossed the road and went on, not wanting to be bothered. A Levite came along and did the same as the priest, probably thinking himself far above the man lying by the roadside. But after a while a Samaritan came along and when he saw the man stopped and pitied him. Then he lifted him up on to his own animal after binding up his wounds. Then he led him to a hotel, and paid for the man's room and meals. The lesson in this story is very plain. We should all do likewise and be good to the helpless and to those who are in trouble.

EMIL GESIK.

Believing that all the societies should contribute to the "Berean Column," and as no[illegible] ed from this p[illegible] fered on Lesson No. 17, in the "Berean Bible Lessons." The various topics in the lesson are noticed briefly in the order in which they occurred.

LOVE.

We read in 1 Jno. iv. 8, that God is love. He gave us an example of that love in that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might have everlasting life. Love is the great drawing power that brings us to him; not fear, for perfect love casteth out fear. 1 Jno. iv. 18. He that feareth is not made perfect in love. The love of Christ is very apparent in all his life while here on earth, in making the lame to walk, the blind to see, and restoring the dead to life, these were the greatest evidences of love.

We are told to love God with our whole being. If we love him as we should we will also love the brethren. The manifestation of this love to the world is the change we make in our lives. "Love thy neighbor as thyself." If we can work ourselves up to this point, we will have showed forth this great love to the world. The great and perfect law is that of love. James says, if ye fulfil the "royal law" love thy neighbor as thyself. Paul says the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. It is the love he has for us that brought the great plan of salvation, being so broad in its purpose, that Paul says there is nothing that can separate us from that love. Charity or love suffereth long, is kind, seeketh not her own, etc., this is the opposite of selfishness. There is no love manifested in a selfish person, either toward God or man. The Master, himself, says that by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love, one to another. Paul heads the list of virtues, which are the "fruits of the Spirit" with love.

Love is the greatest of all Christian virtues because it "casteth out fear," worketh "no ill to a neighbor" covereth the multitude of sins is the "fulfilling of the law." And by this we know that we love the children of God when we love him. Let us keep ourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life. Jude 21.

Communicated.

The next annual Conference of the Church of God in Ohio which is to be held at Brush Creek in a tent on the premises of Bro. John Lehman, Aug. 23 to 26, will soon roll around. We urge all the brethren to make a special effort to be present. Much good has been done as a result of the past three Conferences.

Bro. P. Neill submits the following report Work done by us from Aug. 1905 to June, 1906. This includes Sisters Nancy Barber and Mattie Niell and P. Neill, the Evangelists for the State of Ohio. It is simply impossible, in a brief report, to give you more than a mere idea of the work we have done in the time stated. Indeed the only way you could possibly get even a fair understanding of the work, would be to go with us for one month.

We will give you the items of one case to illust[illegible] the whole. We held a series of [illegible]ings at Willowvale school over three miles from Salem. We heard of the school Sunday. Early Monday morning we start to see the place. Having no horse or auto we walk. It had rained heavy, mud everywhere. It is on a country road. Hard walking. The school is found. Get the consent of the teacher. Next find the trustees. Another walk. We got the use of the school on condition that we leave everything in good order. So that the teacher will not complain. We walk to town, to the newspaper offices and arrange for notice of meetings, and small hand bills. Get home about noon. Walked eight miles. Carry home considerable mud. Two days afterward go out to the school with printed notices of meetings for the scholars to take home. Deliv[illegible] on the way. Get [illegible] buy some 25[illegible] with [illegible]tors, and take a large one from home to read by. We must also carry oil. We begin meetings the next following Tuesday evening and hold Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings and Sunday afternoon. If we cannot borrow a horse and buggy we hire one for 50 cents or a little more for the evening. We go early to make the fire, fix the lamps, to sweep and dust. We may have half a mile to go for the key. After all is ready, a fair audience may gather. We preach the glad tidings, sometimes there is more or less interest shown. We fix the school house ready for the morning, take back the key, go home late. Meantime you brethren and sisters have likely be[illegible] and comfortable at home. [illegible]out, no matter what kind [illegible] except the very worst. Thus y[illegible] or one week of meetings we [illegible] weeks' work, besides what we have at home, which is sometimes enough, and to spare.

We kept this work going all through September, October and November. The gospel was preached where it never was heard before. Some of the meetings were good, some not; but the work was done, and should be gone over again and again. Sometimes we were asked to come again. In one place asked if we could not come regular, say once in two weeks, our reply was that, we're trying to spread this great truth to salvation, as far as possible, but if circumstances permitted we would be glad indeed to come again, and even regular. Brethren, there is work, plenty of it for several Evangelists in Ohio, and if every one gave a tenth the truth could be sounded in many dark corners. And my brethren, I do not, truly I do not know how we are to account to the Lord our Master for not doing it. I often wonder, and tremble to think how far behind we are in reasonable service. There are some that give freely, that accounts for the work that is now done. There are some that grumble and do not give. That accounts for the work that is not done. Again I say, we wonder and tremble. There are over 225 members in Ohio, figuring on the lowest basis of income, one-tenth would be one hundred and thirty-five dollars per week for church and evangelist work. With correct figures it would be much more. It does not take even one-half of $67.50 per week for all church expenses in Ohio, but if it did, there would still be $67.50 for evangelist work. This would enable the truth to be sounded throughout Ohio as it never has been in the history of the State. Is it any wonder, that we who know this do wonder and tremble for those who do not seem to think that there is any need for further efforts, and therefore give one cent, where they should give ten, or give nothing? There could easily be four evangelists kept going, in ordinary comfort through Ohio, and it needs all of such, and more to accomplish the work. May we all, every one of us, from the heart, pray that the Lord may have pity on us, to open all minds to see the tremendous importance of the work we should do, and are not doing it. In December I held meetings of the greatest interest in Rootville, Pa., the home of Bro. J. T. Ongley. Invited there by the Advent church, by special vote I was urged to stay as long as I could. I did so, was warmly invited back. There is work to do there that should be done. From there I went to Bro. B. F. Smith's, Kimball, O. Held excellent meetings in North Monroeville and Oxford.

In January held special meetings in Salem, as we have had before, had good attendance, some still come. In Feb. held meetings in Alliance, rented the Independence church. Meetings a failure, as were all religious meetings in Alliance, at that time; so much so that leading preachers were angry at their congregations. In March we were quarantined on account of wife having diphtheria, so that our Salem meetings were closed. In April Sister Barber and wife held meetings at Sistersville, West Virginia. [illegible] material much interest manifested in questions, and kindly pressing invitations to come again. The rent of hall, and all expense paid by Bro. Farley, except traveling. Bro. and Sister Farley are notable examples of self denial for the kingdom of God's sake. In the latter part of April held meetings in Beloit, O., eight miles from Salem, O. had good meetings, the truth never preached there before, should be preached again. May and June have been in Cleveland, and those who know can testify that my work there took no less than twelve hours per day, and seven days per week.

Summary—September, October and November held meetings at various points at three to seven miles from Salem, Ohio. December meetings at Rootville; January meetings at Salem; February meetings at Alliance; March quarantined; April meetings at Sistersville, West Virginia and Beloit, O.; May and June at Cleveland. All the time at Salem, O., meetings never neglected, some one always here on Sunday. Evangelists who have a home church to look after, and preach all round besides, never eat the bread of idleness. Add to the many other duties the writing of many, many most important letters, which take sometimes long and careful consideration. May the love and patience of God and our Lord Jesus Christ be extended to us each and all, and we on our part, each and all realize and do our duty in the love of the truth.

The above report by P. Neill shows that the Evangelists have been doing much good work in the State of Ohio, and elsewhere, and are in need of our support both financially and otherwise. May each and all do our duty,

Evangelizing Notice.

The N. W. Conference has selected me again as Evangelist. The Brethren have added Arizona, and California to my field of labor. Any church or isolated brethren that want meetings during the Conference year should correspond with me at an early date so I can plan my year's work for this extensive territory which now includes western Oregon, Washington, California and Arizona.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, prerequisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Occupy Till I Come.

How can we better "occupy" (for occupy means to hold for use) than trying to bring before all who will come and listen, the Bible in the shape of daily lessons along important lines with a sermon each evening on some subjects used as lessons and suggested for the "Torch Lake School." We are hoping and believing if this almost superhuman effort in gospel work is along the right lines and according to God's will, that we shall hear from many very soon, with their offering in money, or that if they cannot attend themselves they will pay the fare of others who would so gladly go if they had the means. I have received from Sister Sipe of La., $10.00 and from Sister Morse of Mo., $1.00. How very thankful we are for these gifts of love. If every one who believes in the soon coming of Christ would send even $1.00, O what could not be done. What is done must come quickly, as Aug. 1st is close at hand. May God move the heart, hand and purse of those who are looking for eternal life, and help them to help others to be heirs of the glorious kingdom. Yours working in his name.

Obituary.

Miss Sarah Caroline Colwell was born in Meigs County, Ohio, June 8, 1856; was married to Wm. E. Frost July 26, 1879. They moved to Mecosta County, Michigan, in 1883, and came to Lake View seven years ago, where she fell asleep in Jesus July 3, 1906. Sister Frost has been a great sufferer for many years with a complication of diseases—a final stroke of paralysis ended here sufferings. Her patience through all her suffering was remarkable. She loved nothing so well as to talk and hear others talk of the blessed promises of God. Last Monday as her husband and I were talking of the soon coming of Jesus, I remarked, It did not take Sister Frost long to see and believe when she heard the good news, she quickly answered, No, no, not long, we thought she was then past all consciousness, but her ears caught the words she loved to hear so well. She accepted the gospel heartily several years ago at our meetings at Decker school house. There she wished her funeral sermon preached and to be laid in the near by cemetery. The services were conducted by Sister Woodward. Text from Psa. cxvi. 15. She leaves a devoted husband and two brothers, H. Cass Colwell of Los Angeles, Cal., and H. D. Colwell of Montgomery County, Ohio. May each of them trust as she always has in that God who has promised his true children eternal life, is our prayer.

M. A. WOODWARD.

He who has found Christ a Savior will confess him as such, and as Master and Lord also. Lydia and the jailor did this, by the appointed ordinance, "straitway." In our own easier times there is more peril of self-deception, and so converts are detained awhile for trial. But this should never be too long. There is more safety in the fold than without; and the Master wants us there.

Communicated.

At the Lord's Table.

Dear brothers and sisters:

We have again met to partake of these emblems, which show forth our Lord's death. Is not this a glorious privilege? Do we appreciate our exalted position? We are sons and daughters of God; he has adopted us into his family and Jesus is our elder brother. He permits us to call him our Father, he grants us the privilege of pouring into his ears our wants, our sorrows, our anxieties, his ear is ever open to our prayer, and he is able to do for us more than we can ask or think.

We are children of the everlasting God and joint heirs with Christ. Then we ought to value very highly our position this morning. We are privileged to come here and forget for a time our cares and anxieties, and to fix our minds on God and his truth. We can shut ourselves in from the world and listen to exhortations, and think on the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. In the world we are surrounded by sin, on every side we find sin in all its alluring forms.

We should be glad to come to this place and shut ourselves in from all that is evil. The time is coming when we will not have to shut ourselves in to avoid evil. Evil is not to last forever. The wicked will not always flourish. There is a good time coming, yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; Yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place and it shall not be. Psa. xxxvii. 10. What a change there will be in the earth, we can scarcely realize it, but it is true, the time is coming when the wicked shall not be.

Bro. Lang spoke last Sunday of a privilege we have at this meeting, that of telling of our experiences during the week, making known the trials and sorrows we have had. It will lighten the burden. It is good to confess these things. This is a privilege we can avail ourselves of if we will. Those in isolation cannot do this, then how much we ought to appreciate the privilege.

The object of meeting together is that we may grow up into Christ our living head in all things. It is of no use to come here for mere custom's sake. No we should come to this place to get good, to get food that will help to build us up spiritually. No one can willfully neglect to assemble themselves with those of like precious faith and grow in favor and in knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Meeting together helps to build up if we come in the proper spirit. It will strengthen us and assist us to avoid the temptations we come in contact with during the week. Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." Heb. x. 24-25.

One of the reasons for provoking and exhorting one another to good works, is to help us to avoid sin and overcome temptations that come in our path. This is obvious, because the next verse tells us, "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins." God in his goodness has given us a great many helps to assist us in becoming overcomers, and this command to assemble ourselves together and exhort one another to love and good works is one of them.

We need the frequent exhortation to walk in the narrow way and bring forth good fruit, that we may be accepted of Jesus when he comes.

It is wise to be fully alive to our responsibilities and privileges. If we are not we are likely to become inactive, indolent in the Lord's work. Therefore we need the frequent exhortation of our brothers and sisters in order that we may keep before us the fact that there is work to do. The Lord said occupy until I come. The gospel must be proclaimed or else we are not doing our duty to God and his truth. We must not grow weary in well doing. Therefore, let us exhort one another to love and good works. Let us appreciate more highly the privilege we have at this meeting, that of exhorting each other.

Conference Report.

The N. W. Conference of The Church of God met at Felida, Wash. June 15th, '06, and continued over the 16th and 17th of June.

The attendance was not so large as in some of the past years, accident and sickness having kept a number of the Brethren and officers away.

Four discourses were given,—two by Bro. A. W. Darby and two by W. L. Skeels. Two sessions were devoted to social meetings and three to business. Great interest and harmony existed throughout. The Hall at Felida is provided with kitchen and dining-room, which made it very convenient to spend the time between sessions in pleasant visiting. The discourses and subjects were were well appreciated; the social meetings heart cheering.

Business meeting assembled at 3 p. m. June 16th, President Brother Knapp being absent, Brother P. G. Woolf acted, and Brother Lewis Montgomery was appointed Secretary pro tem. On account of unavoidable absence of the Secretary, Sister Almira Brook, the minutes of preceding conference were not presented. The included report of Evangelist was read and accepted.

Report of Evangelist to N. W. Conference for the year beginning June 20th, 1905 and ending June 15th, 1906.

Evangelist held meetings in Washington at Crooked Creek, Tacoma, Etna, Lake Shore and Felida. In Oregon at Scholls, Central Point, Eugene and Corvallis. In Arizona at Nichols School house near Tempe, Isaac School house near Phoenix, Cartright School house, Glendale and Tempe. In California at Tustin, Tipton, Oleander and Wolf.

All time and expense paid by donations made to Evangelist in person including $23.25 beyond time and expense to be applied to future work. Evangelist traveled about 4,500 miles and held 80 meetings in Washington, 12 in Oregon, 43 in Arizona and 41 in California. More meetings could have been held during the time with better system of arranging and announcing the meetings. Nine believers immersed and one church organized.

I feel grateful to the Brethren in the regions of my work for their universal kindness and great liberality in supporting the work.

I submit the following financial statement: Evangelist worked 184 days $276.00; Expense $101.70; Total $377.70; Donated by W. L. S. as loss on time and expense $17.70; Whole amount due $360.00.

The desire was expressed in both California and Arizona to be included under the Conference work in order to get assistance from visits of Evangelist and to aid in his support.

People are famishing for the Bread of Life; let us do all we can to help the perishing.

Kindly submitted,
W. L. Skeels.

When report of Treasurer was called for, it was announced by our Evangelist that since our last Conference, Brother C. K. Schmeltzer, our Treasurer had died, and that the Evangelist had called upon his widow and learned that the Treasury contained a balance of $32.70, due to the conference which can not be collected until the Estate is settled by the Administrator. The Evangelist turned into the Treasury $23.25, the balance received from donations.

The report from the churches did not give as good indications as might exist if all individuals saw the necessity of greater zeal and enthusiasm.

It was moved and carried that the rule should be established that letters of commendation may be issued if applied for by other parties than those receiving them, providing one or more of the members of the Conference recommend them to the Conference.

Letters of Commendation were granted to Brothers A. W. Darby of Corvallis, Oregon, Wm. Prosser of Scholls, Oregon, Edwd Groat of Grangerville, California, N. C. Griswold, Tacoma, Washington, Brother Smalley, Eden, Washington, and W. L. Skeels, Etna, Washington.

By unanimous action and on account of call for work in California and Arizona, the Territory of the N. W. Conference was extended to include California and Arizona in addition to territory heretofore canvassed; viz. Oregon and California.

A vote was carried extending votes of thanks to Brother Wm. Prosser for labor heretofore rendered for the cause of Christ. The conference chose Brother W. L. Skeels for Evangelist for the coming year.

The following officers were chosen for the coming year:

President, Lewis Montgomery of Portland, Ore.

Vice-President J. W. Melvin, Felida, Washington.

Secretary, E. W. Knapp, Laurel, R. D. Oregon.

Treasurer, J. E. Melvin, Portland, Oregon.

Question of building a church at Felida was discussed favorably. Chair appointed committee to report on the question of building a church. Committee met and considered the question. In the evening session, Committee reported favorably to erecting a Church of God building. Report accepted. Through a little effort, over $1,000 was subscribed towards building the Church.

A committee on subscription and a committee of Church building were appointed. The Committee on Building consisted of Brother August Johnson, President, Brother H. B. Hathaway, Secretary, Brother Wallace Wooll, Treasurer.

We feel that the work has been benefited by the meetings of the N. W. Conference.

Lewis Montgomery, Secy. Pro Tem.

Torch Lake Bible School.

"How shall I get to this place? I do not find it on the R. R. maps."

Bro. Neill's question is one we would like to answer for others who may be interested as well. Take the Pere Marquette and C. H. & D. system. Get your ticket to Petoskey and stop at Central Lake. Torch Lake is nine miles distant [illegible] and Torch [illegible] stop off at Central [illegible]. A telephone line runs from Central Lake to Torch Lake and East Port. Call and we will answer, Hello. We are glad to know and inform those interested; that Bro. Neill expects to be at Torch Lake Bible School. His presence and instruction will be for all present, an inspiration. "We are workers together with God."

Islam Plotting "Holy War."

The fear of another "holy war" in Egypt in which the native Mohammedan elements will unite in one last desperate effort to drive out the English "infidels" has become more acute since Earl Gray made his sensational announcement in the house of commons Thursday night.

That the peril of pan-Islam exists is beyond question, and Earl Grey did not exaggerate its significance. For months past information from many reliable sources, not only in Egypt, but in all Moslem countries, has made it clear that a great pan-Islam movement was in contemplation and might at any moment find expression in an outbreak of a holy war.

There is more uneasiness here over the moslem peril than over the Russian situation. It is interesting to note that France is supporting the English position in Egypt at this juncture even more heartily than England has France in Morocco. Figaro today goes so far as to hold the kaiser responsible for the threatened moslem uprising.

It was twenty-four years ago, in 1882, that Muhammed Ahmed, a Mohammedan fanatic, raised the green flag, calling the faithful to a holy war, and proclaimed himself to be the mahdi, or "messenger of God," sent to drive the English out of Egypt. Natives joined El Mahdi's standard by thousands. He first laid siege to Al-Obeid, in the province of Kordofan, and after seven months reduced it to submission.

The Anglo-Egyptian force, under Hicks Pasha, sent against El Mahdi was defeated in a three days' battle, Nov. 3-5, 1883, and scarcely a man escaped alive.

The English government sent Sir Samuel White Baker, formerly governor general of the Soudan, with a large force of Egyptian and English troops. In an effort to relieve Sinkat and Tokat, besieged by Osman Digna, the tireless ally of El Mahdi, Gen. Baker's army was defeated on Feb. 4, 1884, and throughout all of southern Egypt the green flag of the mahdi waved triumphant.

Then the English sent Gen. "Chinese" Gordon to cope with the situation. Gordon reached Khartum, where he was besieged and eventually butchered with every man in his command. That was on Jan. 26, 1885.

Lord Wolesley, with another expedition, tried to penetrate the Soudan in 1885 and 1886, but failed, and for more than ten years afterwards El Mahdi was the fanatical dictator of all Egypt below the Wady-Halfa.

All these years the English people demanded that their government avenge the death of Gordon. Politics delayed the reconquest of the Soudan, however, and it was not until 1896 that Lord Kitchener started southward along the Nile.

As Kitchener advanced farther and farther into the Soudan the dervishes concentrated their forces to resist his progress. They finally gave battle on April 8, 1898, at the mouth of the Atbara river. Kitchener had 13,000 troops, all Egyptian but a few battalions. There were 30,000 dervishes under Osman Digna and Emir Mahmoud. The dervishes lost 2,000 men. Emir Mahmoud was captured, but [illegible] continued his advance and on Sept. 7 1898, reached Omdurman. Here on that date Gen. Gordon was avenged. In the battle the dervish force was practically annihilated. On the field of battle were counted 10,800 dead. The English captured 16,000 wounded and between 3,000 and 4,000 surrendered.—Chicago Tribune.

Simple Willingness.

"A simple willingness to serve the Master." It was a petition in a good man's prayer, which, falling on the ear of the writer, has long dwelt in her memory.

In this busy, hurrying age, when so many are working at fever heat, in the church, as well as out of it—when our books and papers, the sermons we hear, even our intercourse with friends, all seem to stimulate to yet greater activity—that prayer for "simple willingness" falls like a soothing balm upon the overwrought.

There are some of us—not a few—whose hands are not idle, but who chafe and fret against the bounds of our appointed place, and look longingly towards what we deem a nobler, larger work. The words "mission" "vocation," "a higher sphere of activity," so much on the lips nowadays, too often steal between us and a simple willingness.

We are too prone,

"The daily task to-forgetting," to look too eagerly beyond to some great work we should love to perform for the Master; while we count as "common" the work he himself has laid upon our hands. We pant to serve him in the throng, when he calls us to a desert place.

"Do not pray for strength to bear the tortures of the Inquisition," says Spurgeon, "when what you need may be grace to uncomplainingly darn the family hose!"

We may fondly think how well we might serve the Master "in such and such a place." "If I were free from such heavy, homely cares," sighs one; "If I had only my once firm health," moans another.

But what we may need for service anywhere is the simple willingness to "do the next thing," whatever that may be.

How would the church—aye, the world—grow in grace if the servants of Christ more frequently and sincerely lifted and practiced this beautiful petition.

The Aged—Their Value.

As far as we know we have always endeavored to honor and respect age. In many ways it has afforded us much pleasure to be in the company of aged people, to listen to their conversation. But it is only of late years, as one after another of them has passed away, that we have been made to feel the value of their society, and how much we lost by not appreciating our opportunities as fully as we certainly now would, if we had them as near to us as we once had them. Questions come up bearing upon the history of the Church or State, of things in former times, that father such a one could answer and explain better than any one else; but that father is no longer here; both he and his generation for the most part have left us. With such authorities much valuable information and knowledge have passed away and been lost. The moral of all this is that we should appreciate the value of our grandfathers, our grandmothers, and our great grand parents, if they are still alive, and honor them also more than we perhaps do, and get all the treasures from them that we can whilst they are still with us.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Be Strong.

How often do men get discouraged when they seem to labor in vain and spend their strength for naught. They think they are accomplishing nothing, and abandon their efforts in despair. But in this they are hasty and unwise, for no man can tell the full results of his present labors, if his work is wrought in God. He is sowing seed, and God only knows how rich the harvest shall be, he is laying foundations and only God knows how magnificent the superstructure will be which will rise upon them. He is dealing with beginnings, but only God can see the end from the beginning,—when a rivulet shall grow to a river, when a little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation.

Let the sons of God be of good courage. They did not begin the Lord's work; they will not end it; he cared for the world before they were in it, and he will watch over their work [illegible] after they have gone from it. It is for them to hold fast; stand firm, and do the work of the hour in the hour allotted to it. The Master knows the whys and hows, the whens and wherefores; and he who has given us work, knows how to carry forward that work, and bring it forth gloriously triumphant at last. He may bury his workmen, but he does not bury his work. That goes on.

Let the servants of the Most High take courage, and be strong in the grace of Jesus Christ. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. Be of good cheer, for he who has been with you in the conflicts past will abide with you in days to come, for he will never leave, will never forsake you.—The Christian.

MARRIED.

Brother Stanley Ambrose Sanford and Sister Hattie Evalyn Pate were united in marriage at the family residence 3 Gale Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, June 28th, 1906. Only relatives were invited. This young couple first sought the kingdom of God and his righteousness several years ago, and have since been working together with God, and can certainly claim his presence and blessing, as they start on the voyage of life. They are also assured that the prayers of the Household of Faith will ascend in their behalf, that their faith fail not; that they may set their faces like flints for God and Truth, so that an entrance may be administered unto them abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Notice.

Will all Berean Societies and isolated members affiliated with the Illinois State Berean Society please send a report of their meetings and work for the year before August 11, to the Secretary, Leila E. Whitehead, 5428 Ontario St., Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois.

We wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

The best thing to give your enemy is forgiveness; to an opponent, tolerance; to a friend, your heart; to your child, a good example; to a father, deference; to your mother, conduct that will make her proud of you: to yourself, respect; to all men, charity.

We need what is due us on subscriptions and trust all who know themselves to be in arrears will remember us. We appreciate the favor.

Poetry.

When Will He Come?

Closing the book I've been reading—
Putting work and adornments away,—
Shall I need them again on the morrow?
Will he come ere the dawn of the day?

Raising my head from the pillow,
Opening my eyes to the light,—
Have I slept my last sleep ere I see him?
Will he come ere the fall of the night?

Watching the sun in its glory,
As he sinks to his rest in the skies,
When the gold-tinted clouds shall proclaim
Will the Sun of Righteousness rise.

Then moonbeams are shining so softly,
And the pale stars look down from their home,
Ere their light into beauty has faded,
The Bright Morning Star may have come!

Whilst I pause at the intervening billows
As they dart their proud heads on the sand,
Will he come, who restrains their fury
By the strength of his Almighty Hand?

Will he come while the tempest is raging,
And the wind hill can number falls rested?
Will he come when the snow-flakes are falling?
And the frost-king hath smitten the ground?

Will he come on some calm Sabbath morning
When chimes of church bells fill the air?
When the organ's rich echoes are thrilling
His house of thanksgiving and prayer?

Kneeling down at the feast he has ordered,
"Do this," he has said, "till I come."
As I greet him in Holy Communion,
Shall I hear his voice calling me home?

Keep me ready, dear Master, to greet thee,
Grant me grace to obey thy command
To wait—and to pray—and watch daily
Remembering, "The Lord is at hand."

9. And I acquired the field of Anameel, a son of my father's brother, and I stood (weighed in a balance) for him seven shekels and ten of silver;

10. And I wrote in a little book (or legal document) and sealed it (this made it an instrument under seal) and I took the testimony of witnesses (this made it an attested instrument) and I stood the silver in a balance (this was a legal tender).

11. And I took the little book (the legal written conveyance) of the acquisition that had been sealed, and I gave it to Barouch, a son of Neerios, a son of Massaios before the eyes of Anameel a son of my father's brother and before the eyes of the prominent men who were standing by and who were writing in the book of the judicial acquisition (we would say the records) and before the eyes of the Jeudaians who were in the court yard of the prison.

12. And I directed Barouch before their eyes, saying;

14. In this wise hath the All-Controling Lord said, Take this written instrument of the acquisition even the one that hath been read, and place it in an earthen vessel, that it may last for many more days;

15. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, Yet again will fields and houses and vineyards have been acquired in the land.

16. And I offered I votive-prayer unto the Lord after I had given the written instrument of the acquisition unto Barouch, son of Neerios saying;

17. O Ho-oon, O Lord, Thou didst create the heavens and the earth with thy great strength and with thy uplifted and very high arm; nothing can be hid from thee;

18. Thou who art doing mercy to thousands and repaying sins of fathers into the bosoms of their offspring after them; thou great, thou strong God:

19. Thou Lord of great counsel and able in thy works, thou great God, thou All-controlling and Great-named Lord: thine eyes are on the ways of the sons of men, to give to each one according to his way;

20. Thou who didst cause signs and prodigies in a land of Aigupton unto this day, and in Israel and among the native inhabitants, and didst make for thyself a name as it is this day:

21. And didst lead out thy laity Israel out of a land of Aigupton with signs and prodigies with a controling hand and an uplifted arm:

22. And with great visions; and didst give unto them this land which thou didst swear unto their fathers to give unto them, a land bowing with milk and honey.

23. And they came in and took it, and did not hearken to thy voice and did not go their way in thy commandments; did not do all the things which thou didst enjoin on them, and who did cause to occur unto them all those evil things;

24. Lo, a mixed multitude is coming into this city to take possession of it, and the city hath been given into the hands of the Chaldaioi who are warring it from before the face of the sword and the famine; as thou didst say, even so hath it come to pass.

25. And thou dost say unto me, Acquire for thyself the field with silver, and I have written an instrument and had it sealed and taken the testimony of witnesses, and the city hath been given into the hands of Chaldaioi.

26. And a word of the Lord occurred unto me saying;

27. I am the Lord God of all flesh, and from me will anything be hid?

28. Therefore in this wise hath the Lord God of Israel said, This city will have been given up into the hands of king of Babuloon, and he will take it.

29. And Chaldaioi will come warring against this city, and they will burn this city with fire, and they will burn upon the house upon the roofs of which they have burned incense to Baal and poured libations to other gods to embitter me.

30. Because the sons of Israeel and the sons Jouda alone were doing the wicked thing before mine eyes from their youth up.

31. Because upon my wrath and upon my anger was this city, from the day they built it to remove it away from my face,

32. By reason of all the wicked acts of the sons of Israeel and Jouda, which they had done to embitter me, they and their kings and their rulers and their priests and their prophets prominent men of Jouda and those dwelling in Hierousaleem;

33. And they turned unto me their back and not their face, and I taught them at early dawn and they no longer hearkened to take chastening-instruction;

34. And they placed their miasmas in the house whereupon my name had been invoked, with their acts of uncleanness;

35. And they built their altars with steps unto Baal in a valley of a son of Ennom to offer their sons and their daughters unto king Moloch; things which I did not direct them to do, and which did not come up upon my heart that they should do this abomination in their sinning against Jouda.

36. And now in this wise hath the Lord God of Israeel said in respect to this city which thou sayest will have been delivered up into the hands of a king of Babuloon unto sword and famine and a sending away;

37. Lo, I am gathering them together from all the earth where I have scattered them in my wrath and in my anger, and I am going to seat them in confidence;

38. And they will be unto me for a laity and I shall be unto them for a God.

39. And I shall give unto them another way and another heart to fear me all the days and for a good God unto them and unto their offspring after them.

40. And I shall have covenanted with them an age-lasting covenant which I shall not turn back from them; and fear of me I shall give into their heart so that they will not not apostatize from me.

41. And I shall visit for take an oversight of, them to do them good, and I shall plant them in this land in faith and with all my heart and with all my soul.

42. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, Even as I led upon this laity all these great evils just so shall I lead upon them all the good things which I have talked in respect to them.

43. And fields will have been acquired again in the land which thou art saying will be a trackless waste devoid of men and domestic animals and which hath been given up into the hands of Chaldaioi:

44. And they will acquire fields with money (silver) and do thou write a legal instrument and seal it, and go through the testimony of witnesses in a land of Benjamin and round about Hierousaleem and in cities of Jouda and in cities of the mountain and in cities of the valley and in cities of the south, because I shall turn back their removals.

COMMENT.

What purports to be this same 39th chapter is given in the C. V. and R. V. as the 32nd. The variations of thought and statement are not as many and as important as in most of the preceding chapters. The reader should compare the language of the real estate transfer and conveyance so minutely given in this chapter and see how it substantially coincides with the forms in legal vogue even now. For it illustrates the enduring nature of fundamental law of any kind. The closing verses of the chapter make God's promise of return and restoration of Israeel to this land and these old cities very specific. Query. Has this title of the prophet Hieremias yet been asserted in the land of Benjamin?

Report of Labors in Iowa.

By request of the President of the Iowa State Conference I give a short report of evangelistic work done recently in Iowa.

Having held a fifteen days meeting in Clarksville during January, last, which apparently created a deep interest on the part of many there, a demand for more preaching of the same kind was made, and I was appealed to to return and continue the work. I was unable to return to Clarksville until April 18th on account of previous engagements. This was too late in the season to hope for interesting meetings with the best success to do. Our meetings were held in the G. A. R. hall and continued ten days. Owing to the time being the busy season with farmers, house cleaning and garden making with the village folks the attendance was not large, but splendid interest was manifest on the part of those who attended the meetings, and further demands were made for meetings to be held at that place later on, in the fall or coming winter. Although the gospel of the kingdom has been preached in that place for many years yet the people there generally have paid little or no attention to it until the January meeting above mentioned.

By careful and persistent work a good congregation of believers can no doubt be built up in Clarksville. The few of our faith there are God-honoring men and women, having the confidence and respect of those who know them, and it is a pleasure to labor with them.

From Clarksville I went to Waterloo, where I spoke two evenings in the dining hall on the Conference campgrounds, there being no convenient places to be secured in the city at reasonable prices. Owing to the location of the place of holding these meetings at that time in the year they were well attended and good interest manifested.

From Waterloo I went to Irving and began meetings Wednesday evening May 2nd, and continued each evening until Sunday evening following. Our people have a church building in this little village, and considering the very busy season our meetings were well attended, and the interest very good. On the last evening of our meetings, in response to an invitation from the Pastor of the M. E. Church at this place I spoke in the M. E. Church. This kind and charitable disposition shown by the Pastor of that church was much appreciated, and a good congregation listened very attentively to the discourse, and all present seemed greatly interested in the service.

In my opinion much more good may be accomplished by our manifesting more charity and tolerance towards those who do not agree with us than can be done by taking advantage of every opportunity to give them a Bible wrangling. Wounds of any kind are far more easily made than healed. Although the attendance at these meetings was not as large as we might desire, yet considering the season of the year, and the good interest manifest we would consider the effort a success.

A Parable—Strange But True.

A wealthy farmer, who cultivated some thousands of acres, had by his benevolence endeared himself greatly to his large staff of laborers. He had occasion to leave the country in which his property was situated, for some years, but before doing so he gave his people clearly to understand that he wished the whole of the cultivated land to be kept in hand, and all the unreclaimed moor and marsh lands to be enclosed and drained and brought into cultivation; that even the hills were to be terraced, and the poor mountain pastures manured, so that no single corner of the estate should remain neglected and barren. Ample resources were left for the execution of these works, and there were sufficient hands to have accomplished the whole within the first few years of the proprietor's absence.

He was detained in the country to which he had been called very many years. Those whom he left children were men and women when he came back, and so the number of his tenantry and [illegible] was vastly multiplied. Was [illegible]ask he had given them to do [illegible]ished? Alas! no. Bog and moor and waste were only wilder and more desolate than ever. Fine, rich virgin soil by thousands of acres was bearing only briers and thistles. Meadow after meadow was utterly barren for want of culture. Nay, by far the larger part of the farm seemed never to have been visited by his servants.

Had they been idle? Some had. But large numbers had been industrious enough. They had expended a vast amount of labor, and skilled labor too, but they had bestowed it all on the park immediately around the house. This had been cultivated to such a perfection that the workmen had scores of times quarreled with each other because the operations of one interfered with those of his neighbor.

[illegible] been idle, in sowing [illegible]y same patch, for instance, with corn fifty times over in one season, so that the seed never had time to germinate and grow and bear fruit; in caring for the forest trees as if they had been tender saplings; in manuring soils already too fat, and watering pastures already too wet.

The farmer was positively astonished at the misplaced ingenuity with which labor and seed skill and time and strength, had been wasted, for no result. The very same amount of toil and capital expended according to his directions would have brought the whole demesne into culture and yielded a noble revenue. But season after season had rolled away in sad succession, leaving those unbounded acres of va[illegible] but all reclaimable, soils [illegible]d useless; and as to the pa[illegible]ld have been far more pro[illegible]d perfect had it been relie[illegible]te extraordinary and unaccountable amount of energy expended on it.

Why did these laborers act so absurdly? Did they wish to labor in vain? On the contrary, they were forever craving for fruit, coveting good crops, longing for great results.

Did they not wish to carry out the farmer's views about his property? Well, they seemed to have that desire for they were always reading the directions he wrote, and said continually to each other: "You know we have to bring the whole property in order." But they did not do it.

Some few tried, and plowed up a little plot here and there, and sowed corn and other crops. Perhaps these failed, and so the rest got discouraged? Oh, no; they saw that the yield was magnificent, far richer in proportion than they got themselves. They clearly perceived that, but yet they failed to follow a good example. Nay, when the labors of a few in some distant valley had resulted in a crop they were unable to gather in by themselves, the others would not even go and help them to bring home the sheaves. They preferred watching for weeds among the roses of the overcrowded garden, and counting the blades of grass in the park and the leaves on the trees.

Then they were fools, surely, not wise men; traitors not true servants to their Lord.

Ah, I can't tell. You must ask him that. I only know their master said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," and that eighteen hundred years afterwards they had not even mentioned to one half of the world that there was a gospel—Mrs. R. Grattan Guinness.

Old Friends.

There is something in friendship that seems to grow sweeter and dearer with advancing years. Friends of our boyhood and girlhood days; friends of our early manhood, the time of struggle and conflict; friends who have been with us in the time of storm and battle, in danger, shipwreck, and adversity, cannot easily be forgotten. Those who have stood by us when friends were few, who have dared to speak when the half-hearted were silent, who have braved with us the storms of slander, of falsehood and reproach, have a claim to our regard which can hardly be shared by the untried friends of more recent dates. These old friends may have little of beauty about them, but in those wrinkled faces, grizzled locks, and hard and horny hands, there is, to the eye of friendship, an attractiveness which is not found in the dapper butterflies of the day, who smile and flutter in the sunshine, but flit away when tempests come.

It is a shame to forget old friends. Their number grows less and less with each departing year, and in a little while they will have gone from us, or we shall have gone from them; but while they tarry let us keep up the friendships of other years, and make our tried and trusted friends to understand that time has not cooled our affection, nor blotted out the memory of their sympathy, fidelity and love.

Among the highest honors that God has bestowed upon the sons of men is the honor of his friendship. "Abraham, my friend," is the introduction which God gives us to the faithful and believing patriarch, who was "called the friend of God;" and this same gracious title was bestowed by the Savior on his disciples: "Henceforth I call you not my servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard from my Father I have made known unto you."

We are proud to number the great [illegible] our friends, and to say of this and that one who was honored, "He is a friend of mine." Why should we not oftener mention our claim to friendship with the Son of God, and count it an unspeakable honor to be loved by those who love him, and hated by those who hate him? In him we find a friend that sticketh closeth than a brother, in him we have a friend who has known our souls in adversities, and who will never leave us nor forsake us; in him we have a tried and true and faithful and unfailing friend, who has stood by us in every affliction, and has helped us in every trouble, and has been with us in our times of need, and has promised to be with us to the end.

Is it possible that our affection towards our heavenly Friend should ever grow cold? Can it be that we should ever disregard his wishes, ignore his presence, or say by word or act in the hearing of his foes, "I know not the man?" Can we cast off his friendship when the the day of our need and sorrow has passed by, and in the time of prosperity forget him who was our helper in the day of our distress? Shall we not rather hold fast his sacred friendship and count his friends as our friends, his foes as our foes, rejoicing that though the world may hate us, his love outweighs all human hatred, and makes up for the loss of all human love?—The Christian.

Emotion is the bud, not the flower, and never is it of value until it expands into a flower. Every religious sentiment, every act of devotion, which does not produce a corresponding elevation of life, is worse than useless: it is absolutely pernicious, because it ministers to self-deception and tends to lower the tone of personal morals.—Murray.

The love of Christ is like the blue sky, into which you may see clearly, but the real vastness of which you cannot measure. It is like the sea, into whose bosom you can look a little way, but its depths are unfathomable.—McCheyne.

A spiritual mind has something of the nature of the sensitive plant. "I shall smart if I touch this or that" there is a holy shrinking away from evil.—Cecil's Remains.

Dirty Jokes.

There are certain persons who are gifted with the faculty of telling stories with great effect. They have a large fund of anecdotes and illustrations, and almost everything that comes up makes them "think of a story." Frequently such people are agreeable companions, but there is great danger of their dropping into vulgarity and indecency. If a young man has had his education among low associations, if his early training has been around stables, lounging places, saloons, and rum holes, unless he has great care, the things he has heard and learned in such places will cling to him and follow him all his days. He may come to occupy a high position, but he will not forget his old stories. He may make a profession of Christianity, and become a minister of the gospel, but unless he is so thoroughly changed that he loathes the things he once loved, and unless he is watchful against his heart-haunts, he will from time to time find himself indulging in the same evil propensity to which he was formerly addicted. Thus it has sometimes come to pass that persons in very high positions, who ought to be examples to all those around them, have forgotten the injunction, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth," and have defiled the memories of others with things which could do no good, but which might do much harm.

There are some people who seem to think that if they only can tell a story as they heard it, repeating it correctly, they have no further responsibility; they did not invent the story, they simply repeated it. But persons cannot thus free themselves from responsibility. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. That which comes out of the mouth defiles the man. Many stories are told which are defiling and polluting.

It is related that General Grant was once sitting in his tent with officers around him, when a general came in in much glee and said,

"I have a good story to tell; there are no ladies present, I believe."

"No," said General Grant, "but there are gentlemen present."

The man's countenance fell; and the good story was never told. Some Christians could learn a good lesson from the great commander's remark. They might learn it from Paul's words—"Let no rotten communication proceed out of your mouth."

You Did It.

Little Bessie was dying.

Her father had struck the child a blow on the spine while insane from the influence of rum, and confusion and terror overwhelm the frantic household, for little Bessie is beloved by all.

Among those of the neighbors who had gathered in amid the excitement was the rum-seller who had dealt out the poison to that neighborhood for years. He drew near the death bed, and heard a watcher, who was wiping the death-damp from the child's beautiful face, say: "That blow has killed her." Little Bessie caught the whisper, and raising her eyes, that were growing large in death, she fixed a dying gaze upon the rumseller, and said: "You did it!" and in a few minutes was dead.

That group never forgot the dying child's charge, and the rumseller says that it haunts him day and night; and yet he continues to deal out the fatal beverage to his victims. Every one of us who does not rise up and assist in crushing this destroying serpent is guilty before God, and the rumseller will say of us: "They who are not against us are for us;" and more than one "little Bessie" will say to us, "You did it."

Yes! the wholesale murder of innocents will not cease until this traffic ceases, and to-day millions of voices are crying to us from the grave, "You did it."

A Christian may find more true joy in prison than a monarch on his throne.

Announcement.

The 19th Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the beautiful Campground at Waterloo, Iowa, August 18th to 26th, inclusive. Rates of one and one-third fare from all points in Iowa have been granted by all railroads; going tickets to be purchased any time from August 17th to 23rd, inclusive, and holders of Certificates for tickets bought during that time will be entitled to return ticket for one-third fare if bought before August 30th. A certificate must be secured with each ticket bought.

Bring straw ticks and a few comforters. Tents will be furnished free. Board at our Dining Hall 25 cents per day.

We expect to have the following preaching brethren with us: A. J. Eychaner, S. J. Lindsay, L. E. Conner, Almus Adams, H. M. Lucas, G. Eldred Marsh, John Garton, and others.

For entire program of meeting with full instructions, etc., address G. P. Allard, Corresponding Secretary, Box 86, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

Ohio State Conference will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

WHEN YOUR TIME IS OUT PLEASE RENEW.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

A four-page tract in the German language, by Brother M. Joblin of Cleveland, O. Subject, "What Must I do to be Saved?" Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if printed will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Send your pledges but no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us about [illegible] give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshal., co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 18, 1906. NUMBER 27.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as preparation for final salvation.

Poetry.

Hymn.

Pilgrim, wake! behold the morning
Long foretold by holy seers,
Gild the heaven with its dawning.
Hail the blissful morn appears.
Rise ye day, so full of glory,
Holy prophets sung of thee
Raptures in poetic story
Soon the pure in heart will see.

See! the morning star is beaming
Bright upon the gilded sky.
Oh! what rays of light are gleaming,
Shout aloud, Redemption's nigh!
Sing ye now who have been weeping
Through a long night dark and drear.
Who while lonely vigils keeping,
Longed to see the day appear.

[illegible]versus Spiritual Death Penalty.

THE SHORT WAY WITH IMMORTAL SOULISM.

All Christians will admit that the penalty of God's law is death. But what is death? Lexicographers say that death is "extinction of life," and this definition is in accordance with what we have seen and known. But the "orthodox" (?) churches of the world believe and affirm that the final penalty which will be executed against the ungodly is "spiritual death," i. e. living forever in misery! But we propose to prove negatively what they ought to prove affirmatively, but cannot. Now for the short way.

[illegible]et us see Rev. xx. 14, 15, "And [illegible]ed, hades were cast into the [illegible]is the second death. [illegible] found written [illegible]s cast into [illegible] insists [illegible]ould [illegible]n [illegible]; [illegible]or [illegible]ths [illegible] human race is subject [illegible]eath; for as the last death is the "second death," there can be no third death, and consequently no "spiritual death." But it is assumed that the Adamic death penalty was spiritual death; if so, this death would be the first death, and the death of "the body," then would be the second death; but this would be in plain contradiction of the words of the revelator quoted.

In the light of the above Scriptural facts and deductions, it can be clearly seen that immortal soulists have no Scriptural authority for their assumption that the penalty of the Adamic law was, or that the penalty of the moral law is "spiritual death."

Although the above Scriptural investigation demonstrates beyond all equivocation, as we believe, that the penalty of God's law is not "spiritual death," yet, it is but a small part of the Scriptural evidence that the penalty of God's law is literal death, which is an absolute, extinction of life and being. But before proceeding to notice additional evidence of this ultimate loss of the conscious existence of the wicked, let us notice what St. Paul says of the wicked being "dead in trespasses and sins."

This word "dead" is a figure denoting absence of love for God, and also for holiness. And there is not the least intimation of death in this expression, for death is a penalty, and there is no penalty here implied but simply a state or condition, the state of sin, and not the state of punishment for having sinned. And the sinner is required and exhorted to forsake this sinful state; but how can he, if he has been judicially condemned thereto as a penalty!! And yet this expression of Paul is all the Bible evidence that can be found that "spiritual death" is the penalty of God's law!

The common doctrine that death is the "separation of soul and body"—the soul going to heaven or hell, and the body to the grave—is not only not sustained by a single passage of Scripture, but is contradicted throughout the Bible. And the cause why this contradiction is not seen by the popular churches, is first, because the nature and use of the personal nouns and pronouns in the Bible are misunderstood. They are wrongly supposed to signify the "soul" alone and also the "body" alone, and then "soul and body" combined; but they are never so used in the Scriptures of truth. And in the second place, the churches are so wedded to their idol creed as not to see anything in the Bible on doctrines outside their creed, which blindness, as to doctrines and the signs of Christ's second coming, our Lord charges against the Laodicean church of this generation.

That a personal noun or pronoun signifies the man, the whole man, we prove from the inspired Word of God. To verify this let us first see what Moses, the servant of God says, "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day [thy life time] thou eatest thereof, dying [margin i. e. being subject to death] thou shalt surely die." Gen. ii. 16, 17. We here have the positive declaration that the "man" Adam, not "the body of the man" as assumed; but the whole "man" shall die.

If, in the light of this investigation there is a doubt in the mind of the candid reader as to the Bible use of the personal nouns and pronouns, or doubt as to the nature of the Adamic penalty, the words of Moses (Gen. iii. 17) definitely settle this whole question, and are as follows:

"And unto Adam he [God] said, Because thou hast.....eaten of the tree.....In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

"And God said unto Adam thou shalt," etc. Now, for any man, however versed in Biblical and scientific knowledge, to affirm that Adam, the "man," who was "formed of the dust of the ground" does not mean Adam, the man, but only "the body of Adam" the man, as is believed and taught by the popular church of Christendom, is not only an absolute absurdity in the light of the Bible and science, but is a virtual rejection of God's words.

In this connection, and for additional evidence that our position is not only tenable, but absolutely impregnable, let us notice some of the passages which clearly show that the dead saints are not in heaven receiving their reward, nor the wicked dead in "hell" receiving their punishment before the judgment.

Christ says, (Matt. xxv. 31), "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory .....then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations [the dead and living]; and he shall separate them one from another, etc. And as he says in another place, "Two men shall be in the field, one shall be taken, and the other left; two shall be grinding at the mill, one shall be taken and the other left; two shall be in one bed [on the opposite side of the globe]; one shall be taken, and the other left." Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom [not heaven] prepared for you [according to his pre-conceived plan] before the foundation of the world."

We have the time here given when the destiny of all mankind will be irrevocably fixed—when the sleeping and living saints will be separated from the wicked dead and living, and the saints "caught up to meet the Lord in the air;" and all the wicked "left" —all the living ones to be slain by the "seven last plagues," as predicted by the prophet (Jer. xxv. 33), who says: "And the slain of the Lord at that day shall be from one end of the earth unto the other; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground."

Again, Christ says (Matt. xvi. 27): "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."

He cannot reward them before, for the great majority of them are "asleep in the dust of the earth," and it will take the trump of God and the voice of Christ to awaken them.

It is remarkable that these plain words of Jesus, as to the time of the saints' "reward" are not accepted by the great body of Christians. But St. Paul accepted and believed them; for he says: "When Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." And St. Peter says, "When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." If all this testimony is deemed insufficient to establish the time of "reward," then we quote the emphatic words of St. John (Rev. xi. 18), which will soon be fulfilled, as the state of the nations surely indicate, by the blast of the last trump to judgment.

"And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name small and great; and shouldest destroy them who corrupt the earth."

Now let the reader note the fact that this Scripture expressly and absolutely contradicts the common doctrine that mankind are judged and rewarded at death. And Peter further sustains the time of reward when he says, "The unjust are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished."

But what we have already adduced is only a mite compared to what we can present from the Word of God in substantiation of our position. The inspired man says, "The dead [dead persons] know not anything; neither have they any more a reward." He also says (Ecc. iii. 19, 20) "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts,".....as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they all have one breath, so that man hath no pre-eminence above a beast [i. e. in death, or as to his breath of life principle]; for all is vanity. All go to one place [not heaven and hell]; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

Hence he again says (ix. 10) "Whatsoever thy findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol whither thou goest." And so the Psalmist says, "The dead praise not the Lord; neither any that go down into silence." And Peter in his sermon at Pentecost confirms the above when he quotes the predicted words of David, "Jehovah said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool," as not referring to David, but to Messiah, and gives the reason, "For David is not ascended into the heavens —he is both dead and buried and his sepulchre is with us to this day." We have here the explicit declaration that David—not "the body of David," as equivocally assumed—died and did not ascend to heaven, but was "buried."

There are two other classes of Scripture (to which we call careful attention in a continued article) that are not only in harmony with our position as to the nature and destiny of mankind and the time of reward, but which overwhelmingly sustains it, namely, 1. The Bible use of the terms "soul" and "spirit," which are wrongly used as synonyms, and living entities within men, thus making him a dual being. 2. The 200 passages that declare the wicked shall perish and be destroyed by being "burned up as chaff," as "tares" and "withered branches."

A Few Words of Encouragement to the Household of Faith.

A short time ago I received a letter from Brother A. J. Miller of Hagerstown, Md., formerly of Winchester, asking me when there would be services at our place of worship for said he, I have a son that wishes to come over to your place and be baptized. Now this son had never heard the gospel of the kingdom preached since early childhood, and this circumstance shows the benefit that children derive from the teachings of the parents who are in the faith. Truly this young man had many advantages. This faith dwelt in his grandmother, then in his parents, and now also in him. Accordingly I informed him that Bro. B. F. Boyer of Seven Fountains would be over to speak for us on the second Sunday in June. Now, to show the power of truth, how it influenced him who was only in his nineteenth year. He came from Hagerstown, Md., to the vicinity of Brownstown for the purpose of being buried with Christ in baptism that he might arise to walk in newness of life, and after listening to our aged Brother Boyer while he delivered a very interesting discourse on the sovereignty of Christ, he arose and made the good confession, after which we all repaired to the water, where we witnessed the obedience of this young soldier who has now enlisted to go forth and fight the good fight of faith and lay hold of the promised life in the age to come. This baptism took place at the homestead of [illegible] Updike family, because there was much water there. Mr. Andrew Updike, who is noted for his hospitality, kindly invited the minister and the new convert and many others to dine with him. May the Lord reward him and family for unbounded kindness. The next day our young brother, George H. Miller, went on his way rejoicing back to his home in Maryland. May the blessings of God attend his path, and may he reach the kingdom at last.

Your Sister in hope of eternal life.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 40.

1. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Hieremias a second time, and he was still bound in the court yard of the prison, saying,

2 In this wise hath the Lord said, Who is creating an earth and molding it to restore it to uprightness, the Lord is his name;

3. Mayest thou have cried unto me and I will have answered thee, and I will tell thee great and strong things which thou hast not comprehended.

4. Because in this wise hath the Lord said concerning houses of this city and concerning houses of Jeuda's king, that have been torn down for intrenchments and opposing fortifications,

5. To fight against the Chaldaioi, to fill it with the dead men whom I have smitten in my wrath and in my anger, and from whom I had turned away my face by reason of all their wicked acts;

6. Lo, I am leading up for it (this city) a scarred-wholeness and healing; and I shall manifest myself unto them self unto them and heal it and I shall create both peace and faith,

7. And I shall return the removal of Jouda and the removal of Israeel, and I shall build them even as was their former estate;

8. And I shall cleanse them from all their iniquities in which they sinned against me and stood away from me, (apostatized)

9. And it will be for rejoicing and praise and majesty for all the laity of the earth who shall hearken to all the good things which I myself am going to create (cause) and who shall have feared and been embittered about all the good things, and about all the peace which I am going to create for them.

10. In this wise hath the Lord said, Yet again will there have been heard in this place of which ye are saying, It is laid waste from men and domestic animals, in cities of Jouda and outside of Hierousalem which have been desolated so that therein there is no man nor domestic animal, there will have been heard again,

11. A sound of rejoicing and a sound of joy, a voice of bridegroom and a voice of a bride, a voice of those who are saying, Confess ye unto an all-controlling Lord that he is a Best Lord, that his mercy is forever; and they will bring votive-offerings into the house of the Lord, because I shall turn back all the removal of this land as was its former estate, hath the Lord said.

12. In this wise hath the Lord of the Hosts said, Yet again will there be in this place so laid waste that there is in it no man nor domestic animal, in all the cities thereof resting-places for shepherds who fold sheep;

13. Namely in cities of the mountain-range, and in cities of the valley and in cities of the south and in a land of Benjamin and in those round about Hierousalem and in cities of Jouda, yet again will sheep pass by at the hand of him who numbereth them, hath the Lord said.

COMMENT.

The R. V. does not approximate the thought in the 2nd verse of this chapter which is a very important prophetic statement in regard to "the new creation." Read and see.

This 40th chapter is given by the way as the 33d in C. V. and R. V. or a part of it.

In the 4th verse no text for "and against the sword."

The fifth verse begins with an infinitive mode construction instead of a finite verb in the third place plural translated "They come" which idea is not in the text at all.

In the 6th verse R. V. the word translated "health" means "scarred-wholeness" and "truth" should be "faith."

7th verse near enough.

8th verse has nothing about apostasy in the C. V. or R. V. This idea was carefully eliminated by somebody—probably a rabinical elimination.

In the 9th verse "do" and "procure" instead of "create" changes the whole prophetic thought again—which is important and has to do with the "lo, I make all things new" of prophecy.

10th verse well enough.

In the 11th verse "Lord of Hosts" should be "All-Controlling Lord" say should be "confess" and "the Lord is good" should be "a best Lord."

12th verse well enough.

Also 13th.

The balance of this chapter from 14th to 26th verses both inclusive does not belong here at all, but was imported from another chapter.

CHAS. GARDNER.

Boys, Read This!

An unhappy man who was hanged at Hamilton, Ont., last December left this solemn warning to all young people. The statement was made by George Arthur Pearson to the Rev. W. L. Wilson, in the Hamilton jail.

"I desire to put this statement to the general public, but mostly to the young people, as a warning against three things, namely: cigarette smoking, strong drink and bad company. I have lived nearly all my life in Hamilton. When young my home training was sadly neglected. I have never had either good example or advice. I was permitted to run the streets at all hours with all kinds of companions, where I formed many bad habits which helped to ruin me. I am not naturally a criminal nor bad hearted, but I have been unfortunate, and I feel if I only had a fair chance I would not be where I am this hour.

"I had a fair trial and am justly condemned. I hold no spite against any one, and freely forgive all as I hope by the mercy of God to be forgiven. I warn young men not to carry pistols, as no good comes from them; also to shun bad companions, as they always drag you down, and above all else, leave whiskey and beer alone, for above everything else these have been my ruin. I very much regret the life I have lived. Many kind friends often advised me and offered to help me to do better, but I was foolish and careless, and wouldn't listen to them. This I am deeply sorry for, but it is too late now. If I had only followed their good advice I would not be in this dreadful place and position before I am twenty-four years of age."

Did You Know Them?

"Some half dozen years ago," says a writer in West Shore, "I knew a man who was hard, stern, grasping; who never allowed a dollar to slip through his fingers; whose faithful wife worked early and late that he might not have to spend an unnecessary cent. Many and many a time have I seen her on her knees, cleaning her floor with a brush; I have seen her, too, stand up and put her hands to her back and moan with pain. I have seen her paint her own floors, and paper her own walls, and beat her own carpets, with great, rough hands and red arms bared to the blistering winds. Well, let me tell you how she was rewarded.

"After years had worn by in toil and care, with never a caress or a word of appreciation or a ray of pleasure, this unhappy couple bought a lot in a fine location and builded thereon a beautiful home—one that excited admiration in every breast. It was all finished and elegantly furnished. The lawn was the loveliest in the whole city, with fountains playing upon it from morning till night; the green house was filled with rare flowers. Oh, each time I passed that house I broke a commandment. When it was ready for occupancy the poor, tired, worn-out wife sickened, and on the very night she was to have moved into her new house she gave one long sigh and went home to a land whence there is no returning.

"In five months her husband had married again, and everything that had been planned with such patient hope and love had to be changed to please the new mistress, while the old one with the broken heart lay with care-lined face and hard, work-worn hands out in Lone Fir cemetery. This was the first picture of its kind that I ever saw, but I have since found unmirrable copies of it hanging along the walls of life."

Making Improvements on the Creation.

We frequently hear of some skeptic saying that if he had made the world he would have made it much better than it is now. The only trouble with these gentlemen is they do not seem to know how to make any worlds, and it is much easier to find fault with the work of others than it is to improve upon it. If they would make two or three worlds, and set them running, they would be better qualified to speak on the subject.

The vain talk of such men reminds us of a woman whom we knew, whose face was not quite as beautiful as she could have desired it to be, and who used to complain sometimes, and declare that if she had made things she would have made them much better looking. But her niece said, "She made a doll for me once, and it was the homeliest looking thing I ever saw."

This probably would be a fair illustration of the results of these gentlemen's efforts in the line of world making if they once undertook the business. One would like to see a world with the modern improvements of these skeptical scoffers; or if they could not make a world, perhaps they might try their hand at making a donkey, or a monkey, or if this was too large a job they might start with a gosling, or a chicken, or a bedbug, a lightning bug, or some such smaller fry; and if they do not succeed in turning out one of these in working order, we would recommend them to try their hands on a humbug, where their experience would perhaps enable them to effect greater results.—*H. Plymouth, Indiana, July 18, 1906.

The Plymouth Church had the pleasure of listening to two very excellent discourses on last Sunday delivered by Bro. J. L. Wines.

Lady Curzon, wife of Lord Curzon, who was until recently Viceroy of India, died suddenly of heart failure July 18. She was an American girl, the daughter of L. Z. Leiter of Chicago.

Brother A. H. Zilmer left last Monday for a visit in Wisconsin, where his family has been for some weeks Brother Zilmer contemplates making a trip to California in a few weeks, and may subsequently move there if the climate will benefit his wife's health.

Larkin Pogue, son of Sister Pogue of this city, died suddenly of heart disease on last Monday. He was working at Elkhart where he died, and was brought here for burial today. He was just past 21 years of age, and the case is indeed a sad one. Sister Pogue and her daughters have the sympathy of the Church and of the whole community in this sad hour.

Dear Restitution:

Early in June I was asked to prepare an article setting forth what we of the Church of God in Salem, O., believe and teach and why. Said article to be published in "The Centennial Magazine," Salem's Current Thought, June A. D. 1906. Devoted to the dissemination of facts and theories concerning Church, State and Social Ethics; embracing religious, political, fraternal, industrial, legal, medical, educational and other organizations and instrumentalities, at the time of Salem's first Centennial celebration, June 20-23, 1906. No. 2 to be issued June 2006. The following is a copy of the article.

THE CHURCH OF GOD.

We believe that all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is able to make men wise unto salvation. 2 Tim. iii. 15; 2 Pet. i. 21. Those who desire to be saved must believe that He—God—is, and is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. Heb. xi. 6. Concerning God, we believe that he is one, Isa. xlv. 15; the creator and preserver of all, Acts xvii. 24, 25; a being of infinite power, wisdom, love and goodness. Ecc. xxxiv. 6. We believe that after the creation of heaven and earth, the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground; and caused him to live by the breath of His. Gen. ii. 7. He—God—placed the man under a law, which he commanded him to obey, or death would result. Gen. ii. 16, 17. Man broke this law, and was sentenced to return to the ground whence he was taken. Gen. iii. 15, 19. Transgression of law is sin, 1 John iii. 4. Thus sin entered the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. Rom. v. 12. The sentence of death was fully executed upon Adam at the end of 930 years; and he died. Gen. v. 5. This returning to the ground is death. In this condition "the dead know not anything." Ecc. ix. 5. "Their thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 4. "They praise not the Lord." Psa. cxv. 17. This awful condition was not allowed to be absolute. We believe that God, in his goodness, revealed a plan for the renewal and continuance of life, (John iii. 16); which would ultimately rescue the willing and obedient from death. John xi. 23-26; Rom. ii. 7. This plan of salvation God made known to Adam, Gen. iii. 15; to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 16-18; to David, 2 Sam. vii. 12; 2 Sam. xxiii. 2; and continued to describe and explain it more fully through the prophets, Isa. ix. 6, 7; Isa. xxv. 7-9; Zach. ii. 10-12; Psa. lxxii. and many other Scriptures. We believe and teach that these testimonies are included in "the exceeding great and precious promise by which we may obtain eternal life." 2 Peter i. 1-4. We believe that Jesus Christ—who was made like unto his brethren, Heb. ii. 7, for the suffering of death, was raised from the dead to die no more, Rev. i. 18, and thus became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him. Heb. v. 9. We believe that this salvation was fully made known by the Lord Jesus Christ, and his apostles, whom he sent forth to preach the gospel, called "The glad tidings of the kingdom of God." Mark i. 14; Luke i. 8; also called by Paul "The gospel of Christ." Rom. i. 16. This gospel—glad tidings—consists of "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." Acts viii. 12; Acts xxviii. 23, 31. This was the gospel preached to Abraham, Gal. iii. 8; to which the law and the prophets gave witness, Rom. iii. 21; i. 1, 2. This was the gospel preached by Jesus Christ and his apostles. Mark i. 14, 15; Luke x. 1, 9, 11.

Before his death Jesus commanded the twelve to preach the kingdom of heaven to the Israelites only. Matt. x. 5-7. After his resurrection he charged them to preach it—the gospel—to every creature, those who believed and were immersed should be saved. Mark xvi. 15, 16; by having a resurrection like his Christ's. Rom. vi. 5. Therefore, saith Paul, being justified by faith—in the glad tidings of the kingdom—we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and have access by faith into his favor, wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. Rom. v. 1, 2. By baptism into the name of the Lord Jesus. Acts viii. 16; we are made sons of God, by the spirit of adoption, Rom. viii. 15; and heirs of the kingdom. Jas. ii. 5; according to the promise given to Abraham, Gal. iii. 16, 27, 29. By these references we see, and believe that the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, when believed, and from the heart obeyed, are the means by which we obtain a hope of salvation, which salvation is eternal life and an inheritance in the kingdom of God.

These things are in plain words by Moses and the prophets, as follows: God will establish his kingdom, which will overthrow all other kingdoms, and stand forever. Dan. ii. 44; Rev. xi. 15. The kingdom will be on earth—"under the whole heavens." Dan. vii. 27. To accomplish this God will send Jesus Christ. Acts iii. 20, 21. The territory proper will be the land promised to Abraham, Gen. xiii. 15; once occupied by the kingdom of Israel, which was also the kingdom of God. 1 Chron. xxix. 23. The kingdom was overturned on account of wickedness until he—Christ—comes, Ezek. xxi. 25-27, to restore it. Acts i. 6; Jer. xxxiii. 8-8; Isa. ix. 6, 7. The saints of all ages will rule with Jesus Christ in the kingdom. Jude 14; Psa. cxlix. The saints will be perfected by the resurrection. Luke xx. 35, 36; Rev. xx. 4-6. Jerusalem will be the seat of government. Matt. vi. 10; Is. ii. 3; Psa. ii. 6. The kingdom of God is not meat and drink. Rom. iv. 17. Nor like the kingdoms of this age. John xviii. 36. The laws will be enforced. Isa. lx. 12. The nations will rebel. Psa. ii. 1-3; Psa. cx. 2. The judgment on them will be severe, Isa. lxvi. 15, 16; but through the judgment the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness. Isa. xxvi. 9. When the Israelites are restored to their land, Ezek. xxxvii. 21-28, many nations will follow their example. Micah iv. 2. Afterwards all nations will serve him Christ, Psa. lxxii. 11; and call him blessed. Verse 17. This is the end—when he shall put down all rule, and all authority and power. He will deliver the kingdom to the Father, 1 Cor. xv. 24-26, that God may be all in all. Verse 28. Then the earth will be filled with the glory of the Lord. Num. xiv. 21, and everything that breathes shall praise him. Psa. cl.

The foregoing is a brief outline of a great subject, but will surely instruct the careful reader as to WHAT WE BELIEVE AND TEACH AND WHY.

P. Neill.

Selected.

Comfort in Affliction.

The divine arrangement in the economy of grace, made it necessary that Christ should depart out of this world to his Father, and however trying to his people, their present interest and eternal good required it. "If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart, I will send him unto you. I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there you may be also. This same Jesus who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." These are the words of eternal, changeless truth to cheer the weeping followers of the Lamb as they make their way, forlorn and lonely, through this desert, hostile land. Amid the evil and suffering of this life, the saints have relief and pleasure in the prospect that their stay here is short, and that Jesus will soon descend from the skies to take them all to dwell in his own glorious and eternal home. The dispensation of grace still exists, the appliances of mercy are yet in operation to bring God's sons and daughters from afar and will continue till the earth is filled with the glory of God, till the last sermon shall have been preached, the last offer of eternal life shall have been made to sinners, the last blood-drop of Jesus have been sprinkled for the washing away of sin and all uncleanness, and then our Savior will come in the clouds of heaven, surrounded by all his saints and angels; our probation state shall end, and we shall enter on another better and eternal. Glorious truth, transporting thought, that our Jesus will come to take us from this world of sighs, of sufferings and of death, to one in which there are no tears, no sighs, no pains, no deaths, for these "former things have passed away."

Nature Against Skepticism.

If I were in danger of becoming skeptical, I believe that a fresh and vivid appreciation of the scientific revelations concerning our globe would appal me into faith. To think of this ball whirling and spinning about the sun, and to be an atheist; its covering less in comparative thickness than a peach skin, and its pulp a seething fire, and to feel that we are at the mercy of the forces that lash it like a top around the ecliptic, and of the raving flames that heave and beat for vent; not more than an eighth of its surface inhabitable by man; seas roaring around him, tropic heats smiting his brain, polar frost threatening his blood, inland airs laden with fever, sea winds charged with consumption; hurricanes hovering in the sky, earthquakes slumbering under our feet; the conditions of life dependant on the most delicate oscillations of savage powers, over which the wisest man is as powerless as a worm, to think of these and not to have any confidence or belief in a power superior to these pitiless forces, not to have an inspiring faith that the land was made for human habitations and experience, and is sheltered by a ceaseless love from the hunger of the elements! Why, I could as easily conceive of a person making his home unconcerned in an uncaged menagerie, as of a man at rest in nature, seeing what it is and not feeling that it is embosomed in God! Go to nature, my brother, go to the unroofed universe; go to the fruitful pages of science, not to learn your need of it—to learn that you are homeless without the sense of God as overarching you by his power, pledging his care to you, twisting the furious forces of immensity into a protecting tent for your spirit's home.—Thomas Starr King.

The Needs of the Hour.

1. Self-examination. There are some confident enough to say that they are ready to meet the Lord. Happy indeed is their condition if this persuasion is well-founded. But it will be a solemn ordeal to have our whole course of life, and our moral make-up of character, pass the scrutiny of him that searches the heart and tries the reins. Well will it be for us if that startling cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," does not sound a death-knell to our feeling of security. However circumspect may be our course of conduct, and whatever attainments we may make in Christian character and holiness of heart, a review of all in the awful brilliancy of the light that will make every disguise transparency itself, will show us our true selves as we never saw them before. Let it be our every day effort that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless, and that we may be presented perfect in Christ Jesus.

2. Watchfulness. Notwithstanding the multiplied, and constantly multiplying evidences of the proximity of Christ's second coming, past disappointments and present influences tend to lull the most watchful into a state of slumbering and sleep. The Bridegroom tarries, but the Bridegroom will come. Some of these nights, some of these days, the long-expected or Redeemer will leave the courts of his Father, and, with his celestial retinue, glorify the aerial mid-heaven with resplendent brightness. Then suddenly and unexpectedly, as the thunder sound from the clear sky, will the midnight call summon the ready bride to the pavilion to meet her beloved.

3. Prayer. All our blessings in this world descend from the Father of lights. That oil, so essential in the midnight gloom, is pre-eminently a God-given boon for an hour of supreme need. The time of supplying ourselves will soon be past, and this all-important possession be forever unattainable.

The Bridegroom came and only those that were ready went in with him to the marriage. O for a state of consecration such as those that led the martyr-lives once possessed. O for that excellency of salutship that will make sure our election to a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Doubtful disputations about the unsaved dead may be held in abeyance till we faithfully warn the unsaved living and prepare ourselves to meet our soon-coming King.—S. A. Chaplin.

Parting Words.

We have some in our language that are very expressive, and appropriate when understood, though they are often uttered thoughtlessly. We note the following:

GOOD-BY.

This, says Webster, "would be better written good-bye, as it is a corruption of God be with you (b' w' y'.)" Thus understood no wonder one has poetically said:

"Bid me good-bye! No sweeter salutation
Can friendship claim;
Nor yet can any language, any nation,
A sweeter frame.

It is not final; it forbodes no sorrow,
As some declare,
Who born to fretting are as prone to borrow
To-morrow's share.

Good-bye! yes, 'God be with you;' prayer and blessing
In simplest phrase;
Alike our need and his dear care confessing
In all our ways.

However rare or frequent be our meeting,
However nigh
The last long parting, or the endless greeting,
Bid me good-bye!"

Another asks:—

"Why do we say it when the tears are starting?
Why must a word so sweet bring only pain?
Our love seems all-sufficient till the parting,
And then we find it impotent and vain.
May God be with you!

Oh, may he guide, and bless and keep you ever,
He who is strong to battle with your foes!
Whosoever fails, his love can fail you never,
And all your need he in his wisdom knows.
May God be with you!

Better than earthly presence, e'en the dearest,
Is the great blessing that our partings bring;
For in the loneliest moments God is nearest,
And from our sorrows heavenly comforts spring.
If God be with us!

Good-bye, good-bye! with latest breath we say it,
A legacy of hope, and faith, and love.
Parting must come, we cannot long delay it,
But one in him, we hope to meet in love,
If God be with us!

Good-bye! 'tis all we have for one another,
Our love, more strong than death is helpless still;
For none can take the burden from his brother
Or shield, except by prayer, from any ill.
May God be with you!"

Another sweet word, much more seldom used though, than this one, is

ADIEU.

It comes to us from the French—a Dieu, and is a contraction of "I commend you to God." Paul virtually used it when in parting with the elders of the church of Ephesus he said: "And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified." Acts xx. 32. To say it thoughtfully makes a good prayerful parting.

Neither "Good-bye" nor "Adieu" is found in our translation of the Scriptures, but here is a word that is—

FAREWELL.

It may be found in Luke ix. 61; Acts xv. 29; xviii. 21; xxiii. 30; 2 Cor. xiii. 11. Being compounded of fare and well, it expresses a wish that the person addressed may go well, or be fortunate in the enjoyment of what is good. When the apostle therefore said to the Christians of Corinth: "Finally, brethren, farewell," he desired for them the present and future blessings. His wish was, that they might fare well in their pilgrimage through this world; fare well by having part in "the first resurrection;" and fare well by having a home forever in the kingdom of God.

It will now be seen that none of these words should be used carelessly. Some time they will fall on a friend's ear from our lips for the last time. The present may be it. Any one of them may be used, but let us use them with sincerity and then our desire will really be

May we meet when "the day" shall break,
May we meet on the sinless shore,
May we meet when the dead awake,
Where the ransomed part no more.

Good-bye, adieu, farewell!—what feelings these words awaken! How full of meaning they really are!—Messiah's Herald.

The Hour is Coming.

"I believe in the resurrection of the dead."

Philosophy, falsely so called, may scoff at this item of my faith, and ask me how it can be so, and I cannot tell; but my confidence staggers not, for it is founded upon the omnipotence of God. I know that his word spoke the earth into existence, and the life that makes it beautiful; I know not that it will be harder for him to resurrect the dead. I grasp the promise and expect its literal fulfilment.

"The hour is coming." See you that bright array of immortal ones upsprung from the dust of death? Hear you the music of their shout of victory? List you the first sweep of those golden harps? Behold you the whiteness of those priestly robes, the flashing of those kingly crowns? Note you the meeting of the parted—the child upon the bosom of the mother, and the wife clasped to the husband's heart?

Let the hour be welcome! Earth hath not known so glad a time!

Torch Lake Bible School.

"How shall I get to this place? I do not find it on the R. R. maps."

Bro. Neill's question is one we would like to answer for others who may be interested as well. Take the Pere Marquette and C. H. & D. system. Get your ticket to Petoskey and stop at Central Lake. Torch Lake is nine miles distant and is reached by stage which carries mail daily to East Port and Torch Lake. Do not forget to stop off at Central Lake. A telephone line runs from Central Lake to Torch Lake and East Port. Call and we will answer, Hello. We are glad to know and inform those interested, that Bro. Neill expects to be at Torch Lake Bible School. His presence and instruction will be for all present, an inspiration. "We are workers together with God."

Harriet E. Boice.

P. S. Further correspondence from Sister Boice states that after the above notice was sent us, a Mr. Cameron of the Cameron Lumber Co. offers to meet all who will go on July 31st and convey them direct to the place of meeting. Let all who can do so, arrange to go so as to be on the Pere Marquette train that reaches Alden at 2:22 P. M. and be sure to get off at Alden. The boat will be there to take you direct to Torch Lake. Please understand this is only for July 31. If you go later, or in any other way, you must go on to Central Lake, as stated in Sister Boice's notice above.

Notice.

Will all Berean Societies and isolated members affiliated with the Illinois State Berean Society please send a report of their meetings and work for the year before August 11, to the Secretary, Lelia E. Whitehead, 5428 Ontario St., Austin Station, Chicago, Illinois.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our name for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the doners request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

Twilight.

Child, go and pray; for see, the night is here!
Through cloudy rifts the golden lights appear;
The hill's faint outline trembles in the mist;
Scarcely is heard the chatter—list;
The world's at rest; the tree beside the way
Gives to the evening wind the dust of day.

Twilight unlocks the hiding-place of stars
They gleam and glow behind night's shadowy bars,
The fringe of carmine narrows in the west,
The moonlit water lies in glowing rest;
Furrow and footpath melt and disappear,
The anxious traveler doubts the far and near.

It is the hour when angels stoop to earth
To bless our babes amid our careless mirth.
The little ones with eyes upraised in prayer,
With tiny folded hands and white feet bare,
Ask at this twilight hour a blessing dear
Of him who loves his little ones to hear.

Then, while they sleep, a cloud of golden dreams,
Born in the calm of day's declining beams,
Waiting in shadow till the hour of night,
Fly to each couch and scatter visions bright;
As joyous bees seek honey-laden flowers,
Dreams hover near to slumber's peaceful hours!

O cradled sleep! O prayers of childhood blest,
O baby-voice, speaking a loving breast!
Thy happy prayer the darkness maketh light.
Turneth to song the solemn sounds of night,
As 'neath his wing the birdie hides his head,
Thou shelterest by thy prayer thy cradle-bed.

Naber, touched with pity, dismounted, led his horse to the spot, and with difficulty set the beggar on his back. But no sooner did Daher feel himself in the saddle, than he set spurs to the horse and galloped off, calling out as he did so, "It is I, Daher. I have got the horse, and am off with it." Naber called after him to stop and listen. Certain of not being pursued he turned, and halted at a short distance from Naber, who was armed with a spear. "You have taken my horse," said the latter; "since heaven has willed it I wish you joy of it; but I conjure you never to tell any one how you obtained it." "And why not?" asked Daher. "Because," said the noble Arab, "another man might be really ill, and men would fear to help him. You would be the cause of refusing to perform an act of charity, for fear of being duped as I have been." Struck with shame at these words, Daher was silent for a moment, then springing from the horse returned it to its owner, embracing him to his tent, where they spent a few days, and became fast friends for life.

Poetry.

Longing.

No lark that sings in heaven
So blithe as I,
Could I but hear again
Thy step nigh.
Could I but hear again
Thy voice, and meet
Thy smile, the clouds would bear
My lightened feet!

The flowers would fairer bloom,
The sun would shine
With gleam more golden, life
Would be divine,
Could I but hear thee say
With olden tone,—
Beloved thou art forgiven
Thy penance done.

Does heaven indeed allow Ever return
To comfort broken hearts
That longing yearn?
It cannot be, or then
I know wouldst flee
With swiftly rushing trend
To comfort me.

Thy presence I would know,
My watchful heart
At thy unseen approach
Would quickly start.
The flesh our senses may dull
But I would wake
Could thou but come again
For old love's sake.

Was ever wish of mine

Announcement.

The 19th Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the beautiful Campground at Waterloo, Iowa, August 18th to 26th, inclusive. Rates of one and one-third fare from all points in Iowa have been granted by all railroads; going tickets to be purchased any time from August 17th to 23rd, inclusive, and holders of Certificates for tickets bought during that time will be entitled to return ticket for one-third fare if bought before August 30th. A certificate must be secured with each ticket bought.

Bring straw ticks and a few comforters. Tents will be furnished free. Board at our Dining Hall 25 cents per day.

We expect to have the following preaching brethren with us. A. J. Eychaner, S. J. Lindsay, L. E. Conner, Almus Adams, H. M. Lucas, G. Eldred Marsh, John Garton, and others.

For entire program of meeting with full instructions, etc., address G. P. Allard, Corresponding Secretary, Box 86, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories, but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.

EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

T. J. DANIEL.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

WHEN YOUR TIME IS OUT PLEASE RENEW.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference:

I have moved to the state of Oregon, so all letters in the interest of the conference work will be sent to J. P. Bitner, Severance, Kansas.

Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if printed will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Send your pledges but no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

A four-page tract in the German language, by Brother M. Joblin of Cleveland, O. Subject, "What Must I do to be Saved?" After getting the opinion of one who understands this language, we have no hesitation in recommending it as simply all right. Get some for your German friends. Send to M. Joblin, 626 Woodland Ave., Cleveland, O. Price 40 cts per 100.

Seventy-five More.

I receive enquiries as to when Pine Woods Bible Class Book will be printed?

In answer, I will say, when I receive seventy-five more subscriptions, the book can be printed, and sent forth on its mission, to teach the glad tidings. If all who really want it had said so, it could now be out sowing seed. When God's professed servants make his cause a secondary matter, and put it off to a "convenient time," his cause suffers. Now all who really want the book please sit down and write me, as soon as you have read this, and then things will move at once. Don't wait until a more convenient time. God's business demands prompt attention.

Yours in the Blessed Hope.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended

Humility.

"The Lord that rides on highest wing,
Builds on the ground he bows to all:
And she that shall most sweetly sing
Songs in the shade, with all things real
Is but as a nightingale we see
What is not Lord, humility.

"The saint that wears the brightest crown
In the end, shall cast it down
And count the highest place he has
The lowest stool of humility."

Communicated.

The Bible Versus Spiritual Death Penalty. No. 2.

THE SHORT WAY WITH IMMORTAL SOULISM.

We now proceed to investigate what was promised in concluding our former article, namely, 1. the Bible use of the terms "soul" and "spirit." These terms are used by the popular churches as synonyms and interchangeably; and also as a living entity within man. But they are never so used in the Bible, as we shall show. The second class embraces all the passages which declare that the wicked shall "perish" and be "destroyed" by being "burned up" as the most combustible materials.

The Hebrew word nephesh is the "soul" and "life"—word of the Old Testament; and means 1. a physical being, and 2. the life of a physical being, including the animal creation. Nephesh is translated "soul" over four hundred times, as we are informed, and "life" over an hundred times; "body" "person;" and other words of like import, more than one hundred times. Nephesh should never have been rendered body, person, or by any other word than soul and life, although it may mean a person or an animal, and does. It is as true that the animals became living souls as that "man became a living soul.

The prophet in his prediction of Messiah's death says, "He poured out his soul unto death," and again, "His soul was made a sacrifice for sin." And Christ himself says, "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." And again, the prediction in the sixteenth Psalm, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in sheol; neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption."

Dr. Eddie, author of a Biblical Cyclopedia says that the expression "my soul" in the predicted words of Messiah (Psalm xvi.) mean his "whole person," or as he says it means, "Thou wilt not abandon me to sheol." Dr. Eddie further says that the expressions "my soul" and "his soul," etc., have become idioms of the Hebrew language because it has "no intensive and reflexive pronouns," which of course would give intenseness and emphasis to the language. These idiomic expressions are carried into the New Testament, and we find Peter saying, "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls." This is more emphatic than if he had said, "even your salvation," which is simply what he did mean.

King David says, "Thou hast delivered my soul from death." This "soul" cannot be "immaterial," for no immaterial thing can die; and as David's soul was subject to "death" and delivered therefrom, it could not be immortal. David again says, "Thou hast delivered my soul from the grave;" and "Thou hast delivered my soul from the sword." The Psalmist in praying to be delivered from his enemy says, "O Lord deliver me, lest he tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces when there is none to deliver."

We can clearly see from the above quotations (and there are many more of like character) that David's soul is not a soul-entity within him, but his physical self. We find this expression, "The dead nephesh of a man" but rendered "dead body of a man." Thus perverting God's Word; for nephesh is the soul, and not the body, word of the Old Testament. So we find dead souls, hungry souls, fat souls, thirsty souls, etc., but never a soul within a soul, as believed and taught by the great majority. God says, "My soul hateth such a nation as this; my soul hateth your new moons and feasts.' We all know that this Bible expression does not mean a soul-entity in God; neither does it ever thus mean in man.

Ruwkh is the Hebrew word for breath and spirit, and is rendered "air, wind, breath and spirit." And it is sometimes rendered spirit when it should be breath as in the question, "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" And also in the well known words, "Then shall the dust [made man] return to the earth as it [he] was, and the spirit [breath] shall return to God who gave it," as it was before God breathed it into the nostrils of Adam, and as a result, "man became a living soul." The Psalmist says, "Put not your trust in princes, neither in a son of man in whom there is no help, for his breath goeth forth; in that very day his thoughts perish." The Psalmist again says: "Thou [God] hidest thy face; they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust; thou sendest forth thy spirit [breath,] they are created [resurrected], and thou renewest the face of the earth;" and it becomes "the new earth" predicted by Isaiah and Peter and John.

James Strong, S. T. D., L. L. D., a voluminous writer; in his book entitled "The Doctrine of a Future Life," in his futile effort to sustain the common dogma of a spirit-entity in man, quotes, as strong proof of the same the following words applied to some of the kings and noted men of Israel at their death. "He gave up the ghost and died." Dr. Strong's argument is that the separation of this "ghost" from the body is the cause of death. But it is easily seen that this assumption is in palpable contradiction of the passages quoted, and many more that might be cited that declare that man dies from the loss of his breath, which is the true principle of life in man and beast.

Charity leads us to believe that Dr. Strong was ignorant of the fact that gwa, rendered "ghost" does not so mean, but "wasted away," as defined. So it should have been rendered, "He wasted away and died."

The above perversion is carried into the New Testament, and the translators make Mark (xv. 37) say, "And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost." The word here rendered "ghost" is expneusas, the definition of which is "breathed out." So instead of giving up "the ghost," he gave up his breath. Hence when Jesus is made to say, "Father, into thy hand I commend my spirit," he instead says, Father, into thy hands I commit "to pneuma mou—the breath of me, or as we would say "my breath." So Stephen said, "Lord Jesus receive to pneuma mou—receive my breath." And Stephen fell asleep.

We have a true and forceful illustration of this part of our subject in the vision of dry bones. Ezek. xxxvii. 1-14. This vision, however, has been perverted to signify resurrection or conversion from sin instead of a resurrection from their "graves." After the bones had come together, and the flesh, etc. had come upon them, the command went forth, "Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain that they may live; and the breath came into them and they lived and stood upon their feet a great army." And then God gives an explanation of the vision, which is virtually rejected by those who spiritualize it, and says, "Son of Man, these bones are the whole house of Israel; behold, they say, Our bones are dried and our hope is lost; we are cut off from our parts. Therefore prophesy and say unto them, behold, O my people, I will open your graves and cause you to come up out of your graves and bring you into the land of Israel."

We now come to the last point named in support of our position; namely, the 200 passages which absolutely show that the wicked will "perish" and be "destroyed" by being "burned up." We are, however, told by able men that all these burn-up expressions are figurative! But this is only a diplomatic way of charging God of saying what he did not mean when giving the penalty of his law, which on account of its importance, we would think ought to be given in plain, literal language, as it has been. Can any of these great men who thus tell us that God did not mean what he says of the destruction of the wicked, tell us why God did not say what he did mean?

We can only take space to notice briefly a few leading passages on this last point of our subject. Passing the allusions to the second death in the Old Testament, we call serious attention to the familiar words of the Psalmist, "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy." The definition of the word shomad here rendered "destroy" is "to annihilate." And Webster defines destruction by the word "annihilation;" and annihilation "by destruction." We must always discriminate between the primary definition given and a theological one; for the first is the true sense and the other only the meaning given by certain D. D.'s who may disagree with others! These words of the inspired Psalmist are virtually rejected by the popular churches. For they are compelled to interpret them as follows: "The Lord preserveth in heaven all them that love him; but all the wicked will he preserve in hell to be tormented forever!!

We next quote the thrilling words of the prophet Malachi iii. 4, "Then shall ye return [when God makes up his jewels] and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not; For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn like an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings"——And ye shall tread down the wicked; they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I do this saith the Lord of hosts."

John had a vision of the fulfilment of the words of Malachi, Rev. xx. 7-10. "And they [Gog and Magog] "the rest of the dead, [all the wicked resurrected] went up on the breadth of the [new] earth; and compassed the camp of the saints about and the beloved city [new Jerusalem,] which John saw come down from God out of heaven, [as related in chapter 21] and fire came down from God out of heaven and consumed them." And thus will the wicked be reduced to "ashes" and trodden under foot of the saints as predicted by the prophet.

We will now notice the clear and emphatic words of John, the baptistees—immerser, and forerunner of Christ, which we shall see are in harmony with all the words of Christ and with all the inspired writers have really said.

Referring to Christ, John says: "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor [the earth by fire], and gather his wheat [righteous] into the garner [kingdom]; but he will burn up the chaff [the wicked] with unquenchable fire."

No intelligent Christian can consistently object to the above paraphrase. John here takes an ancient threshing floor to illustrate the salvation of the righteous and the destruction of the wicked. All figurative, is it? Emphatically no. All was literal; and will be literally fulfilled. If the fire should be quenched, or forever prey upon the wicked, they would not be burned up as is here explicitly taught they will be. So John contradicts, absolutely, the common assumption that the "unquenchable fire" will burn forever; or that, as some believe, will not burn at all!

John was thus inspired to give the true meaning of what Jesus said afterward as recorded, Mark ix. 43, the language of which has been so long misconstrued by great and good men. Jesus, substantially, says: "If thy hand, or foot offend thee [causes thee to sin] cut it off. And if thine eye offend thee pluck it out; it is better for thee to enter into life [live forever]; or be kingdom of God thus maimed than to be cast into Gehenna fire where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

You all know that no souls are being tormented in Gehenna, the valley of Hinnom south of Jerusalem; for it is now a place of corpses and does not utilize such a place, but one of destruction—every thing cast there was for the fire and worms to consume and thus destroy. Hence Jesus in his allusion to Gehenna to illustrate the final punishment of the wicked teaches emphatically that they will be burned up with unquenchable fire and thus destroyed.

Jeremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 41.

1 The word that occurred unto Hieremias from the Lord, and Nabuchodonosar, king of Babuloon, and all his encampment and all the land of his authoritative rule were warring against Hierousaleem and against all the cities of Jouda, Saying;

2 In this wise hath the Lord said, Go on foot to Sedekias, king of Jouda, and thou shalt say unto him; In this wise hath the Lord said; this city will have been given up into the hands of Babuloon's king, and he will take it and burn it with fire;

3 And thou shalt not be saved out of his hand, and thou wilt have been taken and given into his hands, and thine eyes will see his eyes, and thou wilt go into Babuloon.

4 Moreover mayest thou have hearkened to a word of the Lord, O Sedekias, king of Jouda; In this wise saith the Lord.

5. In peace wilt thou have died; and as they have lamented thy fathers who ruled as kings before thee will they lament thee also; alas, O Lord, and they will publicly mourn for thee unto Hadees (the grave); because a word have I talked, hath the Lord said.

6. And Hieremias talked all these words unto Sedekias in Hierousaleem.

7. And the host of Babuloon's king was warring against Hierousaleem and against the cities of Jouda and against Sachis and against Azeeka because these last-mentioned were left among cities of Jouda as walled cities.

8. The word that occurred unto Hieremias from the Lord after the king Sedekias had consummated a covenant with the laity to call an aphesis, (a decree of manumission).

9. That each one should send away his house-man and each one his house-maid, his Hebrew man and Hebrew maid free, that no man of Jouda might be doing bond-service.

10. And all the great men and all the laity who had entered into the covenant to send away each one his house-man and each one his house-maid thrust them back,

11. For house-men and house-maids.

12. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Hieremias, saying;

13. In this wise hath the Lord said; I covenanted a covenant with your fathers on the day when I took them out of a land of Aigyptos, out of a house of bond-service, saying;

14. Whenever six years shall have been fulfilled, thou shalt send away thy Hebrew brother who shall have sold himself unto thee and who has been working for thee for six years, and thou shalt send him away a freeman; and they have not hearkened unto me and they have not inclined their ear.

15. And they turned today to do that which is straight before my eyes namely to call an aphesis (manumission of bond-servants) each one of his neighbor; and they consummated a covenant before my face, in the house upon which my name had been invoked.

16. And ye have turned back and desecrated my name by turning into house-men and house-maids for you each one his house-man and each one his house-maid, whom ye had sent away free with their soul.

17. Therefore in this wise hath the Lord said; ye have not obeyed me to call an aphesis each one for his neighbor; Lo, I am calling an aphesis for you to a sword and to death and to the famine, and I am going to give you to dispersion to all the kingdoms of the earth;

18. And I am going to give the men of mark who have evaded my covenant, who have not established my covenant, which they made before my face, to be a yearling bullock which they have to do work for them;

19. Namely the rulers of Jouda and the men of ability and the priests, and the laity;

20. And I am going to give them to their enemies, and their dead bodies will be food for the flying-things of the heavens and for the wild beasts of of the earth.

21. And Sedekias, king of Joudain and their rulers I am going to give into the hands of their enemies; and the host of Babuloon's king will be for those who are running away from them.

22. Lo, I am giving directions, saith the Lord, and I am going to turn them (the Chaldaioi) back into this land, and they will war against it and they will take it and they will burn it with fire and the cities of Jouda, and I shall give them to be desolate of inhabitants.

COMMENT.

The reader will observe that this "aphesis" or manumission had been called and agreed to solemnly as a public measure of salvation, when it looked as though there was no hope, except in the Lord, of escaping destruction at the hand of the king of Babuloon; and that war in another quarter had temporarily drawn away Babuloon's host from Hierousaleem and Joudain, and so thinking they had escaped they greedily repented of their sacrifice and re-instated those whom they had set free in bond-service again, which the Lord here calls "evading his covenant." This is a very common individual and national sin nowadays and the reader will do well to note how severe the punishment meted out in this case was.

The reader will find what purports to be this same chapter given in the C. V. and R. V. as the 34th.

In the 5th verse there is nothing in the text about "burning for thee" nor "burning of thy fathers."

In the 14th verse the text does not say "at the end of seven years ye shall let go," etc., but does say when six years shall have been fulfilled. This is an unexplainable blunder or change. For the seventh year and the whole of it was "a year of aphesis (or liberation) and like the seventh day sabbath—six days for work and then a rest or an interval of one day. In the 18th verse the R. V. does not even approximate the meaning. There is nothing in the text about "cutting the calf in twain" or "passing between the parts of the calf;" but they ask to be given up to their enemies to work them as they work a bullock.

It was our good fortune to have Bro. D. M. Hudler with us at Oregon, Ill., to conduct a series of meetings lasting one week. The sermons were very interesting and well attended except on one or two evenings when the rain kept many away who would have been present. The pictorial charts illustrating the sermons on prophecy were very helpful in fixing the attention of any who may never before have given the subject a thought, as well as those more advanced in Bible lore. Bro. Huddler has held meetings this spring and early summer at Oregon, Lanark and Plum River, and also at Union Church. After some further work in Illinois and Iowa he expects to go South about Sept. 1st.

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 25, 1906. NUMBER 28.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Selected.

A Little While.

"A little while, and ye shall not see me; and again a little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father."—John xvi. 16.

Long seems the moments when we are separated from the friend we love. An absent brother how his return is looked and longed for. The "Elder Brother"—the "Living Kinsman" sends a message to His waiting Church and people—a word of solace, telling that soon, ("a little while,") and He will be back again, never again to leave them.

They are indeed blessed moments of communion which the believer enjoys with his beloved Lord now; but how fitful and transient! To-day, life is a brief Emmaus journey—the soul happy in the presence and love of an unseen Savior. To-morrow, He is gone; and the bereft spirit is led to interrogate itself in plaintive sorrow, —"Where is now thy God? Even when there is no such experience of darkness and depression, how much there is in the world to fill the believer with sadness! His Lord rejected and disowned, his love set at nought, his providences slighted, his name blasphemed, his creation groaning and travailing in pain, disunion, too, among his people, his loving heart wounded in the house of his friends!

But "yet a little while," and all this mystery of iniquity will be finished. The absent Brother's foot-fall will soon be heard, no wayfaring man who turneth aside to tarry for a night, but to receive his people into the permanent "mansions" his love has been preparing, and from which they shall go no more out. Oh, blessed day! when creation will put on her Easter robes, when her Lord, so long dishonored, will be enthroned amid the hosannahs of a rejoicing universe, angels lauding him, saints crowning him, sin, the dark plague-spot on his universe, extinguished for ever, death swallowed up in eternal victory.

And it is but "a little while!" "Yet a little while!" we elsewhere read, "and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry," (literally, "a little while as may be.") "He will stay not a moment longer," says Goodwin, "than he hath despatched all our business for us in heaven." With what joy will he send his mission-Angel with the announcement, "the little while is at an end;" and to issue the invitation to the great festival of glory, "Come! for all things are ready.

Child of sorrow! think often of this "little while." "The days of thy mourning will soon be ended." "There is a limit set to thy suffering time." "After that ye have suffered a while." Every wave is numbered between you and the haven; and then when that haven is reached, oh, what an apocalypse of glory! the "little while" of time merged into the great and unending "while" of eternity! to be for ever with the Lord, the same unchanged and unchanging Savior!

"A little while and ye shall see me!" Would that the eye of faith might be kept more intently fixed on "that glorious appearing!" How the world with its fascinations, tries to dim and obscure this blessed hope! How the heart is prone to throw out its fibres here, and get them rooted in some perishable object! Reader! seek to dwell more habitually on this the grand consummation of all thy dearest wishes. "Stand on the edge of your nest, pluming your wings for flight." Like the mother of Sisera, be looking for the expected chariot.—Words of Jesus.

A pure, holy character exerts its influence like warmth. It spreads itself through the community all the more powerfully because so quietly. You preach; men employ their intellects in answering your arguments. You strive to reform; the vicious hand themselves against you to defend your plans and operations. But you are simply true and holy, and there is no argument against that; it tells on every intellect.

Brother B. W. Woodward of Dutton, Michigan called on us last Friday evening on his way to his appointment in Warren County. We are always glad to have him call.

The time for the Ohio, Illinois and Iowa Conferences is hastening on. Let all attend these meetings who can. Have an encouraging word to say, and then go home with strength renewed, because you have added to the strength of others. If you cannot go, send word and some money to help along.

The Programme for the Iowa Conference as announced elsewhere in our paper is received. Each day is full of work appropriate for the several hours. Sermons and meetings for business, discussions and Bible readings on various topics, will make the time all occupied in some useful way. We trust the brethren and sisters of Iowa and other places that attend there will have a profitable gathering this year, and that results that will count when the Lord comes will be attained.

Russia has trouble for sure now. The Czar has dissolved the Douma. The members fled to Finland, where they held a meeting and passed a resolution calling on the people to rise and overthrow the government. People have been shot down by troops, and martial law rules in St. Petersburg. The revolution is spreading to the province, and rioting is the order of the day. In some parts there is fear of a general massacre of Jews. Many of the troops refuse to fight the people, and unrest and uneasiness is felt in all directions. There was report that Germany and Austria would send troops to aid in subduing the people, but that is denied in later reports. The money markets feel the effort of the turmoil, and Russian securities have suffered a drop. On the whole the outlook is dark indeed.

Beloved brethren of the Church of God in Ohio:

For some weeks past you have had notice through The Restitution, of the Ohio State Conference to be held at Brush Creek next month. The previous gatherings have been of untold benefit to all who attended. The Brush Creek Church is making special efforts to have the coming Conference "the best" and to this end they extend a kindly and pressing invitation to all to come. The object of this notice is, that you, brethren, may individually, take the matter to heart, and realize that it is important for you to be present that you may for yourself, know what has been done, and what there is to do. You are aware that the work of preparing for a Conference and the labor of carrying it through, and the general responsibility rests upon a few. Your presence will give them the encouragement they need, and are fully entitled to. Let us meet to the glory of God, and the blessing will follow.

The Bright Side.

Cheerfulness can become a habit, and habits sometimes help us over hard places. A cheerful heart seeth cheerful things.

A lady and gentleman were in a lumber yard situated by a dirty, foul-smelling river.

The lady said: "How good the pine boards smell!"

"Pine boards!" exclaimed the gentleman. Just smell this foul river!"

"No, thank you," the lady replied, "I prefer to smell the pine boards."

And she was right. If she, or we, can carry this principle through our entire living, we shall have the cheerful heart, the cheerful voice and cheerful face.

There is in some houses an unconscious atmosphere of domestic and social ozone which brightens everybody. Wealth cannot give it nor can poverty take it away.—Miss Muloch.

We wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

In Memoriam.

Fell asleep in perfect peace, Mrs. Amos H. Wooruff on July 7, 1906, at her home in Chicago. She died suddenly of heart failure having been ill only about half an hour. The funeral service was very sweet and helpful; in the absence of those of her own especial faith the Episcopal service was read by a student in whom she had taken a deep interest. It was opened by the triumphant words: "I am the resurrection and the life"—the peon of victory which has long been ringing down the ages. The discourse was a beautiful tribute to her character, her large-heartedness and tender ministry—it was too an exposition of her splendid faith and hope in the resurrection to life, the coming of that glorious morning that shall never end in night.

We laid her away under the willows and covered her bed with roses and lilies, but she shall waken to wear the laurels of victory and the flowers of immortality. Many years ago our sister made her covenant with a covenant keeping God with Him who "doeth all things well". And hence with the storms of the world still beating through the ages of discipline and conflict her heart was anchored in the faith that:

"When in danger knows no fear
In darkness feels no doubt."

Her last words were: "Every thing is all right" and with this comforting assurance upon her lips, she went bravely, peacefully, down into "the valley of the shadow of death" and "Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me." Surely "the Valley of the Shadow" must be a sweet and beautiful place with such company.

The human heart must often ache amid earth's confusion and thorns, but whatever the tempests that rage without there may still be, in its deepest consciousness the sublime faith and trust that even in the darkness knows that "Every thing is all right." A strong Hand is at the helm and out of the conflict and suffering of earth's children victory shall be born and soon shall wear her garments of triumph. Even in hours of suffering the confiding heart may find "the peace of God which passeth all understanding" flowing like a crystal river through its most sacred depths. Its cooling waves touch our sorrows like a hand of benediction; they soothe our loneliness and weariness with the assurance of faith, and the voice of hope for: "I have overcome the world." He is the victor and wears the victor's crown. He holds the solution of earth's darkest problems, and He holds the key of her graves.

Our sister had walked often through the deep waters of affliction; one by one she had followed no less than eight of her dear ones to the open grave. But above her aching heart she still carried her brave smile for those who were left—still "walked in faith" that God's morning should bring back her own—still passed bravely through the furnace of affliction for it was illumined by "the form of the Fourth."

"When peace like a river attendeth my way
When sorrows like sea billows roll
Whatever my lot, thou hast taught me to say
It is well, it is well with my soul."

And thus her character was ripened and developed even in the darkness of pain. Earth's most beautiful characters are always made more beautiful by the touch of her greatest sorrows. If "the Great Captain of our Salvation was made perfect (or finished) by suffering," surely we may not shrink from the sacrifical touch of pain. "Oh thou afflicted, tossed with tempests and not comforted, behold I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires." The diamond must be cut and polished before its worth is known— the chrysolite and topaz must be passed through fire before they get their lustre—the dark spots in the amethyst must be cleared away in the flames. And so of God's jewels: "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction."

His diamonds are ground and finished by suffering—his gems are cleared of flaws in the fires of trial. The purest stones, if not cut and polished, are unfit for the Master's use Never was there a Christian faith so bright that it paled not in the light of prosperity—never Christian hope so strong that it suffered not by worldly honors—never Christian trust so firm that it faltered not in the hour of worldly success.

But when the morning has gone and the night has come, the fires of faith are re-kindled. When earthly hopes are striken down like stars from the sky and our loved ones lie before us with unreplying lips, then we remember Him who hath said: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee."

And even though our sister had laid away the greater number of her dear ones, she still leaves, beside a host of friends and relatives, a heart-broken husband, and one royal hearted son to live out her character—to be her representative among the children of men. This privilege is a part of his great inheritance. And those who are left "mourn not as those who have no hope." They know that when the mists have rolled away, and the morning peaks are touched with the lights of victory, we may stand with those we have loved and lain away, upon the glorified hill tops of a world made new—we may look into their dear eyes never more to be shadowed with tears—we may walk with them on the banks of the beautiful river, and kiss their lips all fresh with the dews of immortality.

The Sun of Righteousness shall break the clouds and illumine the darkness, while earth's glad mountain tops are crowned with His light. The tears and sorrows, the woes and heartaches of humanity shall be lost in the songs from the crystal sea. Death shall be conquered and life shall be the Victor, under the reign of Him who is "King of kings and Lord of lords."

Elizabeth A. Reed.

Selections.

Christ Glorifies.

Be your hearts young and green, or seared and withered, lay them at the Savior's feet. Let his glory be your glorious aim. Raised far above the common objects and base pursuits of the world, this is an end worth living for. A life such as that elevating and enobling the humblest lot, shall command the regards, and fix on man the gaze of angels. Lofty ends give dignity to the lowest officers. He who lives for the glory of God has an end in view which lends dignity to the man and to his life. Bring common wire into proper contact with the magnet, and it will borrow the strange, attractive virtue, and become itself magnetic. The merest crystal fragment that has been flung out into the field and trampled on the ground, shines like a diamond, when sun Jesus stoop to kiss it. And who has not seen the dullest rain-cloud, when it turned its face to the sun, change into glory, and in the bow that spans it, present to the eyes of age and infancy, alike of the philosopher, who studies, and of the simple, joyous child who runs to catch it, the most brilliant and beautiful phenomenon in nature? Thus, from what they look at and come in contact with, common things acquire uncommon glory.—Church Union.

Christ Admired and Glorified by His Saints.

"When he shall come to be glorified in his saints and admired in all them that believe." 2 Thes. i. 10.

How mean and contemptible soever our Lord Jesus Christ might appear heretofore on earth, yet there is a day coming when he shall make a glorious figure in the sight of men and angels. How little soever the saints may be esteemed in our day, and look poor and despicable in an ungodly world, there is an approaching day, when they shall be glorious beyond all imagination; and Christ shall be glorified in them. In that day shall the Lord our Savior be the object of wonder and adoration, not only among those of the sons of men that have believed on him, but before all the intellectual creation; and that, upon the account of his grace manifested in believers.

What grace and grandeur dwell in each countenance; as thou art, O blessed Jesus, so shall they be in that day, all of them resembling the children of a king! vigor and health, beauty and immortality, shine and reign throughout all the blessed assembly. The adopted sons and daughters of God, resemble the original and begotten Son. Christ will have all his brethren and sisters conformed unto his glories, that they may be known to be kindred, the children of his Father, and that he may appear the firstborn among many brethren. When the Son of God breaks open the graves, he forms the dust of his saints by the model of his own glorious aspect and figure, "and changes their vile bodies in the likeness of his own glorious body, by that power whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself. Phil. iii. 21. He shall be admired as the bright original, and each of the saints as a fair, a glorious copy. The various beauties that are dispersed among all that assembly, are summed up and united in himself; "he is the chiefest of ten thousands, and altogether lovely." One sun in the firmament can paint his own bright image at once upon a thousand reflecting glasses or mirrors of gold. What a dazzling lustre would arise from such a scene of reflections! But what superior and inexpressible glory, above all the powers of similitude, and beyond the reach of comparison, shall irradiate the world in that day, when Jesus, the Sun of righteousness shall shine upon his saints, find each of them well prepared to receive this lustre and to reflect it round the creation; each of them displaying the image of the original Son of God, and confessing all their virtues and graces, and all their beauties and glories, both of soul and body, to be nothing else but mere copies and derivations from Jesus, the first and fairest image of the Father!

Eden Restored.

We know that on the ashes of this burned earth shall rise an orb far more beautiful, far more glorious, which shall endure for ever. The bright mirror that was shattered in Paradise shall be recast—the glorious temple that was uprooted by sin shall be restored; and on its altar shall be rekindled more than its ancient glory, all space will then be holy; all days will then be sabbaths; all faces gladness; sounds praise; and its every hill shall be a joyous Gerizim, a mount of blessing; from which streams of benedictions shall pour down upon a happy and holy world. Sin shall flee away like a shadow; sorrow's springs and deep fountains shall be dried up; the curse shall be removed, the incubus under which the world now groans; error shall be torn up by the roots; and this strayed and prodigal world of ours, restored to the sisterhood of stars that never fell, shall awaken in the wide universe a congratulation such as was never heard on earth; for the sons and morning stars shall sing together then as they never sang at creation's birth; Let us rejoice and be merry; for this our sister earth was lost, and is found; was dead and is alive. It is meet that we should rejoice and be merry."

Greatness and Condescension of God.

The following beautiful illustration is found in "The Christian Life, Social and Individual." By Peter Bayne.

Endeavor to embrace the universe in thy conception; let thought take to it the wings of imagination and open the oceanic eye of contemplation; view the stupendous illimitable whole. Then conceive God infinitely above it; filling it with his light, as the sun fills with its light the dew-drop; to whom the countless worlds of immensity are as the primary particles of water composing the dew-drop are to the sun. Then add this thought; that he, around whose throne the morning stars forever sing, to whom anthems of praise from all the star-choirs of immensity go toning on eternally from galaxy to galaxy; hears the evening hymn of praise in the Christian home, the holy melody in the Christian heart, the sigh of the kneeling child; and when the little task of his morning sojourn is over, will draw up the Christian, as the sun draws up the dewdrop, to rest on the bosom of infinite love.

Prophecy.

To the student of prophecy, the annals of the day and the hour rushing past are full of interest. He hears in the events of the present the echoes of ancient prophecies. He sees the inspired Word translating itself into facts. To his mind, great statesmen and soldiers are not the sculptors, but the chisels only in the hands of the Divine Sculptor; and the policy of cabinet, and congress, and divan is merely the filling up of the grand program laid down nearly two thousand years ago. God is in prophecy its inspiration; God is in history its actor.

Standing where prophecy is rushing into history, let us carefully and calmly observe its current, and gather in our hearts hopes, and joys, and bright expectancies that sparkle on the waters and in the sweet sunshine.

Love is the most effectual prayer.

Happy those who fearing God, fear nothing else.—Fenelon.

Devotion sweetens all that courage must endure.

Youth's Column.

Sunlight all the Way.

"Good-bye Jennie, the road is long
And the moor is hard to cross;
But well you know there is danger
In the boggs and the marshy moss.
So keep in the foot-path, Jennie
Let nothing tempt you to stray;
Then you'll get safely over it,
For there's sunlight all the way—
Sunlight all the way;
So never you fear,
Keep a good heart, dear,
For there's sunlight all the way."

The child went off with a blessing
And a kiss of mother love;
The daisies were down at her feet.
And the lark was singing above.
On in the narrow foot-path—
Nothing could tempt her to stray;
So the moor was passed at nightfall.
And she'd sunlight all the way.
Sunlight all the way;
And she, smiling, said,
As her bed was spread,
"I've had sunlight all the way."

And I, who followed the maiden,
Kept thinking, as I went,
Over the pathway years of life
That myself had spent.
If they could only keep the foot path,
And not in the marshes stray,
Then they would reach the end of life
Ere the night could shroud the day.
They'd have sunlight all the way,
But the marsh is wide;
And they turn aside,
And the night falls on the day.

For better to keep in the narrow path,
Nor turn to the left or right;
For if we falter at morning,
What shall we do when the night
Falls back on our lonely journey,
And we mourn our vain delay?
Then steadily onward, friends, and we Shall have sunlight all the way.
Till the journey's o'er,
And we reach the shore
Of a never ending day.

Energy.

It is astonishing how much may be accomplished in self culture by the energetic and the persevering, who are careful to avail themselves of opportunities, and use up the fragments of spare time which the idle permit to run to waste. Thus Ferguson learned astronomy from the heavens while wrapped in a sheepskin on the highland hills; thus Stone learned mathematics while working as a journeyman gardener. thus Drew studied the highest philosophy in the intervals of cobbling shoes; thus Miller taught himself geology while working as a day laborer in a quarry. By bringing their mind to bear upon knowledge in its various aspects, and carefully using up the very odds and ends of their time, men such as these, in the very humblest circumstances, reached the highest culture, and acquired honorable distinction among their fellow men. It was one of the characteristic expressions of Chatterton, that God had sent his creatures into the world with arms long enough to reach anything, if they choose to be at the trouble.

The Child's Gospel.

A very little girl had been early taken to church, and taught to behave reverently there. She was told that public worship had been appointed by God, and that she must attend seriously to its several parts till she could be old enough to comprehend them. So she would fix her eyes attentively on the preacher, and listen to all he said, though able to understand but little.

But once a smile of joy was observed to pass over her expressive face. Her eyes grew bright, and her red lips parted as if to speak. She had been repaid for her docile listening. In the midst of his discourse the minister had repeated the Savior's invitation, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

She had learned this passage by heart in her lisping infancy; but in the voice of the clergyman, whom she revered, it came to her with force and authority. It was like an old friend in a new garment—the shining garment of heaven.

Hastening home to her mother, who had been detained by indisposition from the public services of the Sabbath, she threw her arms around her neck, exclaiming with great animation, "O mamma, dear mamma, I have heard to-day the child's gospel."

The Happy Boy.

"When we've been there ten thousand years."

Just under my window, in a neighboring yard, is a long wood-pile, and a few days since, you might have seen a boy come into the yard, and saw away upon the large sticks in right good earnest. He was a small boy, I et he worked steadily, and I was quite sure that by-and by he would finish this work, discouraging as it must seem at first. I thought he must be a very happy boy, Because he always sung as he worked. From morning till night I could hear the noise of his saw, and with it came the music of a very pleasant voice, keeping time with the sawing.

One day I listened to catch the words, and what think you he was singing? I expected to hear some foolish and senseless song, such as I too often heard boys singing through the streets. But no, I could understand every word distinctly as this cheerful boy sang,

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun."

In an instant I was carried back many years to a low, brown house, miles away from my home, where my good grandmother taught me to sing this same hymn. And I wondered if this little boy ever thought how much these words meant.—Do you think, children, when you sing them? Only to know that if you are good, and love Jesus and try to please him during the few years you stay in this world, He will take you to be with Him always. And when, as this excellent hymn says, you've been there "ten thousand years," and look back, over all those bright years, to the few years spent on the earth, do you think you will be sorry that you chose the better part, and can then look forward to endless years of happiness and glory?

What we Need.

When I go to the house of God, I do not want amusement. I want the doctrine which is according to godliness. I want to hear the remedy against the harassing of my guilt, and the disorder of my affections. I want to be led from weariness and disapointment to that goodness which filleth the hungry soul. I want to have light upon the mystery of providence; to be taught how the judgments of the Lord are right; how I shall be prepared for duty and for trial; how I may fear God all the days of my life, and close in peace. Tell me of that Lord Jesus "who his own self bare our sins in his body on the tree." Tell me of his "intercession for the transgressors," as their "advocate with the Father." Tell me of his Holy Spirit, whom they that believe in him receive to be their preserver, sanctifier, comforter. Tell me of the virtues, as growing out of his cross, and nurtured by his grace. Tell me of the glory reflected on his name by the obedience of faith. Tell me of the vanquished death, of the purified grave, of a blessed resurrection, of a life everlasting, and my bosom warms. This is gospel; these are glad tidings to me as a sufferer, because glad to me a sinner.—Dr. John M. Mason.

Hold fast that no man take thy crown; just a little in the future we shall reap life everlasting. Sorrow will be forgotten, tears wiped away, friend will greet friend, there will be no more pain, nor any more death. Blessed time! endless day! Eden restored! Jesus reigning on his throne! O, to reap the reward of the blessed, and be among the gathered saints, and hear the soul-thrilling, immortalizing words, "Well done," from the blessed Savior.

MARRIED.

Married in Dutton, Mich., July 18th, 1906, at the home of Bro. and Sister McCroden, their daughter Susa to Wm. Solomon, Elder B. W. Woodward officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Solomon were both born and raised in this community, and are loved and respected by all. Their friends have naught but good wishes for them as they go to their new home in Moline, where he has already built up a good business as blacksmith.

If We Knew.

If we knew when walking thoughtless
Through the crowded, noisy way,
That some pearl of wondrous whiteness
Close beside our pathway lay:
We would pause when now we hasten,
We would often look around,
Lest our careless feet should trample
Some rare jewel in the ground.

If we knew what tears were raining
For the seeds that we should sow,
If we knew what lips were parching,
For the water we should bring,
We would haste with eager footsteps,
We would work with willing hands,
Bearing cups of cooling water,
Planting roses in shading palms.

If we knew when loved ones trusted
Closely press to say "Good bye,"
Which among the lips that kiss us,
First should 'neath the clasp lie;
We would clasp our arms around them,
Looking on them through their tears;
Tender words of love utter all
We would whisper in their ears.

If we knew what lives were darkened
By some thoughtless word of ours,
Like the frost among the flowers,
Oh! with what sincere repentings,
With what anguish of regret,
While our eyes were overflowing,
Would we say—forgive—forget!

If we knew—alas, and do we Ever care or seek to know,
Whether bitter herbs or roses
In our neighbor's gardens grow?
God forgive us, let us remember,
Our hearts break to hear him say,
"Careless child I never knew you,
From my presence flee away."

"I Have Christ What Want I More?"

"Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift." 2 Cor. ix. 15.

In the heart of London City,
Mid the dwellings of the poor,
These bright golden words were uttered—
"I have Christ! what want I more?"

By a lonely dying woman,
Stretched upon a garret floor
Having but one earthly comfort—
"I have Christ! what want I more?"

He who heard them, ran to fetch her
Something from the world's great store:
It was needless—died she saying,
"I have Christ! what want I more?"

But her words will live forever:
I repeat them o'er and o'er:
God delights to hear me saying,
"I have Christ! what want I more."

O my dear, my fellow sinners!
High and low and rich and poor,
Can you say with deep thanksgiving,
"I have Christ: what want I more?"

Look away from earth's attractions;
All earth's joys will soon be o'er
Rest not till each heart exclaimeth,
"I have Christ! what want I more?"

The Great Salvation.

How few persons in this age of the world have any idea of the salvation of which the Apostle Paul speaks in the second chapter of Hebrews. He calls it a great salvation, and we are taught that by it we are saved. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great a salvation." It is not only a great salvation but it is the salvation which at first began to be spoken by the Lord; and was confirmed unto us by them who heard him. No one need be mistaken as to what salvation is here mentioned. It was first spoken by the Lord and then confirmed unto us by them who heard him.

Jesus first preached this great salvation and commanded his disciples to preach the same and the record shows that they used the same terms used by Jesus. There is another feature in this preaching that I wish to call my readers' attention to and that is that "God bore them witness both with signs and wonders and with diverse miracles and gifts of the Holy Spirit according to his (God's) own will." This great salvation was according to God's own will and not that of man's.

Now my readers, if we can find the salvation taught by the Lord and afterward by the Apostles we shall be able to present to you a salvation that will save. If we neglect this that God has offered by his Son we are unsaved. So now we wish to call your attention to the gospel preached by Christ. Paul says the "gospel of Christ is the power of God unto the salvation of every one who believes." Rom. i. 16. It is defined as a definite gospel. The Apostle further says that if any man preach any other gospel than what we have preached let him be accursed. Yes, if an angel from heaven preach any other gospel let him be accursed. We are not to depend on man's wisdom but God's. In Matt. iv. 23 we read that Jesus went about all Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom. In this Scripture we have the gospel modified by the phrase "of the kingdom?" Gospel meaning good news or glad tidings. Therefore we have the term "the gospel of the kingdom." In Mark we have the full term. Mark i. 14. Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. Kingdom is here modified by the phrase "of God." We therefore see that the good news relates to the kingdom of God. The churches ignore this gospel of the kingdom of God and substitute a gospel of good works. If your life is moulded after that of the Christ that is all that God will require. We as a people believe in good works and a Christian character but believe that there is something needed before we begin to develop this life of good works.

After having been raised from the watery grave we are admonished to walk in the newness of life or in the new life. Add to your faith the Christian graces. You must have the faith before you can make the addition. Jesus in Mark i. 15 says, The kingdom of God is at hand repent and believe the gospel. The translation is: God's royal Majesty has approached; reform and believe the gospel or glad tidings. This teaches that to preach the kingdom of God you must teach the royalty of Jesus. If you fail to do this you fail to teach the gospel. In Luke i. 31-33 the angel said to Mary, "Thou shalt bring forth a Son and shall call him Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever and unto his kingdom there shall be no end.

This is the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and relates to his royalty. He (Jesus) is to sit on David's throne and is also to reign over the house or kingdom of Jacob. David's throne or kingdom is now in a turned over condition as given by Ezek. xxi. 27, I will overturn it until he comes whose right it is and I will give it him. Jesus is here promised this kingdom. Let me affirm that David's kingdom was on earth and not in heaven, and when restored as God has promised it will be on the earth again. A gospel that promises men and women an inheritance in heaven is not the gospel that Jesus taught and commanded his apostles to teach. Therefore it is not the power of God unto the salvation of every one that believes.

Paul admonishes Timothy to "study to show thyself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of God." 2 Tim. ii. 15. If you wish to be approved of God you must study that you may be able to rightly divide the Word. When Jesus sent his apostles out to preach he commanded them to preach the same gospel that he had preached.

In Luke ix. 2 we read that Jesus sent them (the apostles) out to preach the kingdom of God. In the 6th verse it reads, "And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel." To preach the kingdom of God is to preach the gospel which is equivalent to preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. The glad tidings relates to the restoring again the kingdom to Israel.

In Acts xv. 14-16 we read that God is now taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name. (He is choosing them out to give them positions in the kingdom of God.) And to this agree the words of the prophet; as it is written. After this (choosing out of the Gentiles a people for his name) I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up. Can language be made plainer than this? The prophet declares that David's tabernacle, which is his throne and kingdom will again be built up, that the residue of men might seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord who doeth all these things. The apostles were commanded to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be condemned. Mark xvi. 15, 16.

In gleaning from the word we find these conditions: Believe, reform and be baptized and you are justified before God. After which we must live a blameless life before God. If we remain steadfast we have the promise that we shall receive eternal life in the kingdom of God.

Why Am I a Protestant?

Many protestants of today are unable to answer intelligently this question. Having been a devout Roman Catholic from infancy, only recently changing my belief against the faith of my youth. I feel that I do have an intelligent reason for having made said change. I in brief offer the following lines, not that I would in anywise reprove my Catholic fellowman, nor be a stumbling-block before him, but rather that I might bring him to a higher standard both in this world and in the world which is to come.

In the first place let me call attention to the fact that with intellectual development, we come to understand a matter better, and as a result exercise ourselves with increased love and kindness, also that intellectual development enriches man's temporal conditions. Compare Roman Catholic countries with Protestant countries. Compare Protestant England with Catholic Italy; Protestant Germany with Catholic Spain; Protestant North America with Catholic South America. What is the cause of this common difference? Undoubtedly this,—that faith in God and Christ as understood and taught by protestant religionists urges and helps all people to develope their mental powers, while Catholicism urges the people to depend entirely upon the mental ability of only those whom the Church ordains to teach. I do believe that the Church has produced much civilization in the past, and is doing much today to civilize India and China. It has also given us many hymn writers whose hymns we all like to use. It has given us many philanthropists. But these very men are men who, in spite of Church teachings have used and developed themselves intellectually.

Now about one thousand years ago—Christianity first became divided. This division was caused partly by doctrinal and partly by personal questions. One of the divisions was called the Eastern or Greek Church; the other the Western or Latin Church. Five hundred and twenty years later, Martin Luther, an Augustine Monk, by reading God's Word, came to find that in the very infallible Church of which he was a priest, there were terrible errors, and he began to "protest" against them. He was particularly incensed because of the public sale of indulgences. When he saw the church, by the authority of its ruler, selling pardons in some of the main market places in Germany, pardons not only for sins already committed, but also for sins to be committed on the morrow, Martin Luther protested that it was not right according to the Word of God Soon a large part of Europe was called upon to decide whether it would continue to give allegiance to the Roman Church, agreeing to those things, or to decide with Luther and protest. Little by little England sided in with the protestants. The first national blow for freedom against Roman usurpation was given when Henry VIII, King of England, threw his mighty influence upon the side of the protestors. Soon Germany and a part of my native country, the Netherlands, sided with the reformers.

Now the question again, Why am I a Protestant? Where in the Bible am I instructed to worship the virgin Mary, to offer prayers for the dead, to adore relics, to confess in the ear of a priest, to do penance, to practice indulgences, or to believe in a purgatory? Nowhere in God's Word do I find instruction that in the least confirms such doctrines. Therefore I must protest these doctrines. Now I can give many more reasons why I am no longer a son of the Church of Rome, each one sufficient for being a Protestant. For instance, the priest tells me I must simply listen to him and obey the Church. I must be content to let the Church do my thinking for me. I protest against this Roman suppression of private judgment. But the leader of the Church tells me that the Church doctrines and teachings are infallible because they are given by an infallible head. Here again I must protest for where does the Bible teach me that even one—anyone—man should ever be infallible. The pope claims to be the true successor of the apostle Peter, and sits in his holy chair, that he is the rock upon whom the Church is built; that therefore he is the father and teacher as well as sovereign of the world. Observe that Christ never gave such supremacy to Peter nor to any other person. Observe again that there is no historical proof that Peter ever entered the city of Rome. Further, during the first four hundred years the bishops of Rome never dreamed of such supremacy. Not until the fifth century did the bishops of Rome undertake to dominate over others. These two gigantic claims—the infallibility and the supremacy of the pope—are both supposed to be based upon Matt. xvi. 18, a text in which there is no indication of such said claims. Then again just look at some of the men who have been pope. One, John XII, a mere boy of eighteen years; another one who sold his office and his infallibility for $75000 per year. Were these popes infallible? and can we close our eyes to such a past?

If the pope be infallible, why not rely upon our own understanding of Bible doctrine. "To the law and to the prophets, if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20 Many Catholics who now serve the Lord only formally would gladly serve him in "spirit and in truth," if "they only knew how. For this reason, [illegible] the scriptures" for yourselves, John [illegible] ye err not knowing the Scriptures," Matt. xxii. 29. Christ ever appealed to reason and intelligence, that we should be intelligent disciples. Any Church that tells me not to reason runs counter to the Word of God. Paul was one of the greatest teachers of the gospel and yet he commended the Church at Berea because they searched the Scriptures to see if the things he taught were true. See Acts xvii. 11. So say I, let us search the Scriptures, which "are able to make us wise unto salvation" (2 Tim. iii. 15), then let us obey them, that we may let our lights shine more brightly before others, that they too may place faith in Christ our coming King, and that God's will may (by them) be done on earth as it is in heaven" (Matt. vi. 10), and may the whole earth be brought to the Lamb of God, is my prayer.

Dear Bro. Underwood:

I am so glad to see dear old Bro. Hatch's picture in THE RESTITUTION. I thank you and Sister Scroggs for it. I think it looks natural as life. Many a time have I listened to that dear brother preach the gospel and sing the good songs he loved so well. How we all enjoyed those meetings. It always encouraged us and we would try to do better for a while, but he is gone from us. I hope we may be worthy of eternal life in the morning of the resurrection, then we will be permitted to meet all the dear ones that have passed away. I love THE RESTITUTION, it is encouraging to read the good letters the brothers and sisters write. I am also interested in the Berean column. I love to read that column and know what the young folks are doing. I have five children, one son-in-law and one grandchild that are Bereans. I love to see the good work go on. I pray they may continue on to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. May we all be worthy of a home in the kingdom of God.

Your sister in the Blessed Hope.

The Two Witnesses.

No sin is ever committed without the presence of two witnesses. Many forget this. They choose the darkness for their evil deeds, and think no one sees them. Or, if they are in the light, they look around eagerly and carefully to see if there is any one near, and if they can see no one they think they are all safe and can do as they like. But this is a great mistake. You have never thought a thought, nor done a deed, but in the presence of two witnesses; and in every instance the witnesses make an exact record of the deed, and attest it as certainly as if they signed it with their hands. These witnesses are God and your conscience. You may go where there shall be no living thing but yourself—solitude and most complete—but God is there. His eye is full upon you, and every motion of your heart, every thought of your mind, and every deed of your hand, lies as exposed to his view as if you stood before his throne in heaven. He is a witness to every thing. And so is your conscience. You may bribe it to shut its eyes, or to be silent, or to forget. And your bribe may succeed for a time, but conscience is apt to repent of its unfaithfulness in shutting its eyes when it should look, and of holding its tongue when it should speak. And you can never be safe from being found out by any sin of which conscience has at any time, or in any circumstance, been the witness.

With such witnesses as these to everything, you may be sure that no sin, however secretly committed, will fail to find you out.

Temperance

A Water Drinker's Experience.

I've worked in the heat, and I've worked in the cold,
I've worked with the young, and I've worked with the old,
I've worked very late, and I've worked very soon,
I've worked by the sun, and I've worked by the moon;
But I'm sure I can tell you without any fear,
I can work very well without any beer.

I've worked for from home, and I've worked rather nigh,
I've worked in the wet, and I've worked in the dry,
I've worked amongst corn, and I've worked amongst hay,
I've worked by the piece, and I've worked by the day;
And I'm most sure I can tell you without any fear,
I can work very well without any beer.

I've worked amongst lime, and I've worked amongst chalk,
I've worked amongst still folks, and those that could talk,
I've worked amongst iron, and I've worked amongst wood,
I've worked amongst bad, and I've worked amongst good;
But wherever I go there's nothing to fear
So much as the foolish, made foolish by beer.

I've written and read, I've summed, and I've talked,
I've been out on pleasure with friends, and I've walked,
But never, no never, good use could I see
In taking strong drink, so hurtful to me;
Thus, I'm sure I can tell you without any fear,
These things can be managed without any beer.

The Traffic in Ardent Spirits.

Every man is bound to pursue such a business as to render a valuable consideration for that which he receives from others. A man who receives in trade the avails of the industry of others, is under obligation to restore that which will be of real value. He receive the fruit of toil; he receives that which is of value to himself; and common equity requires that he return a valuable consideration. Thus, the merchant renders to the farmer, in exchange for the growth of his farm, the productions of other climes; the manufacturer, that which is needful for the clothing or comfort of the agriculturalist; the physician, the result of his professional skill. All these are valuable considerations, which are fair and honorable subjects of exchange. They are mutual accommodation; they advance the interest of both parties. But it is not so with the dealer in ardent spirits. He obtains the property of his fellowmen; and what does he return? That which will tend to promote his real welfare? That which will make him a happier man? That which will benefit his family? That which diffuses learning and domestic comfort around his family circle! None of these things. He gives that which will produce poverty, and want, and cursing, and tears, and death. He asked an egg, and he receives a scorpion. He gives him that which is established and well-known as a source of no good, but as tending to produce beggary and wretchedness. The dealer may look on his gains in this matter—on his houses, or mortgages, or lands, obtained as the result of this business—with something like these reflections:—

"This property has been gained from other men. It was theirs, honestly acquired, and was necessary to promote their own happiness and the happiness of their own families. It has become mine by a traffic which has not only taken away from them, but which has ruined their peace, corrupted their morals, sent woe and discord into their families, and consigned them, perhaps, to an early and most loathsome grave. This property has come from the hard earnings of other men; has passed into my hands without any valuable compensation rendered; but has been obtained only while I have been diffusing want, and woe, and death, through their abodes."

A man is bound to pursue such a course of life as not necessarily to increase the burdens and the taxes of the community. The pauperism and crimes of this land grow out of this vice, as an overflowing fountain. Three-fourths of the taxes for prisons, and houses of refuge, and almshouses, would be cut off, but for this and the attendant vices. Nine-tenths of the crimes of this country, and of the expenses of litigation for crime, would be prevented by arresting it.

What is done then in this traffic? You are filling our almshouses, and jails, and penitentiaries, with victims loathsome and burdensome to the community. You are engaged in a business which is compelling your fellow-citizens to pay taxes to support the victims of your employment. You are filling up these abodes of wretchedness and guilt, and then asking your fellow-citizens to pay enormous taxes indirectly to support this traffic. For, if every place where ardent spirits can be obtained, were closed in this city and its suburbs, how long might your splendid palaces for the poor be almost untenanted piles; how soon would your jails disgorge their inmates, and be no more filled; how soon would the habitations of guilt and infamy in every city become the abodes of contentment and peace; and how soon would reeling loathsomeness and want cease to assail your doors with importunate pleadings for charity!

Now we have only to ask our fellow-citizens, what right they have to pursue an employment ending thus to burden the community with taxes, and to endanger the dwellings of their fellowmen, and to send to my door, and to every other man's door, hordes of beggars loathsome to the sight; or to compel the virtuous to seek out their wives and children, amidst the squalidness of poverty, and the cold of winter, and the pinchings of hunger, to supply their wants? Could impartial justice be done in the world, an end would soon be put to the traffic in ardent spirits. Were every man bound to alleviate all the wretchedness which his business creates, to support all the poor which his traffic causes, an end would soon be made of this employment. But, alas, you can diffuse this poison for gain, and then call on your industrious and virtuous countrymen to alleviate the wretchedness, to tax themselves to build granite prisons for the inmates which your business has made; and splendid palaces at an enormous expense, to extend a shelter and a home for those whom your employment has turned from their own habitations. Is this a moral employment? Would it be well to obtain a living in this way in any other business?—Albert Barnes.

Great Nations Destroyed by Drink.

The great empires of antiquity might still have been flourishing but for certain destructive agencies cherished within their own bosoms. Babylon was conquered, not so much by the arms of the Medes and Persians, as by drunkenness and revelry. Had it not been for the debauchery of her kings and princes and the general efferninacy of her people, she might long have reared her brow among the nations, with her hanging gardens and fair palaces the admiration and delight of all beholders. Persia fell, not so much by the energy and valor of the Greek armies as by the drunkenness of her kings and people. Had it not been for this, that wonderful people might still have been a power in the world. Greece in her turn fell, not so much by the prowess of the Roman arms as by her own discord and effeminacy. Save for this, Athens in art, science and manners, might still have been the world's wonder and example. Rome fell, not so much by the hordes of Goths, Huns and Vandals descending upon her plains and assaulting her cities as by the careless ease and sottish indifference of her people. Wine and spoil took away the heart of that great empire, and unnerved its mighty arm. But for this, Rome, from her seven hills, might still have been controlling the destinies of the world, or at least leading in the van of nations.—Irish World.

What the Editor Saw.

The other day we noticed him as he came across the bridge, with his wagon full of cotton, and chickens, and eggs. He found ready market for his produce, and we thought how happy his little ones would be when he returned home in the evening with toys, and dresses, and shoes, and food for the morrow, and some clear money in his purse. We thought we could see his wife standing in the doorway to give him a cordial greeting on his return, so desirous were we that he should make home ones happy and contented. We could almost see his cheerful face as he returned to his family after a day's absence. So we thought, and returned to our work.

But eventide came, and he passed by our window again. He had nothing we thought he would have. The bed of the wagon was bare. No little shoes, nor toys, nor dresses, nor food for the morrow, nor money in his purse, we dare say. The man was drunk. He had changed, and this changed our thoughts of his home. We could see the children shrinking from his approach, and the wife, so careworn and sorrowful. She could not meet him with the pleasant smile with which she had intended greeting him. He was breaking her heart and preparing to make paupers of his children.—Alabama Baptist.

Announcement.

The 19th Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the beautiful Campground at Waterloo, Iowa, August 18th to 26th, inclusive. Rates of one and one-third fare from all points in Iowa have been granted by all railroads; going tickets to be purchased any time from August 17th to 23rd, inclusive, and holders of Certificates for tickets bought during that time will be entitled to return ticket for one-third fare if bought before August 30th. A certificate must be secured with each ticket bought.

Bring straw ticks and a few comforters. Tents will be furnished free. Board at our Dining Hall 25 cents per day.

We expect to have the following preaching brethren with us: A. J. Eychaner, S. J. Lindsay, L. E. Conner, Almus Adams, H. M. Lucas, G. Eldred Marsh, John Garton, and others.

For entire program of meeting with full instructions, etc., address C. P. Allard, Corresponding Secretary, Box 88, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.
EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.05 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

WHEN YOUR TIME IS OUT PLEASE RENEW.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Men of world-wide renown, in their haste to be rich, have tarnished their names with stains that snow-water will never whiten. In the spirit of demonianism dynamite thugs are at their work of destruction. The elements are feverish, and nature itself seems to be becoming man's enemy. The violence so rampant in the days of Noah stalks [illegible] the world once more. Old Sodom's black enormities are outdone in the deeper dyed sins of these last days. The figures of time will soon turn over the page on which retribution is written. The present world is doomed.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference:

I have moved to the state of Oregon, so all letters in the interest of the conference work will be sent to J. P. Bitner, Severance, Kansas.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us about [illegible] give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertized in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have you acquaintences with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

Nothing is Lost.

Nothing is lost! the drop of dew
Which trembles on the leaf or flower
Is but exhaled to fall anew
In summer's thunder shower;
Perchance to shine within the bow
That frosts the sun at fall of day;
Perchance to sparkle in the flow
Of fountains far away.

The Great Salvation. No. 2.

In our first article on the above subject we called attention to the fact that Christ is promised David's throne or the right to the kingdom of David. The churches of our day do not teach this all important doctrine. They teach that God's purpose in creating the earth was to prepare men and woman for heaven or a place beyond the skies. The earth abideth forever, so says the prophet, also that the righteous shall not be removed. God's purpose in creation was that those who obeyed him should inherit the earth. Man was promised dominion over the works of his hand. Adam failed to obey the law given him and lost his right to rule. God renewed this promise when he said that "The seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head." In this promise the seed of the woman was to have the first dominion restored.

In Micah iv. 8, the propht says, "And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion. The kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem. The first dominion was promised to the [illegible] The second dominion was [illegible] the tower of the flock. In Isa. ix. 6 and 7 we read, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom to order it, and establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this. "The child born and the son given," spoken of in this Scripture is admitted by all commentators to mean the Christ. He is the seed of the woman who is to bruise the serpent's head. How can any one believe that this one here spoken of is Christ and not believe that God will fulfil this promise, viz., That he will occupy the throne of David and order it in justice and judgment. This means that the nations must become subject to his rule. Before this can be done a people must be taken out of the Gentiles for his name. His associate rulers are being chosen during this age. They are developing a character that will enable them to assist in the ruling of the nations. God will recognize you as one of his saints when you have believed the gospel of the kingdom of God and repented and been baptized into his name. In baptism you have taken upon your self the sacred name of Jesus who also took upon himself the name of our God. We are than the children of God and if children then heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus the Christ. My dear brothers and sisters in the Anointed, is this not a great honor? How men strive in this life to get some unimportant office in which there is only worldly honor. Let us remember what our Savior has said: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my kingdom as I have overcome, and am sit down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21.

We wish to speak further of the promise made to David. In Eph. ii. 12, Paul speaks of the covenants of promise thus: That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world. To be aliens is to be without God in the world. How can we escape if we neglect so great a salvation. To be without the covenants of promise is to be without salvation. These covenants of promise are those made to Abraham and David. Abraham was promised a land and a seed. This seed Paul says is Christ. This Seed is to bless all nations by ruling them with justice and judgment. David was promised a son who should occupy his throne and kingdom forever. This son is the seed of woman and the seed of Abraham.

In 2Samuel vii. 12-17, we read, And when thy days be fulfilled and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build an house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever. I will be his father, and he shall be my son. If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men. But my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before me. And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever. These are the words of the prophet Nathan to David and relate to the kingdom of Israel or David restored. In this promise Christ is to be the supreme ruler. His royalty is here fully established. To those who believe that Solomon is herein spoken of I would state that he ruled the kingdom before David's death. His kingdom was not an everlasting kingdom. Israel possessed this land and kingdom under the law. David's son (Christ) was to receive it under the promise. Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4. I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant. Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Verses 29, 36. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven." and his throne "as the sun before me." God has sworn by his holiness that he will do this thing and yet many do not believe it but teach that David's throne is in heaven and when God is through with this earth he will set fire to it and burn it up.

The sacred writer says, One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh; but the earth abideth forever. Eccl. i. 4. This earth was created for man and man for the earth. And God's promise is that we, the righteous, shall inherit it. Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth. Nevertheless we look for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. And hast made us unto our God kings and priests and we shall reign on the earth. The hope of the apostles was that Jesus would come and restore to them the kingdom which Paul calls the sure mercies of David. The sure mercies are the "just things" not the common things. If we were to remove all the promises made to David relating to his kingdom and throne we would indeed have a ragged Bible. Add to these those made to Abraham and his seed and we would have but little left. This is what the religious world is doing today. If they speak of the coming of Christ they do not associate it with the ruling of the nations. It means that God will visit the earth with a terrible destruction. Let our faith be such that we can see the King in his beauty. Your brother.

D. C. ROBISON.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 42.

1. The word that occurred unto Hieremias from the Lord, in the days of Joonkeim, king of Jouda, saying;

2. Go on foot to the house of Archabein, and thou shalt lead them into the house of the Lord, into one of the courts, and thou shalt offer them wine to drink.

3. And I led out Jeckonias son of Chabasis and his brothers into the house of the Lord into the paste-phorion (robing-chamber) of the sons of Jessau, son of Ananias, son of Oodolias, a man of God, who is nigh to the house of the rulers over the house of Mousaios, son of Seelnom, who guardeth the court.

5. And I gave before their face an earthen-vessel of wine and drinking-cups, and I said, Drink wine.

6. And they said, We may not drink wine, because Joonadab, son of Hrechab, our father, enjoined on us, saying, Do not drink wine ye and your sons during an intimate age (or as long as ye live),

7. And do not build houses, and do not sow seed, and a vineyard shall not be yours, because in tents shall ye live all your days, that ye may live many days upon the land upon which ye are spending your time.

8. And we have hearkened to the voice of Joonadab, our father, not to drink wine all our days, we and our wives and our sons and our daughters,

9. And not to build houses wherein to dwell and a vineyard and field and seed hath not become ours.

10. And we have dwelt in tents and we have hearkened and done according to all that Joonadab, our father, hath commanded us.

11. And it came to pass when Nabonchodonosor came up against the land, we also said we would go in and we did go into Hierousaleem from the face of the host of the Chaldaioi and from the face of the host of the Assurioi and we have been dwelling there.

12. And a word of the Lord occurred unto me saying;

13. In this wise saith the Lord, Go thy way and say to the man of Jouda and those who inhabit Hierousaleem, will ye not take chastening-instruction to hearken to my words?

14. Sons of Joonadab son of Hrechab have established a spoken-word which he enjoined on his offspring not to drink some and they have not drank it; and I have talked to you at early dawn and ye have not hearkened;

15. And I have sent unto you my courtiers, the prophets, saying, Turn away each one of you from your wicked way, and make your devices better, and do not go your way after other gods to serve them as bond-servants, and ye shall dwell upon the land which I gave to you and your brothers; and ye did not incline your ears and ye did not hearken.

16. And sons of Joonadab, son of Hrechab have established the commandment of their father, but this laity have not hearkened to me.

17. Therefore in this wise hath the Lord said, Lo, I am bringing upon Jouda and upon all those who inhabit Hierousalem all the calamities which I have talked in respect to them.

18. Therefore in this wise hath the Lord said; Since sons of Joonadab, son of Hrechab, have hearkened to do the commandment of their father even as their father commanded them,

19. There shall not fail of a man of prominence of the sons of Joonadab son of Hrechab standing before my face all the days of the laity.

COMMENT.

This 42nd chapter purports to be the 35th in C. V. and R. V. "became" or "occurred" instead of "came" in the 1st verse. This change of thought cannot be too frequently and strongly emphasized because of the peculiar theological argument that is based upon the passages so translated. No "son of Josiah" in the text.

In the 2nd verse "the house of Archabein" instead of "the house of the Rechabites"—no "speak unto them" in the text. "One of the courts" instead of "one of the chambers."

In the 3rd verse "Jechonine" instead of "Jaazaniah" "Hieremis" instead of "Jeremiah" and "Chabasis" instead of "Habazziniah"—no "sons and the whole house of the Rechabites" in the text.

4th verse "robing-chamber" instead of "chamber," "Joonas" instead of "Hanan," "son of Ananias" instead of "Igdaliah" and "son of Godolins" omitted entirely—"who" instead of "which"—balance of the verse all wrong—doesn't even convey the thought. Seloom instead of "Shallum" and "who guardeth the court" instead of "the keeper of the door" or "threshold."

In the 5th verse no "sons of the house of the Rechabites"—"an earthen—vessel of wine" instead of "bowls full of wine" and "drinking-cups" instead of "cups."

In the 6th verse observe the "forever" to compare with this translation.

The thought substantially given in the 7th 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th verses. Note the new play on the name "Nabonchodonosor" called here "Nabuchadnezzar" and "Assurioi" called "Syrians" which of course is not only misleading but absurdly so. For Suria and Assuria are not the same country at all.

In the 14th verse observe the emphasis placed upon the "spoken word" of a human father. And so idiomatically the "spoken-word" of God the heavenly Father becomes the specially significant or "oracular word" as compared with the "inges" or general word of inspiration.

Of course the lesson taught in this chapter is one of obedience and not temperance as generally interpreted and applied—these "Hrechabites" being true and obedient even to a tradition or a spoken-word handed down from generation to generation.

Free Religion.

A mother in conversation with her daughter, who had been spending the winter at a neighboring city. "Yes, mother, I have adopted free religion." "Well, my daughter, what do you freed yourself from?"

It was rather a sharp turn, for the girl was hardly prepared to state, perhaps, that she had renounced nearly everything that she had been taught to reverence. But as she had been several months in an atmosphere of fashionable hypercriticism, she mustered boldness to proceed: "I believe in the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man."

"You were always taught to believe in those," said the mother.

"But I have given up all belief in historical Christianity. I wish to be free from prejudice, and superstition, and creed; from those external forms and associations and duties that people call religion, but are merely the result of local and temporary influences."

"Then you think yourself free to reject the Bible as the Word of God, and Christ as the Son of God, and the uses of prayer, and the particular faith and practices of the Church?"

The new convert to freedom blushed, but nodded assent. The elder woman looked sad, and made no reply. The next day, when the two were talking of family affairs, she said:

"You know that father will have to spend one of the year in Washington."

"Why can't we be with him?"

"No. It is best that we remain here."

"But he will write us often, and come home in the holidays."

"Suppose that we did not read his letters nor answer them, nor welcome him when he comes."

The girl looked at her mother, who was not given to that jesting, with amazement.

"I was thinking," continued the mother, "perhaps we have been foolish to [illegible] so dependent, in our family life, on [illegible] external expressions of our regard for each other. Your father knows that he loves him, and it may be that he should be content with the fact, and that we should get [illegible] better without any exchange of [illegible] confidences. And would it not be a [illegible] test of the genuineness of our [illegible] affection if we should break up [illegible] keeping and wander about while [illegible] are gone, and thus get away from those local associations that [illegible] strongly remind us of him? And if we could give up the habits and practices peculiar to us as a family, and which he has encouraged—such as celebrating birthdays, exchanging flowers and verses of poetry Sunday morning, kissing good night at our chamber doors—we might rid ourselves of all suspicion of feigning or overestimating our love for him."

"Mother, are you crazy?" broke in the impatient listener.

"Of course," proceeded the speaker, calmly, "we should not disown him or the brothers. I should continue to draw from the bank, as I always have done in his absence, the funds which he places there for our use, and to send the boys what they need at school. But we shall be more likely in the end to please him and respect ourselves, if we no longer ask his advice about anything, nor accept his directions; and when he and the boys come home at Christmas, while we acknowledge the relationship, we will refrain from all demonstration and from everything that can suggest the happy past. These formal attentions corrupt true family affection, which is independent of time or place. Your father would honor us the more if, without letters, home usages, and suggestive memories, we still retained a sense of his kindness as a bountiful provider and unchanging friend. That would be free affection, my daughter."

The young eyes dropped in confusion, and well they might. Their owner was ashamed of her shallow thinking. She saw that it is no wiser to declare one's self independent of historical Christianity than to ignore the history and associations of one's own family. She saw that the church is the Christian's home, whose "local and temporal" usages are the expression of religious life; that the Bible is his Father's word of counsel and letter of enlightenment and affection; that prayer is his "vital air" and "native breath;" that to reject Christ as a Savior is to receive coldly the Son of God our elder brother, and that to be "free from external forms, and associations, and duties," is to deprive ourselves of those expressions of love to God which he has sanctioned and invited, and which are most natural to loving souls.—Christian Weekly.

More than Conquerors.

It is a tremendous thing to be a conqueror in all the conflicts of the holy war, but it is vastly greater to be "more than conqueror in all things."

There are a great many of God's own people who are terribly chagrined again and again by at least temporary defeat. If God has provided for a life of victory, a life of perfect triumph, we ought to know it; and if the atonement made on the cross provided a salvation that is as big as all our need, we ought to possess it; and if there is such a thing as being a "conqueror," yea, "more than a conqueror," we cannot afford to come short of it.

After a careful study of the Word of God, we are thoroughly convinced that to be "more than conqueror" means, first, a decisive victory at home, in our own heart, and our own life, and the narrow limits of our own domestic or social circle. There are a great many people who continue to leave the question as to their final victory so as to invite the enemy to make another attack. There is such uncertainty in many minds as to their ultimate success, that the enemy has great encouragement to recollect his forces and come again.

To be more than conqueror means to get a victory that settles something permanently; a Gettysburg, a Waterloo, a Sebastopol, a certain, indubitable victory that fixes something so that it will stay fixed. When we get this victory, we say "No" to Satan so loud that it rings through every corridor of hell, and lets all the devils know that they are defeated and that we are triumphant. When this occurs, Satan is not everlastingly renewing his attack at the same point. Do you know that a real

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 1, 1906. NUMBER 29.

Psa. xxxvii. 2.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation

Christian's trials and testings ought to be new ones, and that he ought not to be fighting the same battles again and again? Today we ought to get a victory that will settle things, so that when Satan comes again he will have to attack us from another quarter, and with some new scheme.

There is something radically wrong when a Christian's temptations are the same again and again. It is possible for us to have a victory, and have it so the devil will know it, and have it so the angels will know it, and have it so the folks in the country will know it, and we will know it, and it will no longer be an open question, no longer an inducement to Satan to come again with rallied forces. Great God, give us something that is fixed! He wants to do it.

A decisive victory would settle it in our thoughts as to whether we are going to get through or not. A great question with thousands of people today is as to the final outcome of this whole thing. I admit it is important. It is one thing for a vessel to throw off her lines, spread her spotless canvas to the winds with all her flags flying, and sail proudly out of the harbor; but it is another thing for her to meet the raging tempests, and set her prow across the rolling billows and successfully ride the high sea and come safely into port.

It is one thing for a man to be converted, to be gloriously converted, to throw off the lines and restraint of sin, to spread his canvas to the wind, and, with hopes and flags flying high, sail out in the time of a series of meetings; and it is another thing for him to meet the storms of next week and the raging billows of next month, and the blackness and darkness of the awful nights that may come in January and February, or in the stormy month of March. It is another thing to meet these trials and testings and come finally in, not like an old battered ship with her sails all torn away, drawn by a tug, but, with flags and pennants flying, come sweeping into the kingdom of Jesus Christ with "an abundant entrance."

If God has provided a gospel that will settle us well, he has provided grace that will keep us settled. If he has provided a salvation that will give us a victory today, he has grace enough to run us up across next week and over the trials and difficulties of next month, and on and up forever; and he has grace enough to carry us over the Alleghenies, over the Rockies, over the Alps, into the heavenly kingdom. God help us to believe it, and expect it, instead of fixing a place to fall.—S. C. Rees.

Plain Things.

In divine truth the main things are plain things. He who keeps the King's highway is not likely to get lost. It is the man who travels in by-ways and crooked paths, who finds himself in labyrinths, and engulfed in pits and ditches. The same thing is true in respect to divine revelation. There are countless difficulties which no man can solve, and numerous questions which no one can answer. He who devotes himself to the consideration of such matters will become bewildered, entangled, and ensnared. He who keeps to the leading issues, who follows the main things, will find his path plain, and his work effective and enduring. Preachers should remember this, and while others are chasing phantoms and false lights through swamps and fogs and bogs, let them stand on solid ground, give the trumpet a certain sound, and preach something which they know and will never have to take back, instead of something which they imagine, and may be ashamed of before the year comes around.

Men make great mistakes when in their zeal for novelties they deal out vague notions and crude theories, which pass like dreams and are forgotten. The plain solid truth of God's Word is more enduring than granite foundations. He who builds with this material builds for eternity. His house may be a small one, but is builded on a rock!—Armory.

IT is impossible for us to attend the Bible School at Torch Lake, but we trust to hear of much good being done there, and a start made in this line of work that will grow and increase with coming years.

THE programme for the Ohio State Conference is in this issue, and it is sure to be a profitable meeting. Brothers Wagoner, Zilmer, Wilson, Neill and Robison, Sisters Neill and Robison, aided by the others who have part in the programme, cannot fail to make profitable each service. All who attend will enjoy a good feast. Arrange to be at this meeting, all who can.

THE Summer Bible School that meets in advance of the Illinois Conference is no new thing. Those who have attended for the past years have realized lasting benefit, and we have reason to believe that this year will duplicate, if not surpass former seasons. Urge all to attend who can, and give good and get good. The work is profitable and entertaining, the cause a good one. Make the attendance large this year.

THE iron hand of the Czar, with his order to crush the revolutionists at any cost, has had a dampening effect. The cooler heads realize that the poor and dissatisfied classes are ill prepared to stand the expenses of a prolonged conflict. Indeed in many places in the empire starvation stares them in the face. In some localities there is still rioting, but on the whole it appears now as if the government is in control.

At the Breaking of Bread.

1 PETER IV. 13, 14.

Rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye, for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you. We read in Acts v. where the apostles were taken before the counsel and beaten and commanded not to speak in the name of Jesus and they departed from the counsel, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name. The apostle Paul says, I take pleasure in reproaches, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake. How could the apostles and followers of Christ rejoice in the sufferings, even to the giving up of their lives? They understood the glory and majesty of the name of Christ. Peter speaking before the high priests and rulers said, Be it known unto you all that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, and neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved and in his name shall the Gentiles trust. Can we suffer reproach and rejoice? Suffer and not be ashamed? Holdfast the name. Rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy; let us earnestly strive to be among those who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, and be found ready at the appearing of Jesus Christ. May he soon come to fill the earth with joy and gladness is my prayer.

2 PETER I. 10, 11.

Wherefore the rather brethren give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for if ye do these things ye shall never fall, for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Peter saluting the Christians he admonishes them of the promises of the gospel. He exhorts them to add to their faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, to temperance patience, to patience godliness, to godliness brotherly kindness, to brotherly kindness charity. He that lacketh these things is blind, but if ye do these things ye shall never fall. First we must have faith, for without faith it is impossible to please God, and add to our faith courage. We should have courage to stand up for Jesus and if need be to stand alone. To receive instruction is better than silver, and knowledge rather than gold. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. We should be temperate and patient and stablish our hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved. Let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear, being kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love and above all things put on charity which is the bond of perfectness. If we do these things we shall never fall, but have an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

There is Joy.

There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth. There is joy in the Church of God in Salem, O. There is joy in the hearts of our Brother and Sister Buckman who on Saturday evening yielded themselves unto God. For nearly a year they have been interestedly reading, Moses and the Prophets, attending the meetings of the church Sundays, and also mid-week Bible class, gradually but surely losing interest in "the traditions of men" and gaining faith in "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." Having become as little children, they decided to "take up their cross and follow Jesus." Saturday evening July 28, 1906, a few of the faithful met with them, and after Scripture testimony relative to the occasion had been considered, and some important questions answered to the satisfaction of all present, Nathan Buckman and Alice his wife were immersed into the name of the Lord Jesus, and are now rejoicing to know that they are among those whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered. Sunday at the breaking of bread the church gladly welcomed them with many expressions of kindly affection and encouragement and sincere prayers that they would "hold that fast which they have, that no man take their crown."

Obtuary.

Miss Catherine Coppersal was born November 16th, 1822 in New York State, was married to Sylvester Lovelace, March 1st 1848, moved to Gaines township, Michigan, June 3rd, 1853, died July 22nd, 1906.

Three daughters and two sons were born of this union. She leaves an aged husband of 82 years. One son, five grand-children and three great-grand-children, all having the tenderest love and esteem for her. Elder Woodward was telegraphed for from Warren County, Indiana, to preach the funeral sermon.

Elder Woodward's farm has joined theirs for 58 years, and never in all that time has he seen or heard of "Aunt Kattie" (as she was familiarly called) anything but kind, peaceable, accommodating, no gossiper, no mischief maker. Ever doing unto others as she would have them do to her—in every way an exemplary Christian. We deeply sympathize with the aged husband waiting in loneliness until he too shall lay his burden down and fall asleep.

At the same hour Mrs. M. A. Woodward conducted the funeral services of Mrs. Dayton Peck at Sand Lake, Mich., pointing the friends to the Bible view of man in death and hope through belief in Christ and the Resurrection. Her son Fred furnished the following words.

Mid the merry song and shout of the harvesters, death with its grim scythe reaped one from our midst that could ill by be spared.

She was born in New York State May 28, 1848, and was the youngest of five children, of whom three survive her. The family moving to Canada when she was very young and after reaching maturity moved to Michigan and resided in Grand Rapids for a number of years.

Her last words were, "God has been very kind to let me live until you boys were grown." She died July 21, 1906.

Tho' Death has claimed its toll: The only worldly certain thing has happened; her kindly influence and unselfishness will live and be felt generations hence.

Joys and sorrow; sunshine and darkness; life and death, mingling and merging, is the great scheme of the Universe and when God draws the veil o'er one, the only Success that is worthy of its name is like hers—that she was good.

We sympathize deeply with Sister Ada Stevens and husband in the loss of their first born and only child, little Laverne.

Only eight hours was the baby life kept and in spite of the tenderest love awaiting it, death claimed it. He was born Friday July 20th, and died July 21st 1906, and Sunday we laid him in his little grave under the maple tree.

The Need of the Hour.

Surely there is great need of illuminated lives; of hearts enriched by Divine power, alive to the duty and responsibility which Jesus laid upon his disciples when he sent them out under orders to be "lights in the world," "salt of the earth," to feed "storm-tossed, perishing humanity" with that which the world cannot give. He expects his followers will reflect his character upon the lives of others; that his witnessing church will be a great attracting power toward himself, who is "the way, the truth, and the life," and so far-reaching is the influence of truly consecrated lives that he has likened them to a city set upon a hill, which can not be hid."

Is it not a serious matter that we are his witnesses? that we are constantly talking to the world by our daily lives—testifying to his power, or denying it; telling others that Jesus is "altogether lovely," kinder and true, or representing him as being unkind, selfish, unforgiving, unholy? Our conversation, our treatment of others, our policy in business, our ambitions, are all forceful arguments for or against him from whom we profess to take our rule of faith and practice. "He that is not for me is against me!"

How vastly important that all those who profess his name should be true witnesses. We can not trace the evil influence of an inconsistent, half-hearted professor upon the lives of others. It is a sad thought that our course may be an open door through which some one may walk to eternal ruin. If we kept this thought seriously in mind how much more careful would we be of our manner of living; careful to wear the garment which he has given, since "a world he died to save looks unto us to show what he hath wrought."

It has been said that the great evidence of the Divine origin of the gospel is in the spiritual miracles which Christ works in our lives; and since we can give to others only what we have received ourselves how essential that we come close enough to Jesus to receive his personal touch; to be branded with his own mark; to have the "love light" imparted to us, and brightly burning in our hearts, that we might be a resistless power for God in this "day of preparation"—this time when Jesus and his word are on trial.

Some one has said, "A doctrine lived is more beautiful than a doctrine preached;" and there is a measure of comfort in the thought for a great company who are not called to preach, and could not frame a real sermon and present it in a manner to suit the tastes of this critical age, to know that every day, by every word and deed, they can preach Jesus as really, and more constantly, than he who stands in the pulpit. We are "called" to adorn the doctrine which we profess by a well ordered life, and, after all the preaching which reaches men's hearts, and moves them, is the outcome of a close walk with God, of listening to his voice.

The multitudes who listened upon the mountain side and in the valley to the wonderful words, as they fell from the lips of the Master, were slow to understand the meaning of his words, but his personality, his character, seemed to possess an eloquence of its own, which appealed to men's hearts, and attracted them to him. The Father's love and purpose were revealed in the life of his Son. He said, "If ye have seen me ye have seen the Father also;" and he has put a distinctive mark upon his children, and says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples—if ye have love one for another."

There certainly is an uplifting, purifying influence about an individual who has "been with Jesus and learned of him;" and as the unsaved come in touch with such lives they feel, and oftener perhaps than we think, a desire to re-shape their own lives, a longing to drink at the same fountain; and, doubtless, it will be found in the great harvest day that seed sown by personal influence, perhaps by dear souls who felt that their work was useless, has borne "fruit unto life eternal."

"That they, seeing your good works." While we are not saved by our works, if we are saved it will be manifest by our good works. The saved heart catches the spirit of him who said, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." And again he said, "As thou hast sent me, so I send them." We are under a definite commission; oh, that we might each one realize the great things which God purposes concerning his children, and act in harmony with his will. How blessed if he can say of us, Your work is just what I desired it should be; your life and character just according to my plan. There will be a company to whom he will say, "Well done." How blessed to be among them when they shall "enter into the joy of the Lord!"

There is great joy in the thought, that while we are anxious to be his "living epistles," seeking the very best we know how to follow him, that in the present time, hampered as we are by environment and personal besetments, he "is touched with the feeling" of our situation, and is not only able but anxious to give just the help we need. The best and bravest have moments of doubt and weakness—times when something seems to stay the song of the heart, and they feel that they are being hardly dealt with; but if they are the best and bravest, they are sure to rise from their depression. What seems to us a sad repulse may be God's plan for victory. We are told that "the trial of your faith is more precious than gold that perisheth," and it is possible while in the furnace to prove that God is able to keep us sweet and patient and trustful. How blessed to keep in mind in the dark hour the precious testimony of that dear faithful heart, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep;" and sweeter yet to be able to give it as a personal testimony—"I know;" I have proved him, and can trust him "all the way."

Let us not charge him because of our infirmity or offense, whatever our condition. However we may feel, he is the same, ever present ever faithful. Let us not think him loveless and distant, when we are careless and cold. If we miss his love, his blessing, in our lives, it is because we fail to recognize his nearness, his power; not that he ever forgets us, for "the dear Lord Jesus never forgets us, no never forgets his own."

How essential in this time of testing, when iniquity abounds, and the love of many has grown cold, that we give earnest heed to the message of Jesus to the waiting church—"Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garment, lest he walk naked and they see his shame." The criticism of the world upon the life of the early disciples was a beautiful tribute to the sincerity of their faith, the genuineness of discipleship: "They have been with Jesus, and learned of him;" also, "Behold how they love one another." And to-day we are Christians only because we follow Jesus—have his mark upon us. David prayed, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free spirit. Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee."

Youth's Column.

The Broken Wing.

When the wing of the bird is broken,
The song of the bird is dead;
In its heart is no note unspoken,
Its joy is forever fled.

For the sympathy of the shadow
The bird the light will shun!
And dark to its eye is the meadow
When ruhes and sets the sun.

The light of the flowers upspringing
To its heart no thrill can bring,
My life is a bird and its singing,
And my faith in God is its wing.

Lord, give to my faith thy token:
Thy light on its raised wings shed,
When the wing of the bird is broken,
The bird, ahud is dead.

—Hezekiah Butterworth.

Youth Leading Old Age.

The locomotive came puffing into the depot, and everybody was in a hurry to step on the train. It was not strange, therefore, that but one person seemed to notice an old man groping his way nervously through the crowd. He was bent nearly double with age and infirmity, and his sight was evidently impaired.

A lad of seventeen years, however did notice him. Recognizing his helplessness, he took him tenderly by the arm, and gently led him into the car. The respectful action attracted attention. Young and old paused for a moment to gaze upon youth guiding old age. I knew not the lad, but I said heartily, "God bless him!"

Read in the line of your genius.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

The young man or maiden who can find out in early life, what the line of his or her genius is, has every reason to be grateful to the teacher, or the event, or the book that has discovered it.—Edward Everett Hale.

"Let nothing tempt you to cross the sacred line of perfect integrity; neither the smallness of the transgression, intention to repay shortly, the example or bidding of others, the temptations of pleasure, or even the pressure of the keenest necessity. One lie in word or act opens the door to a thousand. Truth is the magician's circle, to cross which is to break the spell and turn all to darkness."

What Religion Did for a Little Girl.

Religion helps children to study better and do more faithful work. A little girl of twelve was telling, in a simple way, the evidence that she was a Christian. "I did not like to study, but to play. I was idle at school, and often missed my lessons. Now, I try to learn every lesson well to please God. I was mischievous at school when the teachers were not looking at me, making fun for the children to laugh at. Now I wish to please God by behaving well and keeping the school laws. I was selfish at home: didn't like to run errands, and was sulky when mother called me from play to help her in work. Now it is a real joy to me to help mother in any way, and show that I love her."

Such a religion is essential to the best interests and moral growth of youth, and will make life cheerful.

Little Pierre's "I Ams."

Little Pierre commenced going to school before he was six years old. He learned so rapidly that it was only a few weeks before his teacher said to him one morning:

"Come here, my little man, and look on my Bible. I think you can read this verse. It looks as if it was meant for you."

The little fellow did his best, and hesitatingly read:

"I am that bread of life."

Miss Sheldon told him these were the words of Jesus; that just as we need bread to keep us from being hungry and starving to death, so we need Christ's love and favor to keep us from suffering and dying forever.

The school was reading in the gospel of John, and each morning after that, when they came to a similar declaration of our Savior, Miss Sheldon would say, "There is another verse for Pierre;" until the child had not only read but learned seven verses or parts of verses, which the other scholars called "Pierre's I Ams."

There was another little verse, in the tenth chapter, which he liked very much, the teacher said, "because that was so grand they kept it for the capstone and always recited it last."

Are there not many little boys and girls who would be glad to know these "I Ams" that fell from the lips of Jesus when he was upon earth? Who will learn them and repeat them every day?

"I am that bread of life."
"I am the light of the world."
"I am the door of the sheep."
"I am the good shepherd."
"I am the resurrection and the life."
"I am the way, the truth and the life."
"I am the true vine."
"I and my Father are one."

How a Poor Boy Succeeded.

Boys sometimes think they cannot afford to be manly and faithful to the little things. The Republic tells the story of a boy of the right stamp, and what came of his faithfulness:

A few years ago a large dry goods firm in New York city advertised for a boy. Next day the store was thronged with applicants, among them a queer looking little fellow, accompanied by a woman, who proved to be his aunt, in lieu of faithless parents, by whom he had been abandoned. Looking at the little waif, he said, "Can't take him; places all full, besides, he is too small."

"I know he is small," said the woman, "but he is willing and faithful."

There was a twinkling in the boy's eyes that made the merchant think again. A partner in the firm volunteered to remark that he "did not see what they wanted with such a boy—he wasn't bigger than a pint of cider." But after consultation the boy was set to work.

A few days later a call was made on the boys in the store for some one to stay all night. The prompt response of the little fellow contrasted well with the reluctance of others. In the middle of the night the merchant looked in to see if it was all right in the store, and found this youthful protege busy scrubbing labels.

"What are you doing?" he asked. "I did not tell you to work nights."

"I know you did not tell me so, but I thought I might as well be doing something." In the morning the cashier got orders to "double that boy's wages, for he is willing and faithful."

Only a few weeks elapsed before a show of wild beasts passed through the streets, and, very naturally, all hands in the store rushed to witness the spectacle. A thief saw his opportunity, and entered at the rear door to seize something, but in a twinkling found himself clutched by the diminutive clerk aforesaid, and after a struggle, was captured. Not only was robbery prevented, but valuable articles taken from other stores were recovered. When asked by the merchant why he stayed behind to watch, when all others quit their work, he replied:

"You told me never to leave the store when others were absent, and I thought I'd stay."

Orders were immediately given once more: "Double that boy's wages, he is willing and faithful."

Today that boy is getting a salary of $2,500, and next month will become a member of the firm.—Messiah's Herald.

Beloved brethren of the Church of God in Ohio:

For some weeks past you have had notice through THE RESTITUTION, of the Ohio State Conference to be held at Brush Creek next month. The previous gatherings have been of untold benefit to all who attended. The Brush Creek Church is making special efforts to have the coming Conference "the best" and to this end they extend a kindly and pressing invitation to all to come. The object of this notice is, that you, brethren, may individually, take the matter to heart, and realize that it is important for you to be present that you may for yourself, know what has been done, and what there is to do. You are aware that the work of preparing for a Conference and the labor of carrying it through, and the general responsibility rests upon a few. Your presence will give them the encouragement they need, and are fully entitled to. Let us meet to the glory of God, and the blessing will follow.

Two Gifts.

A gospel a creed
Two human birthrights granted to each soul
Two powers with which we start on life's eastern race,
With which we droop, or fail, or pass the goal,
And win or lose the [illegible] promised crown.

Creatures to think
The name to glorious noble, gentle deeds,
Or rest in heedless ease oblivion's brink.
Two promise with it many sweet needs,
A world of Dead Sea fruit or heavenly flowers.

Creatures to choose
Life's ground and adherence visible on earth,
With [illegible] wonderful and strange
Is upheld as gift in that glad new birth,
Whereby things are revealed by heaven's sight.

[illegible]
[illegible] of surface beauty gone [illegible] here,
[illegible] by slow destruction, not a tree
Or weed save human envy, hate and fear,
Remains to mock the memories of sight.

A Brief Review

"[illegible] MOSES AND DARWIN, OR CHRISTIAN EVOLUTION." (COPYRIGHTED 1905, BY WM. F. RAMSAY.)

In a monograph written and copyrighted by Mr. Wm. F. Ramsey of Blue Hill, Kansas, given to me by him for examination and criticism, I have carefully read the work and will endeavor to show some of the points of difference between the assumed positions and the Word of Truth.

His work is captioned "Moses and Darwin, or Christian Evolution," and in the first proposition he says, "Most people are under the impression that the Darwinian theory of the origin of man is atheistical and opposed to the Biblical theory; but it is a curious fact that the earliest theory of the origin of man, and the latest, are practically the same. Darwin says that man was developed from an animal; Moses says that man had no knowledge of good and evil."

Comment—Darwin says that man was developed from an animal. The Biblical record is, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." Gen. ii. 7. "So God created man in his own image; in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Gen. i. 27, "And breathed into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Gen. ii. 7. These statements being symmetrically opposed to each other, both cannot be true. Which is true and which is false?

Again, God had said, after the evening and morning of the 5th day, (notably, at the inception of the Tertiary Age of the world's history,) "Let the earth bring forth," etc. Gen. i. 24. "And God made the beast of the earth after his kind," etc., "and God saw that it was good."

Please observe that it was in this earth-birth period, in contradiction to the water-birth age that had just preceded the Tertiary age, and late in the Tertiary, earth-birth ation that man was created, an earthy product of the earth, and not evolved from any other animal. With this view harmonizes Solomon in Eccl. iii. 18-21; Gen. iii. 19; Psa. xxx. 9; 1 Cor. xv. 39; and xiv. 47; Phil. iii. 20, 21, etc.

If Darwin's evolutionary theory were true, the Biblical story should read—And the Lord God formed man by changing another animal into the upright human form; and it was unnecessary to breathe the breath of life into his nostrils, as he was already a living soul., (nephesh chaya). Kindly notice and put together Isa. viii. 20, and 1 Tim. vi. 20.

Mr. Ramsay again, "The Bible is not one book." The Old Testament alone is a library of 39 volumes of oriental literature, full of eastern idioms and metaphors. Some of these books are partly the results of compilations of previously existing material, either traditional or written," etc. "Modern scholars now have seven copies of the Babylonian story of the flood. One is 3000 years older than any Hebrew manuscript known. The story of the ark, the flood, the three birds sent forth,.....all appear in that old, old history, written ages before Moses was born."

Comment—A noteworthy thought in this connection is, that the books of both the Old and New Testaments are essentially Hebraic, and that only those nations and policies connected with, or affected by the Hebrews, are noticed in any way in these writings. Hence China, with its immensely ancient history, and America with its oldest land-areas, receive little or no reference in these books. The promise was made to Abraham and to his seed which promise includes the obedient overcomers of this, the Gentile times, who will be rewarded with the same reward, and receive it at the same time Abraham will receive the fulfilment of the promise made to him. See Gal. iii. 6-9; and xxvi. 29; also, Heb. xi. 38-40; and Acts vii. 2-5. Please examine, also, critically 1 Cor. x. 11; Rom. xv. 4; and 2 Peter i. 20, 21.

Mr. Ramsay in another place asks, "Does any sane man believe that the 'tree of knowledge of good and evil' was a real arboreal tree, with its trunk and limbs covered with bark, moss-grown, through which the sap coursed, nourishing its leaves? The 'tree of life' is another metaphor, plain and self-evident to the people to whom it was written: is in common use in those countries today."

Comment—Since it is manifest that God created man it must have been for some purpose, and that purpose, at least in part, is set forth in Gen. i. 26, as follows; "and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth," and in Gen. ii. 15, "to dress it and keep it, (the garden)."

But when man was created he had formed no character, either good or bad. That he was possessed of the innate ability to obey or disobey any law, or test given for a trial of his loyalty, is shown in the 2nd chapter and 16th verse of Gen., "And the Lord God commanded the man saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat." But a ban with a penalty attached, is placed upon the eating of one tree, and for the life of me I cannot see why a person's obedience or disobedience of law, with a penalty attached, may not be developed and tested in the manner here recorded, as well as by any other means.

When the Creator saw fit to test the fealty of Adam and Eve, three lines were given along which that test was applied and made, to-wit; "the lust of the flesh," (it was good for food.) "the lust of the eyes" (it was pleasant to the eyes), "and the pride of life," (a tree to be desired to make men wise), and this test of fealty or non-fealty could as well and as surely have been made by the literal fruit of a literal tree as by any other means.

A law was necessary for the formation of character; the woman was deceived and ignorantly partook of the fruit of the tree; the man was not deceived, sinned presumptuously, and therefore was subject to the penalty of death. 1 Tim. iv. 3-10.

Christ in the temptation, was subjected to these three temptations: bread, fame and world-control. See Matt. iv. 3-10. The same temptations are placed before every person who strives to become an heir with Abraham. See 1 John ii. 16. The sacred historian declares it was a tree, and I see no good reason, or sound logic in the denial.

A test of obedience was given, the woman deceived by the assurance of one who claimed to her that God did not mean what he said, ate and gave to Adam and he did eat. All down the ages since that time, there have been plenty of Darwins, Huxleys, and others to teach that God was mistaken and the serpent the one who understood the situation and told the truth.

Mr. Ramsay continues: "These trees are metaphorical expressions only; were never planted in the soil, never had an existence. The tree of life means immortality. Rev. xxii. 2-14. The tree of good and evil is the idea of morality; the knowledge of moral laws. These trees are more alive today than they ever were. These trees are to be understood in the same sense as we understand the expression 'gate of death' and similar expressions. We all have a tree of knowledge growing within us.

Comment—In this connection let me recall the writer's attention to Isa. viii. 20. Compare these statements with Rev. xxii. 2-14, and Ezek. xlvii. 1-12, the latter of which closes as follows: "And by the river, upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed; it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters, they issued out of the sanctuary; and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof shall be for medicine."

John describes a similar tree in the midst of the restored metropolitan city of Judea and the world, which he styles "the tree of life;" he locates it, as did Ezekiel; says it bears twelve manner of fruits." (Query, If this is immortality as defined by Mr. Ramsay, are there twelve kinds of immortality to be enjoyed or endured as the case may be, or does it require twelve kinds of decoctions of these leaves to make one immortal?); and I further read that these trees (which it is asserted were never trees and were never planted in the soil,) "yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves were for the healing of the nations." Shall we in this instance adhere to the plain statements of the Bible, or to the assertions and deductions of those promoting the "oppositions of science falsely so-called?"

In the restitution, when the kingdom of God is once more a historical fact, all through the millennial age to succeed this Post-Tertiatary or historic age, the nations will continue to exist in a governmental form, and the means of perpetuating existence, (from which man was driven for his benefit, when expelled from Eden,) will be restored as one of the means of filling out God's contract covenant with Abraham and the nations; all the denials and fine spun theories of Darwin and his following, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Ramsay tells us, "The theologians prattle about the innocence of Adam; ignorance would be a more accurate term. Innocence implies some knowledge of good, and that is just what Adam did not have, according to the Bible." "Instead of a fall, God himself declares it to be a rise, a growth. 'For behold the man has become as one of us.' Could a stronger comparison possibly be used? Man had become god-like. The mere brute died, and man put on immortality."

Comment—"For the man has become as one of us," is modified by "to know good and evil." In what follows, the statement of the writer confirms and substantiates the language of the deceiver. God had said, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die; the deceiver said to the woman, "Ye shall not surely die; for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." What God promised for disobedience of his law was death. The promise of the deceiver for a disobedience of that law was life, and Mr. Ramsay says man became god-like, (immortal). One of the supposed attributes of the gods is immortality.

Paul says, (2 Tim. i. 10), Jesus Christ "hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Mr. Ramsay says, "man began to put on immortality in the garden, in the act, not of a fall, but of a rise, at the transgression of Adam and Eve." Immortality is not an attribute of any of the race of Adam and Eve. It is to be sought for; Rom. ii. 7; it is to be put on as a result of obedience to the gospel; 1 Cor. xv. 51-54; and will never be given as the result of sophistry, or a denial of the plain teachings and facts of the gospel. If the Lord be God follow him; but if Baal, follow him.

Again Mr. Ramsay remarks, "The image of God was to be a developing image; was to be moral, not physical. Can we conceive of an animal destitute of any knowledge of good, without a single virtue, being an image of God?

Comment—A comparison of the words of Gen. i. 27, with those of Gen. v. 3 is a fair exegesis of the "image of God." If Seth was in the personal form of his father Adam, a fair use of words would apply the same to Adam and his Creator, unless we shall allow the bias of prejudice to intervene. Again in Heb. i. 1-3, Paul in speaking of the Son, says "who being the brightness of his glory and the express image of his," (the Father's,) "person," etc.

Mr. Ramsay again, "But did not God say that man should have dominion over all the earth and all therein? Exactly: the dominion promised was to the race, 'them,' not Adam. The record states that Adam named the birds and beasts, but no control is implied. On the contrary, is it not a fair inference from Gen. ix. 2, that up to that time the animal kingdom had stood in no special awe of their brethren, who had just learned to walk on their hind legs. But about this time the human race became sufficiently developed to take with a strong hand the dominion promised."

Comment—The universal dominion will be given to man in the restitution of all things, when Jerusalem is restored as the metropolitan city of a renewed earth, when he is now Prince of the kings of the earth, shall have taken to himself his great power and have reigned; as it is written, "And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Zion." Mic. iv. 8.

So far man has never been able to control himself properly; but the time approaches when, as the prophet says, and as I truly believe, "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain saith the Lord." Isa. xi. 6, 7, 9.

Mr. Ramsay again says, "This world is God's great school for making men," and then shows by the inventions and advancements in science, the arts, in commerce and in every industrial branch of civilized life, the effect of that grand school on our social world.

Comment—"This world is God's great school for making men." No truer sentiment was ever uttered. Not only is this God's great school for making men; it is also his great school for completing his creative work of the present historic age, and of preparation for the glories of a renewed earth in "The Age to Come." In the God-creative work of this aion, and in the God-labors for the 6th evening; and morning judicial work now impending, man is God's co-laborer. Availing himself of God's conversations, co-relations and affinities, he does what no mere amount of the past geological periods could do. His is a higher, nobler organization and mentality. Builded in a grander, a god-like mold, with, as Hugh Miller aptly says, the mold broken and destroyed, —he can avail himself of God's laws for the subjugation, I of himself, and after, the natural world to domesticity and usefulness, to carry out the great designs of the Creator.

As Hugh Miller further says, "he adds to the beauty of the flowers which he takes under his charge, to the delicacy and fertility of the fruits. The seeds of the wild grass become corn under his care, the green herbs grow great of root or bulb, or bulky and succulent of top and leaf; the wild produce of nature sports under his hand; the rose and lily broaden their discs and multiply their petals; the harsh green crab swells out into a delicious gold-rinded apple, streaked with crimson; the productions of his kitchen garden, strangely metamorphosed to serve the uses of his table, bear forms unknown to nature; an occult law of nature, of change and development inherent in these organisms meets in him with developing instinct and ability, and they are regenerated under his surveillance. Nor is his influence over many of the animals less marked. The habits which he imparts to the parents become nature in his behalf in their offspring. The dog under his tutelage acquires the virtues of fidelity to a master and affection to a friend. The ox and the horse learn to assist him in the labor of the fields. The udder of the cow and goat distend beneath his care far beyond the size necessary in the wild state and supply him with rich milk and the other various products of the dairy. The fleece of the sheep becomes finer of texture and longer of fiber in his pens and folds; and even the indocile silk-worm spins, in his sheltering conservatories, and among the mulberry trees which he has planted, a larger and brighter and more glittering cocoon."

God's types of life are unit types, and they have never yet been broken or changed, and an attempt to intermingle those types renders the product infertile. The types of life may be, and are improved and enlarged, but the mollusk, the radiate, and the articulate of the Silurian age are as they were in that age.

The contemplation and investigations of the conservations and co-relations of force and matter, as well as the progress of scientific discovery and human advancement, is elevating, enlightening, and civilizing, and should be fostered and encouraged in every possible manner, yet all these combined and extended to their fullest limit, only affect present conditions of living and the elevation of social life and civilization to a higher plane of humanity, and all cease to be of further effect when the brink of the tomb has been reached.

Instead of man having become immortal like the gods, he has only become like the gods to know good and evil, and in his choice he more frequently chooses the latter than the former.

For at least, about six thousand years, he has been striving almost incessantly, to enact laws to overcome lawlessness and restrain evil-doers, and yet the civilization and enlightenment of Abraham's time seems to have been the peer of our own. In my humble opinion, after years of deep investigation and study, an entirely new order of things, moral, social and governmental is about to be introduced, that will revolutionize the existing conditions, and one that will yield peace, plenty and perfection in every line of human endeavor; superior to, and more abiding than we can at this time comprehend; and in its results reaching beyond the confines of this age and its civilizing influences. See Dan. ii. 44.

Galatians vi. 6.

And let us not be weary in well doing or faint not. Let us be strong in the Lord, and put our trust in him and work daily or with every opportunity we have in love with the Sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God. For this is the only salvation we have. Live unto God, for we are a new creature in Christ. A new and living way we should live and walk in this present world. Remember we have cast off the works of darkness and have put on that saving name of Jesus and to have that saving name written in our foreheads we must be a peculiar people, for it is only those that are looking and watching for Jesus to come. He it is which the world knoweth not. But we being a chosen people by God to see the beauty in his only begotten Son and to be made partakers in God's kingdom which is to come on this earth. We ought to rejoice. Rejoice I say and so much the more as we see the day approaching. O let us hold fast unto that saving name and labor in his vineyard, for he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap everlasting life. Let us sow the seed wherever we go or have an opportunity to sow. It may yet fall on good ground and spring up and bear fruit to the honor and glory of God. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith. For in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. In Matt. xxiv. 13 Jesus says, But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. The time is getting nearer and nearer to the close, soon the end shall be, are we ready, may we all who are on the watch pray that we may continue faithfully unto the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

JNO. GRIEF.

The lesson for this evening is taken from the 6th chapter of Galatians 9th verse, "And let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." This 6th chapter is part of Paul's writings to the brethren of the churches at Galatia. He is moving them to deal mildly with a brother who has slipped or strayed from the path of the righteous, also exhorting them to bear one another's burdens and he also tries to move them to continue in doing well. Why? Because he says, "in due season we shall reap if we faint not." When Paul says "we" he has reference to himself and the Galatian brethren but they are not the only brethren who were to take heed to the writings of Paul for the preaching of the gospel or glad tidings of the kingdom of God did not cease at the end of Paul's career, but it has been taught down through all generations and by the grace of God it has reached our hearts therefore we are classed with Paul and all the ancient brethren. In Rom. v. 1-2 we read, "Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God." To be weary means to be tired or fatigued. When Paul says we are not to be weary in doing well he means that we are not to be tired of doing the Lord's work. After all that God has done for us is it possible that any of us can be weary in his service? "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of his understanding. He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall. But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run, and not be weary, and they shall walk and not faint." Isa. xl. 28-31. What a comfort it is not to have to wait upon the Lord in our own strength. God is ever mindful of his children, he knows whether we have his work at heart or not, he knoweth our frames, he remembereth that we are dust, but it is the willing ones whose strength is renewed and who shall mount up with wings as eagles. These are those who trust in the Lord and do nothing, who manage to dwell in the land and get fed still people find them out. But God's genuine people, true to his Word, trust in him and do good. "Trust in the Lord, and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Psa. xxxvii. 2. And in 2 Thes. iii. 11-13 we read, "For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all but are busy bodies. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work and eat their own bread. "But ye brethren, be not weary in well doing. God's people should not be slothful in business and should be fervent in spirit serving the Lord. Whatsoever they do should be done to the glory of God. We cannot help one of God's children or any one else in distress except he notices it, if it is nothing but a cup of cold water in the name of our Master. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Gal. vi. 10.

Son, one may say, "I am going to trust in the Lord." Yes; but what is he going to do about it. The man who does nothing does not trust in the Lord. His trust is like a storekeeper who advertises to sell goods on credit and locks the door and goes out the back way, and peeks through the board fence and sees a poor fellow come up and try the door. If he is going to trust, why does he not stand behind the counter and measure out the goods. Just so if we are going to trust in God and do good. Let us step out on his promises. Give him credit for all he is worth, and let us push our faith to the front. God's credit is good yet, and may we live so that our credit will be good with him. We have a hope that is worth sacrificing all we have for. It is a living hope, a good hope, a blessed hope, a sure hope, a joyful hope, a purifying hope which should inspire us not to faint but to continue in well doing, and to praise and glorify God for his many blessings. Has he not promised to specially bless such as are upright and put their trust in him? Has he not promised to chasten those who go astray from his ways? God knows the way that his people takes and he knows also the way that others take. "For he that loveth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." "But he that doeth truth cometh to the light." He feels pleasure in the thought, "Thou God seest me." And how beautiful the prayer of David in the 139th Psalm 23 and 24 verses, "Search me, O God and know my heart, try me and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." This shows us how dependent David was upon God, and he appealed to God to search his heart to see if there was any wicked way in him and how pleasing it should be to us to turn from creatures so liable to err, and appeal to him who searcheth the heart and discerns our motives and aims? And it is well when in our sufferings we can approve ourselves unto God. You are not, says Peter, to suffer as evil-doers, but as Christians, and therefore he adds. "Let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." 1 Peter iv. 19. I hope each one of us will take heed to the words of our lesson and continue in the way we have chosen and not become tired of being servants of our Master, for with all the drawbacks and trials we may have let us not forget that our heavenly Father watches over us, and if we do not get weary we shall in time reap a good harvest and what will that be? Life everlasting. "Having their gifts different according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith or ministry, let us wait on our ministering, or he that teacheth on teaching, or he that exhorteth on exhortation; he that giveth, let him do it with simplicity, he that ruleth with diligence he that showeth mercy with cheerfulness." Therefore let us not be idle Christians, but let us take what we have and put it into use, be busy in doing the will of God, and new gifts and graces will come. My earnest prayer is that we may each one of us be faithful unto the coming of our Savior so that we may be rewarded according as we have been promised.

Announcement.

The 19th Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the beautiful Campground at Waterloo, Iowa, August 18th to 26th, inclusive. Rates of one and one-third fare from all points in Iowa have been granted by all railroads; going tickets to be purchased any time from August 17th to 23rd, inclusive, and holders of Certificates for tickets bought during that time will be entitled to return ticket for one-third fare if bought before August 30th. A certificate must be secured with each ticket bought.

Bring straw ticks and a few comforters. Tents will be furnished free. Board at our Dining Hall 25 cents per day.

We expect to have the following preaching brethren with us: A. J. Eychaner, S. J. Lindsay, L. E. Conner, Almus Adams, H. M. Lucas, G. Eldred Marsh, John Garton, and others.

For entire program of meeting with full instructions, etc., address G. P. Allard, Corresponding Secretary, Box 86, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.

EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a tent located in a grove.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio. Full particulars will appear later as to the accommodations and how to reach the meeting place of the conference.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

P. NEILL, Pres.

J. C. THOMPSON, Sec'y.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will convene at St. Paul Oct. 25-29 inclusive. Meetings will be held in the Court House Hall. Invitation to participate is extended to all. A reception committee will be appointed to meet visitors and find accommodations.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

T. J. DANIEL.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference:

I have moved to the state of Oregon, so all letters in the interest of the conference work will be sent to J. P. Bitner, Severance, Kansas.

A. W. DARBY.

WE wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Notice.

I expect to be in Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas this summer, and any wishing pastoral work in reach of my path, please notify me at Attica, Kan.

IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should give their name, postoffice, county and state, plainly and distinctly.

All letters should be addressed to "THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall, Co., Ind."

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

We cannot hold ourselves responsible for the return of manuscripts. Authors should preserve a copy for themselves.

In ordering books or tracts get the latest copy of the paper you have and order only what you see advertised in that.

When desiring a change of address, give both your old and new address.

By complying strictly with the above you will save us much annoyance, and your order will be much more promptly attended

Popular Lectures by M. Joblin.

Brethren and Sisters, Have you loved ones who think sincerity will save them? Have you friends who think they worship acceptably while ignorant of God's promises? Have acquaintances with false hopes of heaven, or who believe themselves immortal by nature, or who think their sins are forgiven, although they are ignorant of the Law of Pardon, or who have no use for a God who consigns sinners to Eternal Torment, and are ignorant of Jehovah's beneficent purpose to fill the earth with his glory and bestow Eternal Life upon believers of the Gospel, so they can enjoy it for ever? If so, send for Popular Lectures by Bro. Joblin, entitled:—"The Kingdom of God;" "Old Mother Earth to Be Born Again;" "Strangers from the Covenants of Promise;" "Vain Worship;" "No Immortality Out of Christ;" "Hope Begotten by the Resurrection of Christ;" "God's Love and Solicitude for Mankind;" and "What Shall We Do to be Saved?"

The Restitution.

"The Restitution of all things Which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets."

VOLUME LV. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUGUST 8, 1906. NUMBER 30.

—FOR THE—
CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:

J. H. WILLEY,
A. R. UNDERWOOD.

One Year $1.50. Six Months 75 Cents. Three Months 40 Cents.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Poetry.

Beyond the Hills.

Beyond the hills, where suns go down,
And brightly beckon as they go,
I see the land of fair renown—
The land which I so soon shall know.

Above the discourses of time,
And discord of its angry words,
I hear the everlasting chime—
The music of unjarring hords.

I bid it welcome, and my haste
To join it cannot brook delay;
O song of morning, come at last,
And ye who sing it, come away!

O sing of light and dawn on clime,
Sound over earth and fill these skies!
Nor ever, ever, ever cease
Thy soul-entrancing melodies!

[illegible] disburdened earth,
[illegible]ve then shall sing,
[illegible]'s second birth,
[illegible]tion's King!

—Bonar.

[illegible]cated.

[illegible]ristianity.

[illegible]ll doubtless have [illegible]reading 1 Cor. xiii, [illegible]ended an under-lying [illegible]e which gives vitality to the [illegible]e Christian system, like a tree [illegible]ends upon its roots for its life. [illegible]t which gives life and vitality to the whole plan of redemption is that which lies at its base, from which it draws support.

Q. In what portion of Scripture is this basic principle revealed?

George. In 1 Cor. xiii.

Q. What does this chapter reveal?

A. This chapter shows that even should we be [illegible] the ora- [illegible] from this [illegible]ined [illegible] [illegible] affect us [illegible]ukens in [illegible]eart responsive melodies, and breaks forth in transports of adoration and praise, and fills the heart with sweetness and divine harmony, like heavenly music, in union with the Divine Author from whence it flows. It is a consolation which satisfies the inward craving of every pure heart, as nothing else can do.

Q. How does it affect us while in adversity?

A. In adversity it is a stay and a solace like as a vine with its graceful foliage entwines itself about the sturdy oak and climbs up into the sunshine. So love with its caressing tendrils entwines itself about the Son of God, and lifts its possessor up out of adverse surroundings into the cheering sunshine of God's favor; healing the broken heart, and enables one to look beyond the present, and by faith view the evergreen shore.

Q. Is its influence far-reaching?

A. It is. As the aroma of the sweet-scented flower is not confined to the garden whence it grows, but is taken up by the passing breeze and made to regale the senses of others so the heart filled with divine love, is not confined to itself, but emits an influence which is felt by those with whom they come in contact.

Q. Then this must be a priceless gem to possess?

A. It is even so. Oh, it is the priceless gem which ever gleams in the crown of the Bright and Morning Star, even the star of Bethlehem, whose luster never fades, but will increase in brilliancy as the endless cycles of eternity succeede each other. Love never faileth. It begets in its possessor a peaceful happy spirit.

Q. Are those who spend their money and time in proclaiming this peaceful message considered blessed?

A. Yes, indeed. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth!" Isa. lii. 7.

Q. Does this beautiful spirit inspire the gospel of the kingdom?

A. Yes, it does. The grand old "gospel of the kingdom," thrills the heart of believers as no other message can. It is a message of peace, it kindles music in the soul, it causes the heart to shout for joy, and be happy while are not always taking account of evil, they have no pleasure in unrighteousness, but they do rejoice in the truth, and they will also bear adverse things, and not easily become impatient, but will believe, hope and endure unto the end.

Q. Is this principle as eternal as the great Creator?

A. It is. The chapter closes by naming three things which abide. It is certainly refreshing in the midst of this changing transitory state of things to find something that abides, and changes not.

Q. What is the first of these things which abide?

A. We have faith, which in the sweet by and by will be lost in sight, and hope which has faith for its parent, will all be lost in fruition, but love will become intensified, and abide through the endless cycles of eternity.

Q. Well, then, faith and hope will in time have served their purpose. Now, tell us, which of the three will abide?

A. Love. "God is love," and this divine attribute of his being, permeates and is gloriously manifested in every work of his hand, and is the controlling principle of his government and is shown in his dealings with mankind. It is his divine purpose to people the new earth with inhabitants in whose heart this divine principle has found an abiding home.

Q. Should this principle abide in us now?

A. Yes. It is the possessor of a pure heart, even the meek and humble follower of Jesus, that has the promise of seeing God, and having an inheritance in the new earth. Unless this principle finds an home with us now, [illegible] which inspires the tongue, such oratory will amount to nothing more than the sounding brass of a trumpet, or of a clanging cymbal, which for the time being pleases the ear with its melody of sweet sound.

Q. Is it possible for men to become gifted students of prophecy, and be able to solve many difficult Biblical mysteries, and still lack the root [illegible]ciple?

[illegible]ssible.

[illegible]ell then will those [illegible] to such an one, [illegible]ture life is con- [illegible]fro.

[illegible]hedents of pro- [illegible]enetrate mys- [illegible]arvelous de- [illegible]' even have [illegible]uck up the [illegible]l are desti- [illegible]to nothing,

[illegible] we make [illegible]e relief of the [illegible] some other motive foreign to the real root principle of Christianity should prompt the gifts, will the aforesaid said charity bring a future recompense?

A. It will not. To be charitably inclined and give all our goods to feed the poor, if love is not the motive which inspires the gift, it profiteth nothing.

Q. Well, then, suppose we consider a more trying test, and suffer death by fire, on account of preaching the gospel, and a spirit of fleshly bravado, in place of sincere love, be the motive which prompted the sacrifice, will that avail for a future reward?

A. It will not. We may meet death by fire, as a martyr, and love be not the motive principle governing the martyrdom, it will yield no profit to the one so suffering.

Q. Can you give some rule by which we can know those who really have the real root of the matter in them?

A. Yes, we can.

Q. Please give the characteristics.

A. We may know those who possess this love, because they suffer long, are kind, envy is not in their lives, they are not puffed up, they don't behave in an unseemly manner, they are not always seeking their own benefit, are not soon provoked, they in adversity. It lets the sunshine of God's love in, and peace and contentment then reigns within. It makes believers love the brotherhood, and also be anxious to publish glad tidings of good to sinners.

Q. Can this beautiful message of life carry us beyond the storm cloud?

A. There is nothing like it. Should clouds of inky blackness temporarily obscure our vision, the sun of hope emerges from behind the cloud with a dazzling blaze of glory, and dispells the cloud, like the fog before the rising sun.

Q. When we preach the message of the kingdom what shall we say?

A. "Say unto Zion, thy God reigneth," in the person of his Son. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation."

Q. Is not the gospel of the kingdom a message of peace to us now, even while in joy and also in sorrow?

A. Yes. It is a message of peace, even now it calms the troubled sea of life when its raging billows would overwhelm us, and its cares and vexations distract us. There is nothing but joy and peace in it, both now, and also hereafter when the Lord shall bring again Zion. "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring Zion. Break forth into joy, sing together ye waste places of Jerusalem; for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem."

Q. Does this love-inspired hope, lead to a purity of life?

A. Certainly it does. It is not only a joyous and comforting [illegible] also a purifying hope.

Listen: "He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure." Notice, it is he that "hath this hope in him,"—is a part of his being, as it were, and not him, who merely profess it, in which it has the above purifying effect.

It is to such an one a valuable treasure, which in his estimation, exceeds in value all other treasure. Says Jesus: "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Hence, reasoning from cause to effect, it could not do otherwise than to direct and control his acts of life, because his heart is centered in that treasure.

Such an one grows in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. His growth may be compared to a little vine in the woods, which seeks greater light, and by its tendrils reaches out for the sturdy oak, and as its growth proceeds, gradually elevates itself into ever increasing light, until it reaches the top, and then drinks in the pure sunlight of heaven.

"The saving favor of God is manifested to all men, teaching us that renouncing impurity and worldly desires, we should live prudently, righteously and piously in the present age, waiting for the blessed hope, even the appearing of the glory of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus ii. 11-13.

Q. What should be the attitude of all those whose lives are lifted up into a higher plane of life, by the inspiration of the gospel of the kingdom?

A. The attitude of those whose treasure is centered in the blessed hope, is a prudent, righteous, and pious life in this present age. It would indeed be a very serious matter to profess the blessed hope, and then live in such a manner as to bring reproach upon it. God grant that none will do so.

Q. Should not the glorious message of the kingdom be to us greater riches than this present world can offer, or give unto us?

A. Yes. Moses esteemed "the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt." therefore it was his choice to "rather suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season."

Q. Do some think otherwise?

A. Alas! how many think otherwise, the pleasures of sin for a brief season has far more attractions for them, than the eternal riches of God. That is their treasure, therefore their heart is set on it. Those who thus choose will get their choice. They can't have the pleasures of sin and also the riches of God.

Q. What should be the attitude of all true gospel believers?

A. Beloved, let us be in earnest in publishing peace, and herald to the people good tidings of good, and earnestly proclaim the coming reign of Jesus, on Zion's Mount, for God has declared that he will set his King upon the holy hill of Zion, and that the law shall yet go forth from Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem, and the people shall yet flow unto the house of the Lord and learn his ways.

It is now definitely settled that Pine Woods Bible Class book will be printed right away. If you want to be sure of getting a copy you should send in your name.

Hieremias (or "Jeromiah").

CHAPTER 43.

1. In the fourth year of Jooskeim son of Joosias, king of Jouda, a word of the Lord occurred unto me saying;

2. Take for thyself a parchment for a book and write upon it all the words which I have talked unto thee in respect to Hieroussaleem and in respect to Jouda, and in respect to all the nations from the day I have talked to thee, from the days of Joosias, king of Jouda, unto this day.

3. Perchance the house of Jouda will listen to all the calamities that I am re[illegible] do to them, that they may [illegible] from their wicked [illegible] injustices [illegible] and their sins.

4. [illegible] called Baruoch son of [illegible], and he wrote from the mouth of Hieremias all the words of the Lord which he had talked to him on a parchment of a book.

5. And Hieremias commanded Barouch, saying, I am under guard, I shall not be able to enter into the house of the Lord.

6. And do thou read with this parchment into the ears of the laity in the house of the Lord on a day of fasting and in the ears of all Jouda all those who come from out their cities, to them shalt thou read.

7. Perchance their sense of mercy will fall down before the face of the Lord, and they may turn away from their wicked way, because great is the anger and wrath of the Lord, which he hath talked in respect to this laity.

8. And Barouch did according to all the things that Hieremias had commanded him, to read in the book the words of the Lord in the house of the Lord.

9. And it came to pass in the eighth year of king Jooskeim in the ninth month, that all the laity in Hieroussaleem and the house of Jouda assembled for a church—fast before the face of the Lord,

10. And Baruch read in the book the words of Hieremias in the house of the Lord in the house of Gamaraias, son of Saphan, the scribe in the upper court in the front-doors of the new gateway of the house of the Lord in the ears of all the laity.

11. And Michaias, son of Gamarias, son of Saphan, heard all the words of the Lord from out the book;

12. And he went down into the house of the king into the house of the scribe, and lo, there were all the rulers seated, Elimaus the scribe, and Dalaias, son of Selemias, and Joonathan son of Akchoboor and Gamarias, son of Sappha and Sedekias, son of Ananias and all the rulers;

13. And Michaias told them all the words which he had heard Barouch reading in the ears of the laity;

14. And all the rulers sent unto Barouch, son of Nerrios, Joudin son of Nathanias, son of Selemias, son of Chousi, saying the parchment with which thou didst read in the ears of the laity take it in thy hand and come; and Baruoch took the parchment and went down unto them.

15. And they said unto him, Read it again in our ears: and Barouch read it.

16. And it came to pass when they had heard all the words, they took counsel each one with his neighbor and said, Let us send all these words to the king;

17. And they asked Baruoch saying, Where didst thou write all these words? And Baruoch said, From his mouth Hieremias told me all these words and I wrote them in a book.

19. And they said unto Baruoch, Go on foot thou and Hieremias and hide yourselves; let no man know where ye are.

20. And they went in unto the king and gave the parchment to be guarded in the house of Elisama, and they told the king all these words.

21. And the king sent Joudin to take the parchment, and he took it out of the house of Elisama, and Joudin read it in the ears of the king and in the ears of all the rulers standing about the king.

22. And the king seated himself in his winter-house and there was a hearth for fire before his face.

23. And it came to pass when Joudin had read three or four pages (or columns) he cut them off with the knife of the scribe and cast them into the fire that was upon the hearth until all the parchment had gone into the fire that was upon the hearth;

24. And the king and his courtiers who were listening to all these words did not ask why nor rend their outer-garments;

25. And Elnathan and Godolias supported the king in the relation to the burning of the parchment;

26. And the king commanded Hiermeel, son of the king, and Sarais, son of Esriel to seize Baruoch and Hieremias and they had hid themselves.

27. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Hieremias after the king had burned the parchment, all the words which Baruoch had written from the mouth of Hieremias, saying;

28. Again take thou another parchment and write all the words that were upon the parchment that the king Jooskeim burned.

29. And thou shalt say, In this wise hath the Lord said, Thou didst burn that parchment, saying, Why didst thou write upon it saying, Babuloon's king will go his way in and devastate this land, and man and domestic animal upon it will leave off?

30. Therefore, in this wise hath the Lord said unto Jooskeim, king of Jouda, There will not be of his one seated upon David's throne, and his dead body will be cast away in the scorching heat of the day and in the freezing cold of the night.

31. And I shall visit upon him and his generation and upon his courtiers and I shall lead upon him and those who inhabit Hieroussaleem and upon the land of Jouda all the calamities which I have talked in respect to them, and to which they have not hearkened.

32. And Baruoch took another parchment and wrote upon it from the mouth of Hieremias all the words of the book which Jooskeim had burned, and still more words were added to them like these (the foregoing).

COMMENT.

This 43rd chapter is given as the 36th in the C. V. and R. V. or what purports to be the same "words" so emphasized and so many times repeated in this very chapter. The word "forgive" or "remit" does not occur in the 3rd verse though. So the words "they will present their supplication" is not in the text.

No word for "fury" in the 7th verse.

In the 9th verse "fifth year" should be "eighth year" and "were assembled for a church fast" instead of "proclaimed a fast." Gamareias instead of Gemariah in the 10th verse, Saphan instead of "Shaphan." All the names in the 11th and 12th verses twisted out of shape and recognition. Compare and see for yourselves.

"Princes" should be "rulers" all along here.

From the 12th verse to the end of the chapter the variations are still more marked—as for instance the versions make the king cut off the pieces of the parchment with his pen-knife and cast them into the fire instead of the reader "Joudin" doing it "with the knife of the scribe." Then the versions made "Elnathan and Godolias interceded with the king" to prevent the burning of the book" whereas the text reads that they advised or "supported" the king in this act of sacrilege. Get interested and look up these differences for yourselves.

CHAS. GARDNER.

A Trip Through the South.

Wife and I left Salem, Ohio, June 26th with the view of doing some evangelizing and visiting relatives who reside in Alabama. Our route was via Columbus and Cincinatti, O., Chattanooga, Tenn. and Birmingham and Opelika, Ala. We arrived at Wedowee, Ala., June 29th and found that appointments had been made for us to preach in several places.

On Sunday following our arrival we addressed a very appreciative audience on the subject of the great salvation. We showed that it is the salvation spoken of at the first by the Lord and afterward confirmed by them who heard him. This was spoken of by the Lord, was the gospel of the kingdom of God. We were invited to return and speak, which we did to appreciative audiences. We both spoke in Wedowee and were listened to with much interest.

On the 3rd Sunday in June we held meetings at a point 12 miles north of Wedowee where the people had assembled for an all-day singing. Mrs. Robison spoke in the morning and I in the afternoon. All gave marked attention to the words spoken. This was one of the largest audiences that we addressed. During this week we preached to large audiences at another point. Each gave two addresses. At this place we had a very good hearing. We had the pleasure of addressing an audience in which there was a number of preachers. All seemed to enjoy the preaching on account of our numerous Scriptural quotations and requests that all search to see whether the things spoken were true or not. The subjects discussed were the Great Salvation, The Gospel, The Kingdom of God, Man is Mortal, The Resurrection, The Redeemer, and other kindred subjects. At our last meeting several persons came twelve miles to hear the Word preached.

Permit us to say that preaching is badly needed in the section where we have been visiting. Several evangelists should be given work in this field. We feel sure that much good could be accomplished for the truth in many parts of the south. We did not find the prejudice existing here that we find in many places in the north. What is needed everywhere is more evangelizing. We found the people eager to listen to the truth. We gave them a good opportunity to contrast truth with error. It was noticeable that they were surprised at our frequent requests to study the Bible. One very intelligent lady requested that we give a number of lectures on "how to study the Bible." This is what is needed everywhere. The emotional is too often appealed to and not the reason. We suggested that the Bible be studied by subjects. If we should return to this field again we will prepare a number of lessons on this plan. If we as a people could establish a "Correspondent School," I am sure that we could do much good.

Yours in the hope of eternal life.

The beautiful worship of God as our Father is distinguished by the very thing, that its chief exercise of love is in putting trust in the very perfection of God, which, to an unloving mind, would produce fear. It is a great act of love to trust, like a son, God's tremendous power. There can be no confidence without the filial feeling. We always get back to the point, God is our Father.—F. W. Faber.

Notice that the way to get to the Ohio State Conference is explained in the announcement in this paper. Read it, for the time of train is given, and all trains are to stop during the Conference.

A paper published in St. Petersburg devotes a large space in predicting a war to come between Japan and the United States. The writer shows that Japan will be victor, taking all our Pacific islands, and establishing herself on our California coast.

Russia has had some hard fighting in the past week. Sailors and soldiers have rebelled, taken possession of ships and forts, held them for a time, been finally killed or subdued, and again the air clears and the government seems to be ahead. The situation is not very settled, and more trouble is likely to come.

It is with pleasure that we can introduce to the Household of Faith our new Sister, Mrs. Floyd Stilson. At the service held by Brother J. L. Wince, at North Salem, five miles north of this city on last Sunday morning, she became a candidate for baptism into Christ, and in the evening they came to Plymouth where she was immersed by Brother Wince. She is a daughter of Sister Hugh Shaffer. Her husband, Brother Floyd Stilson, is a member of the North Salem Church, and our prayer is that this young couple will be firm defenders of the faith, and be crowned heirs of glory when Jesus comes.

The New Creation.

DELIVERED BEFORE THE BREAKING OF BREAD AT OHIO CONFERENCE, 1905.

Through God's merciful kindness I am permitted to address the household of faith once more. I have no doubt that the experience of every child of God present corresponds with the statement of Job v. 7, that "Although affliction cometh not forth of the dust neither does trouble spring out of the ground, yet man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward;" making it certain that there is a natural cause for this condition of things. And having come together from various points to build each other up in our most holy faith, and to lift us to a higher plane of spiritual life, let us now consider some revelations respecting the new creation. The old creation was, at its commencement, very good, but was soon marred by its head; and the new creation intimates Jehovah's purpose to erect on its ruins a superior order of things. If I am not mistaken the foundation for the new creation was laid almost immediately after the old was marred, showing conclusively that Jehovah was not taken by surprise, but was prepared to carry out his

ETERNAL PURPOSE

as if man had not marred it. I refer to the germinal promise that the woman's Seed would eventually abolish the death involved by disobedience, and a thousand other ills. The promise mentioned was offered for faith and justification; and the new creation thus inaugurated, was extended when one and another would by faith become related by faith to the crusher of the serpent's seed. They became united to him by a symbol of that which was ordained to accomplish the bruising. He had to be bruised in the heel. I am persuaded that the blood of the animals whose skins covered the naked offenders, typified the blood which ratified the everlasting covenant; and the skins were a type of him who has become our sin-covering. This is where, and when, and how, the Lamb was typically slain before the foundation of the world. But before I proceed further I must speak of the

REPRESENTATIVE RELATION

of Christ to our race. The idea that he died substitutionally, is contradicted by an abundance of Scripture, and confirmed every day by experience, which proves that each dies for himself under the law of sin and death. How could this be if he paid the penalty instead of us? Is it not astonishing that those who teach substitution, also teach the eternal death, by which they mean an endless existence in suffering? How does this fiction look side by side with substitution? Did Christ pay any such penalty? Or, rather, is he still paying that penalty? If so, will he ever get through with the payment? Mark the subtlety which comes in here to offset our objection: It is said that the infinite value of Christ's suffering as the Son of God made up for every deficiency in respect to the duration. But more astounding still,—they do not believe that the real Son of God died at all,—only the tenement of clay he lived in, only the body born of Mary died they say. Why do they not see that would make it unnecessary for him to die at all? Why a single infinite tear or infinite sigh, arising from his dignity on that hypothesis, would have been sufficient. But truly he died, and his death was exactly like the death of every child of Adam. His breath went forth, his thoughts perished. And his death was not a natural death. He was cut off in the midst of his days on our account, not his own. He did this in our behalf. This makes it necessary to remark that God has dealt with the world of mankind, in dealing with Adam and with Christ. Through one representative-man came sin and death. Through the other comes righteousness and life. This is proven by Rom. v. 11-21 and which may be summed up in the words of verse 19, "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. Obviously it is not as the substitute, but as the

INFINITE VALUE

REPRESENTATIVE OF HUMANITY

that the case of Christ is referred to here. I consider it impossible to understand God's beneficent purpose toward man if we cherish the idea of substitution. If we have started right here, we are in a position to proceed with the study of the character or nature of the new creation, and 2 Cor. v. 17 is an excellent place to begin. It says, "If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature." A community of new creatures constitutes a new creation. The character of the new creation is beautifully expressed in Eph. iv. 24 where we are told to "put on the new man." Those addressed had the ability to do what they were told to do. If they personally took no action in the matter, they could never take on the new man, and never could become [illegible]. The new man describes that which is in contrast to the old man. All the human race are either in one or the other. Each of these two men is therefore multitudinous, and each has a head. One is styled the first man, and the other the second Man. One is of earth, and the other is of heaven. 1 Cor. xv. 47, 48. One brought sin and death, the other brought righteousness and resurrection life. Advancing from this we find it written of the members of the new creation that they are "God's workmanship,—created—yes, CREATED IN CHRIST JESUS,"

Eph. ii. 10, so that he is the source of their changed relation, and position, —reconciled, adopted, heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, sons of God, etc. It is clearly proven then that there could be no new creatures without Christ. New creatures are created by God in Christ. As they once partook only of the characteristics of the old creation,—they now partake of the characteristics of the new creation. I have shown where I think the foundation of the new creation was laid,—in the woman's seed, then Abraham's seed,—Isaac's and Jacob's and David's seed, and Son of God. And it will be in place now to turn to the announcement from heaven of that wonderful personage himself, found in Rev. iii. 14, that he "the faithful and true witness," is the beginning of the creation of God. This illustrates Eph. ii. 10 where those who put on the new man are said to be God's workmanship, created in Christ Jesus," and of course become constituents of the new creation by virtue of their relationship to him. They were once afar off from God through the sin of the first man; now each of them is a

NEW CREATURE.

Worthy of marked attention is the fact that Adam, according to Paul's testimony was just what Moses represented him to be,—the first man, and Christ was the second. Not the second or next man that lived after the first, but the second of a class of men, or second of a certain series. We arrive at this meaning from Rom. v. 14 where we are told that "Adam was a type of that being about to come." But in what respect was Adam a type of Christ? One from amongst many answers is this: Adam was made a living soul, with power to impart life to his race—he was its father. But the father lost his own right to live, and was under sentence of death before he had any children, and therefore could only impart to them mortal, perishing life, and so all his children return to dust as himself did—the second, or new creation, requires another—and an enduring life,—a life in harmony with its object. And the great, overshadowing object of Christ's coming, as given in his own words, is, "I am come that they might have life, and have it more abundantly. John x. 10. This life is secured in two stages, first in heirship, then in absolute possession. All who become new creatures enter upon newness of life, Rom. vi. 4, are heirs of the grace or favor of life." And no man can deprive them of it. Though the body be killed (Matt. x. 28) the life they were heirs of remains in the keeping of Christ. Col. iii. 3. It can only be taken away as the result of unworthiness, by him who is able to destroy both, soul (life) and body in Gehenna.

As there are two aspects to the sin pertaining to the old creation, so there are two aspects of righteousness pertaining to the new. The members of the old creation who spring from Adam its head are all made or constituted sinners by birth. Rom. v. 19. I do not mean that they are actual transgressors at birth; but they inherit the corruptible nature of their father Adam, and die in him, and besides that they inherit unbalanced mental and moral organisms which give them a universal tendency to sin themselves. The members of the new creation are in like manner made or constituted righteous by a birth succeeding a death. And they are required henceforth to live righteously,—for they are created in Christ Jesus unto good works. Eph. ii. 10. In addition to what I have said of the two aspects of sin pertaining to the old creation,—we must remember that those under the original law of sin and death; I mean those who die in Adam —die because they have descended from him and inherit his corruptible nature. They are in no sense responsible for it. They are responsible only for their personal sin[illegible] by becoming part of th[illegible] they are justi[illegible] sin pertaining to t[illegible] By compliance with th[illegible] exacted men are allowed to p[illegible]

THE CONSEQUENTS OF SIN,

THE OLD MAN

with his deeds, Col. iii. 9, that is, sever their connection with him, and be transferred to the new—put on the new man. The new man is bestowed, that men may be renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. Col. iii. 10. It was to this aspect of righteousness that the apostle referrred when saying to the new creatures in Galatia: "I am again in travail, until Christ be formed in you," mentally, morally, intentionally and legally. They had been made meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, Col. i. 12, but they had to show their appreciation of this great privilege by living according to the principles of the new creation, which are "righteousness and holiness of truth." We see from the great anxiety for the welfare of his children in the Lord by the Apostle that the old and new creations, in a measure, exist side by side for a time. The new creatures still retain some of the characteristics of the old creation. This doubtless was what the apostle was speaking about when he said the creation, (new creation) was subjected to frailty, not of its own will, or voluntarily, but by reason of him who placed it under, or that the creation itself also shall be "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God." Rom. viii. 20, 21. You will all agree with me, that what is to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, consists of those who have been temporarily laid in the grave. They are brought forth by virtue of having been created by God in him who is the resurrection and the life.

SUBJECTED IT IN HOPE

In Rev. iii. 14 it is announced that he was alive again after death, and would evermore live, and besides that, possessed the keys of the grave and of death. Yes; the everliving One in the 14th verse of the 3rd chapter describes himself as the amen, the witness faithful and true, and the beginning of the creation of God. He was the first finished product of the new creation. By the transforming energy of the Father he became the Lord the Spirit. The word amen, the learned say, means faithfulness and comes from the Hebrew word "ah-main." The Lord, the Spirit, is the faithful witness and true. He, before he was divine of nature testified faithfully, but he only testified in the words of his Father, but inasmuch as no son could testify as to the identity of his father, God his Father testified for him at his baptism, and at the Transfiguration, and at every miracle performed by him. Besides Jesus, all the members of his body of believers are, or should be, faithful witnesses and true. And all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us—believers,—Paul and the Corinthians and all the saints which are in Achaia, and the Church of God everywhere and always. For the next verse says,—"Now he which establisheth us with you in Christ and hath anointed us is God, who has also set his mark upon us, and given the earnest, the foretaste of the Spirit, in our hearts." If we are obeying the commandments of Jesus, what is true of Jesus is also true of us,—we are mighty ones of faithfulness on the principle of faith, without which it is impossible to please God. But we must not forget that Jesus styles himself "the Beginning of the creation of God." Not of the creation Moses treats of, for the sufficient reason that there was no Anointed Jesus in existence in the era of the Adamic creation. The Anointing Spirit existed then, this was in fact the creating energy. The Anointed who is now the Lord, the Spirit, and consubstantial with the Father,—that is of the same substance with the Father was while in flesh anointed with Spirit. And it was he, the Lord, the Spirit who says he is the Beginning of the creation of God. Of course he knew Adam had preceded him; of course he knew Adam was of the earth, and that he was of, or originated in heaven; and that he was the second Adam and not the first. Of course he knew that he was foreordained before the foundation of the world,—but was "manifest in these last times for you." He knew that Adam, the first, could only impart a perishable existence to his children. He knew that God would have violated his own law of sin and death, had he bestowed divine nature of existence upon one of Adam's race who had not by death paid its penalty. Jesus told Nicodemus that flesh and blood could not inherit the kingdom of God, —and that every inheritor must be born again,—born into another life that will never end, no other can make a person eligible to an everlasting kingdom. And he who announced that he was the Beginning of the creation of God further on says that he will make all things new.

Youth's Column.

A Gentleboy.

He never does a rude, rough thing,
My papa, kind and true.
I look at him and think inside,
"I'd like to be like you."

My grandma watches when he goes,
And says to me and Nan,
"There, children, look and you will see
A real, true gentleman."

I know I am too small for folks
To call me that just yet,
But if I try—Oh, very hard—
And never scold or fret,

I can be—well, a gentle-boy,
And make my papa glad
That I belong to him, and am
His own, own little lad!

"An untrained mind is like an untrained colt."

Avoid Slang.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox says of the young woman:—"Let her realize that choice language enhances her mental charms, and that slangy words and phrases cheapen her value and bedraggle her mind as much as paste, and brass jewelry, and frayed-out, skirts would ruin her personal appearance." And this is emphatically true and more. The soiled, frayed-out skirt might be the result of accidents of a journey, but not so the speech. It is in the index of the mind.

Do Quickly.

Youth is rapidly slipping away. We always hope and intend to do something more and better than we are doing now, but we put it off till we shall be a little older and wiser and stronger. Ere we are aware the morning sun has reached its zenith, and the day begins to decline. While we are delaying the ros[illegible] and fall to [illegible] fathers a[illegible]

Soon our record shall be made up. Thou hast no time to waste in sloth. "What thou doest, do quickly."

The Heart Makes the Wish.

Two little Indian boys, to whom the missionary, going back and forth across the plains on his errands of love was a familiar figure were talking as to what they would like to be and to do when they were men. One exclaimed:

"I wish to be a preacher. Then I'd go and tell everybody all the good things I know."

The other hesitated for awhile. It seemed to him the very best wish had been made. But suddenly his face brightened, and his shrill little voice rang out with a note of triumph:

"I wish I could be a horse and buggy; I'd carry the preacher to tell the good things."

Those who heard it didn't laugh. They knew the earnestness of the heart from which it had come—a heart willing to be anything or to do anything so that the "good things" might "go" to others. Willing to be even the preacher's horse and buggy if he couldn't be the preacher.

Poison In Books.

One day a gentleman in India went into his library and took down a book from the shelves. As he did so, he felt a slight pain in his finger like a prick of a pin. He thought that a pin had been stuck by some careless person in the cover of the book. But soon his finger began to swell, then his arm, and then his whole body, and in a few days he died. It was not a pin among the books but a small and deadly serpent. There are many serpents among the books nowadays; they nestle in the foliage of some of our most fascinating literature; they coil around the flowers whose perfume intoxicates the senses. People read and are charmed by the plot of the story, by the skill with which the characters are sculptured or grouped; by the gorgeousness of the word painting, and hardly feel the pin prick of evil that is insinuated. But it stings and poisons. When the record of ruined souls is made up, on what a multitude will be inscribed, "Poisoned by serpents among books and magazines."

The First Evils.

Beware of the first evils, for as sure as you are living the first step taken will make the second seem to become necessary. The first drop will be followed by a bigger second, and the second, at a shorter interval, by a more copious third, until the drops become a shower, and the shower becomes a deluge. The course of evil is ever wider and deeper and more tumultuous. The little sins get in at the window and open the front door for the big house-breakers. One smooths the path for the other. All sin has an awful power of perpetuating and increasing itself. As the prophet says in his awful vision of the doleful creatures that make their sport in the desolate city, "none of them shall want her mate. The wild beasts of the desert shall meet with the wild beasts of the islands." Every sin tells upon character, and makes the repetition of itself more and more easy. "None is barren among them." And all sin is linked together in a slimy tangle, like a field of seaweed, so that the man once caught in its oozy fingers is almost sure to drown.—Maclaren.

"I Just Keep Still."

"How is it, Rob," asked one boy of another, "that you ne[illegible] scrapes like the re[illegible]

"Because I don[illegible] swered Robbie p[illegible] boy says a hard [illegible] keep still."

Many a man[illegible] it a great deal of [illegible] tion would have[illegible] learned in his [illegible] which this little fe[illegible] that of "keeping s[illegible] word hurts, it will no[illegible] to make an angry reply. I[illegible] not answer at all, it to pa right. If your tongue cannot be restra[illegible] nobody knows what the result [illegible] be. It doesn't so much matter what your playmate says, so long as you keep your temper and hold your tongue; it is what you reply to him, nine times out of ten, that makes the quarrel. Let him say his say, and be done with it; then you will find the whole annoyance done with much more readily than if you had "freed your mi[illegible] abuse or misrepresent[illegible] storm passed by all the sooner. Patience sometimes serves a man better than courage. You will find again and again, that the way to "keep out of scrapes" is to keep still.—M. H. N.

Sowing Seeds.

Little Bessie had got a present of a book, and she eagerly opened look at the first picture of ting by the side of a s[illegible] ing seeds into the[illegible]

"I wonder about," said throw seeds i[illegible]

"Oh, I kno[illegible] ward, who [illegible] book. "H[illegible] ter-lilies."

"But he[illegible] said Bessi[illegible] such large[illegible] such little[illegible]

"You are [illegible] seeds every day, Bessie, come up large, strong plants aft[illegible] while," said her father.

"Oh, no, father; I have not planted any seeds for a long while."

"I have seen my daughter sow a number of seeds today."

Bessie looked puzzled, and her father smiled, and said: "Yes; I have watched you planting flowers and seeds and weeds today."

"Now, I know that you are joking, for I would not plant ugly weeds."

"I will tell you what I mean. When you laid aside that interesting book and attended to what your mother wished done, you were sowing seeds of kindness and love. When you broke the dish that you knew that your mother valued, and came instantly and told her, you were sowing seeds of truth. When you took the cup of cold water to the poor woman at the gate, you were sowing seeds of mercy. These are all beautiful flowers, Bessie."

"And the weeds, father?"

"When you were impatient with the baby, you sowed the seeds of ill temper. When you waited some time after your mother called you, you sowed disobedience and selfishness. These are all noxious weeds. Pull them up; do not let them grow in your garden."

Thy Kingdom Come.

Oh, thou who art our hope of life,
Amid the world's unceasing strife,
Amid our cares from day to day,
We bow to thee, and humbly pray
"Thy Kingdom Come."

The earth has borne its burden long
Six thousand years of sin and wrong;
Creation groans in bitter pain,
For thee, our Lord to come again.
"Thy Kingdom Come."

Our hearts are sad when we behold
The love of many waxing cold,
But some are waiting still for thee,
And daily cry on bended knee,
"Thy Kingdom Come."

The Man of Sin is filling up,
Fast to the brim his sinful cup,
And evil spirits hastening forth,
Deceive the nations of the earth—
"Thy Kingdom Come."

We know that summer time is near,
When all the budding trees appear,
So by the signs we understand,
The promised day is near at hand.
"Thy Kingdom Come."

While in the world of sin we stay,
Be thou our guide, as day by day
We travel o'er life's stormy way,
And may we ever live to pray
"Thy Kingdom Come."

...riptures.

...d "If ye keep ... shall abide ...ve kept my ..., and abide ...ser to know the ...ments, and keep ... our minds, we ...criptures often, it ...habit with us. It ...stom to go to the ...ast once every day, and ...e Word of Truth.

...Matt. iv. 4, we read "Man shall ...live by bread alone, but by every ...word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." I believe it would be far better for us to miss an occasional meal of food than to miss the reading of the Word.

In Job xxiii. 12, it says "Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my ...ry food." From this reading ...

...parallel of the meal and the reading of the Scriptures to be done in the same hour quite successfully. The reading of the Scriptures before or after at least one meal every day is a very good habit to get into. There are good and bad habits and as God's children we should have good habits, and the reading of the Scriptures every day ...uld be one of them. In Deut. xi. ... we read, "Therefore shall ... my words in your ...r soul, and bind ... your hand, that ...frontlets between ...shall teach them ... of them when ...e, and when ...u shalt write ...nts of thine ...ates." The ... the Lord's ... teach them ... the Lord's ...hem. We ought ...by this commandment to the Israelites, make the reading of the Scriptures a daily habit and in that way have the word of the Lord brought to our minds often. It is not enough to read the Bible, it should be studied, in our reading we will come across passages which we do not understand, which require considerable thought and a comparison with other Scripture.

The Scriptures are not to be understood by a formal and mechanical reading. To read with understanding requires a careful application and comparison with other Scripture. We should not neglect one portion of the Scriptures for another, for any great length of time. Some people read the New Testament only, which is a great mistake.

The doctrinal, the prophetic, the practical should all be read and studied. We read in 2 Tim. iii. 16-17 "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works," and 2 Peter i. 19, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place.

We see by these passages that all Scriptures should be pursued with diligence, we should be in earnest, if we are not we shall not be successful. The study of Divine things should not be an evening pastime, an occasional task, but a daily occurence, a part of our everyday life.

If this habit is continued from choice and from a ready mind, we cannot but love the Word of God and delight in it. We shall be able to understand the prophet Jeremiah's delight when he exclaimed in the fulness of joy, "Thy words were formed and I did eat them, and thy words was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart." Jer. xv. 16. No doubt this means that the words of the Lord had been lost, but they were found, and he read or heard them, and meditated upon them and they rejoiced his heart. We are not to go beyond that which is written, but we can go up to that which is written. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but those things which are revealed belong unto us." Deuteronomy. xxix. 29.

The way to obtain those things is to search for them, search the Scriptures as if for hidden treasure.

We should not accept the explanations and statements of our more qualified brethren, without searching them out for ourselves. Let us, like the Bereans of old, search the Scriptures daily. Make it a daily habit. To be sure there may be a day occasionally when we will not be able to study. The things of this life may not give us any time. However no matter how busy we are we find time to eat our food, so also we should try and find time to partake of spiritual food.

If we went a few days without food we would become weak and sickly, so also if we go without spiritual food for a few days, we become weak and sick spiritually.

We cannot grow strong in the Lord if we feed on the Word only once in seven days, or once in a while.

Let us partake of spiritual food every day by searching the Scriptures and grow in the knowledge and favor of our Lord Jesus Christ.

BLESSED IS HE.

...son for our ... and ... is ... shall ... God. Yes, it will be blessed, thrice blessed. And dearly beloved, do we not find it blessed to meet together here from week to week, to keep in memory the death of our Lord until he come, and to exhort and to build each other up in our most holy faith that we may be strengthened to hold fast the faith, that if he tarry we may with patience wait for him, keeping our eyes fixed on the mark for the prize of the high calling and running the race set before with perseverence, so that we may indeed be among the blessed in the kingdom of God. It is here we encourage each other to endure and conquer the trials that daily come to us, and we need only be absent a few times to feel the loss of the much needed help we receive here. We cannot help but miss the lessons so earnestly given for instruction in righteousness, and for our encouragement to hold the faith and to continue in it grounded and settled, and if we come with pure hearts and clean hands, and an earnest desire to worship God in singleness of heart he will surely add his blessing. When we hear the glowing words of truth spoken with earnestness, even if they be not spoken with impassioned eloquence, we do not readily forget them and are blessed in the hearing.

If we are desirous of proving that we are anxious to be among the blessed in the kingdom of God, we can do so by an earnest endeavor to meet together and keep our Lord's command who says, "do this in remembrance of me," and the promise is where two or three are met together in my name, there will I be in the midst. Dear, saving name, the name named upon us in the baptismal waters, the all inspiring name of Jesus. Is it not meeting together with him in the midst that inspires us with renewed courage by the way, that gives renewed strength to our faltering steps, that enables us to grasp the outstretched hand ever ready to help in the time of need. If we feel that it is indeed blessed to meet together here, oh, what will that meeting be when those who are called and faithful shall be blessed in the kingdom of God.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with him a thousand years. May our heavenly Father strengthen us to keep his commandments now that we may be among the blessed in the kingdom of God.

War.

From the earliest ages war has formed an important part of history. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, is a striking example of a great warrior. He was the scourge of the age in which he lived. Because Jerusalem revolted he took the city, carried the people into captivity and destroyed the temple. Another example of his relentless warfare is found in the siege of Tyre. Ezekiel describes the hard siege in the twenty-ninth chapter. Every head was made bald and every shoulder was peeled. The captives Nebuchadnezzar took in war were used in making the large buildings and for other public works in Babylon which required a great amount of hard labor. In his selfishness and ambition he seems to have lost all feelings of kindness or consideration for others.

The popular idea is that unless one is willing to fight for the protection of country or for a good cause, they are not patriotic or brave. There could surely be no higher motive for taking up arms than in defense of the Master, yet the one who drew the sword in his behalf was reproved with the words, "Put up the sword into its place for all they that take the sword must perish with the sword." There is a poem by Longfellow entitled, "When War shall be no More," containing this stanza,

"Were half the power that fills the world with terror:
Were half the wealth bestowed on camp and courts
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of armaments or forts."

In the history of our country, war has formed an important part as in the records of other nations. In the intervals of peace nations make preparations for war, doing all they can to assist in the destruction of their fellowmen when there shall be war again. How can any who want to follow in the steps of the Savior engage in war with all its attendant evils? How can they enter battle without hearing the sixth commandment spoken as by an ...ding conscience, to slay the principles of ... coming evil with good? Those who would be like the Prince of Peace should be slow to engage in strife whether with a few or with an army.

Paul in writing to the Romans says, "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written. Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." Let us remember his words and wait for the time when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Selections.

God's Helpfulness.

HE REDEEMS LIKE A GOD.

He might have been content with furnishing redemption for Adam and Eve alone, or for a certain favored few of their descendants. But not he would cover the earth with tribes and nations, till a countless generation should cry out of the depths of their sinful wretchedness for help. He would roll generation after generation through their brief space of life until the steady tramp of the ages halts at the bivouac of judgment, and the myriads on myriads of earth's sons respond to the roll call of eternity,—and then challenge the spirit of evil to point to a single one not redeemed by blood. Oh, the lavish wealth of redeeming love!

HE SAVES LIKE A GOD!

Redemption is provisional; salvation is efficient. Consisting in a marvelous moral reconstruction with a contemporaneous external revolution —too glorious for any sullied purity. Salvation in its nature is divine! And of its extent we read: "He is able to save unto the uttermost!" Let us read that again. To be saved is a glorious thing—almost surpassing human belief; but here is a measure given. Not only will he save, but he will save unto—what? My wish? My sense of need? No, not that; beyond that! For that may fall far short of my real necessity!

Unto the uttermost.

Unto the utter, is the left hand boundary of want! Unto the most is the right hand boundary of need! But utter and most—both superlatives—are here conjoined into one compound super superlative to express all possibilities of need lying between the center and the circumference of probationary existence! Oh! How language groans to express the munificence of God's salvation!

But Paul does not stop here. He gives another turn to the rack and tortures out another conglomeration of qualifying words which crown him as the very king of sublime and glorious expression. Listen! God is able. Take care, good Paul; he who launches out upon God's ability has a far-off shore to reach before he can bound it and tell its sum. But hear with what unfaltering tones he rings out!—"God is able to make grace abound." Yes, yes, we know that, blessed be his name! But stop! A word has fallen out. "God is able to make all grace abound toward you." Hallelujah! That is good enough! "All grace!" That must be grace in sufficient measure, and for every extremity. Yes, and it abounds. There is not only enough but an overflow—a surplusage—munificence of supply! "Hold!" I seem to hear Paul saying, "Don't go off in ecstacies yet; wait until I finish. Hear now: God is able." (That is so good he has to repeat it every time) "to make all grace abound toward you; that ye always—having sufficiency? No! "Having all sufficiency in all things may abound to every good work." Enough, my Lord, enough! Thou dost save like a God.

The Ancient Hope.

The hope which God furnishes is not merely the hope of a quiet close to this world's weariness, but the hope of infinite gladness which is then to begin. There is a passage in Job which exemplifies both of these very fitly. Groaning under the pressure of no common grief, he cries out, "Oh, that thou wouldst hide me in the grave! That thou wouldst keep me in secret! Till thy wrath be past." As if he would be glad to be hidden anywhere, even in the grave, from such calamities. But then this is not enough. This is mere negative comfort. It is the mere cessation of suffering. And this does not content him. He bethinks himself and cries out again. "Oh that thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me!" ... not bear the thought of ... in the dust, even though ... hiding places from ... of earth. He would not ... there. He would have a set time at the end of which God might remember him. Then abruptly he asks, "If a man die, shall he live?" and, evidently answering himself, "Yes, he shall live again," he calmly adds, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come." For it is the resurrection change he looks for, and rejoices in as his hope. When that day arrives the trumpet shall sound, and the voice of God shall speak—"Thou shalt call, And I will answer!" But how is he so assured of being thus remembered of God? He knows how precious in his eyes is the dust of his saints—"Thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." Thus, though Job begins with what is merely negative, that is, the ending of his grief and shame, he cannot rest there, but presses on, in rapid hope, to the beginning of his joy and glory. It is the morning, with all its new life and reviving sunshine, that rises before his view, and from afar pours into him its healing light.

"The fashion of this world passeth away." This cheers us, for it assures us that no grief shall live long. But the fashion of "the world to come" endures. This is unspeakably gladdening; for all that better "age" brings with it shall abide forever. The inheritance is vast, the city is "joyous," the mansions are many, the title is sure, and the possession is everlasting.

Jerusalem! Jerusalem!
Would God I were in thee!
Oh, that my sorrows had end,
Thy joys that I might see.

Thus sweetly sung one of Scotland's holiest sons in the olden time. Broken with many griefs, he thus poured out his soul—weary and homesick, as stranger here. And will not "night" fail in one of its objects, if it does not make us long for the "day?" Will not tribulation be frustrated if it does not stir within us "earnest expectation," this "groaning within ourselves," this "fervent longing"—this homesickness which the saints of other days felt so tenderly and truly? And all the more, because "now is our salvation nearer than when we believed;" for we have arrived at the last stage of our journey, and a few more days will suffice to bring us home."—Horatius Bonar.

Proper Use of Time.

"Gather up the fragments" of time, "that nothing be lost." This can be addressed only to those who are employing the greater portion of their time in some earnest work. He who floats loosely and aimlessly in society has no fragments of time as related to a whole. It is all fragments. He himself is a fragment lying useless, and his whole life needs to be recast. But whatever the great business of a man may be, however engrossing, there will always be some fragments of time that will remain: and with most men these are so considerable that the disposition made of them will greatly modify the results of life. The secret of doing much is to do a little at a time, and to persevere in doing it. A half an hour a day in the service of an earnest purpose has been sufficient for the acquisition of languages and the writing of books, and for laying the foundation of a lasting time. Even the minute fragment required for drawing the wax ends was employed by Roger Sherman in looking on his book open before him; and it was thus he became a sage and signer of the Declaration of Independence. Let a professional man or any man when he starts in life, have a side study, be it history, or a language, or poetry, or any branch of natural history or geology, and let him give to it the fragments of his time, and he will be surprised at his own acquisitions; the whole tone of his thoughts and life will be elevated, the change of subject will be his best recreation. And what is thus in literature and science is still more so in religion and in all that relates to duty. There is no time too brief for an ejaculative prayer. When the countenance of Nehemiah was sad for the desolations of Jerusalem, and the king asked him, "What is thy request?" there was time between the question and the answer for him to pray to the "God of heaven." If the object of this world had been to furnish opportunities for doing good, it could hardly have been arranged better than it is, and whoever has a heart set upon that will have no need that any fragments of time he may gather up should be lost.—Mark Hopkins.

The Heavenly Jerusalem.

Blessed are they that do his commandments that they may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city. Rev. xxii. 14.

Yes, for them that do, bright shine the golden streets of the magnificent and imperishable mansions of the morning stars and the sons of God. For them that do, are prepared the green fields of paradise, adorned with fadeless bowers of bloom and fragrance, and shaded by life's crystal ambrosia, fruitful trees; for them, flow life's crystal streams fast by the eternal throne; for them that do are the "delectable hills mantled in purple mists and golden-bannered clouds —for them, the long-drawn aisles of purest gold, the peerless mansions glittering with sapphire, and pearl and emerald, the flashing colonades of ruby and jasper and diamond, the imperishable homes of saints and angels, the high, and holy and happy sphere where violence and fraud come not, nor night nor tempest come. Yes, for the obedient, this sinless land of sublimest melodies and saintliest joys, where forever roll the loud hosannas and swelling notes of the voice, and harp, and trumpet, in honor of him that sitteth upon the throne and to the Lamb is prepared.

The Unveiled Dealings.

"What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter."—John xiii. 7.

O blessed day, when the long sealed book of mystery shall be unfolded, when the "fountains of the great deep shall be broken up," "the channels of the waters seen," and all discovered to be one vast revelation of unerring wisdom and ineffable love! Here we are baffled at the Lord's dispensations, we cannot fathom his ways. Like the well of Sychar, they are deep and we have nothing to draw with. But soon the "mystery of God will be finished," the enigmatical "seals," with all their inner meanings, opened. When that morning without clouds shall break each soul will be like the angel standing in the sun—there will be no shadow: all will be perfect day!

WE wish to avoid the labor and expense of mailing statements to our patrons. If each one who has not as yet paid for this year would send in his renewal at once, we will appreciate the favor.

"Hold Fast Till I Come."

The Savior is coming, and in this blessed hope we rejoice. But we are assured that the love of many shall wax cold, and some depart from the faith as that day approaches. All the frailty of our flesh, and the fickleness of our hearts warn us of this, and the Savior has graciously sent back from heaven the exhortation to hold fast till he comes to reassure us by his own presence and rejoice our hearts by his tender love and the manifestation of his glory. Waves of doubt, discouragement and earthly ambition dash against us; the strong current of worldliness that would rob Christ of the last of his followers has not left us untouched, selfish affections and lusts rage in the heart and would turn us from our Lover; but through it all he encourages us to hold fast. Soon the battle will be over and we will be,

"Where no storms ever beat on that glittering strand, While the years of eternity roll."

ITEMS.

Be not so unkind to a friend as to suffer sin upon him.

A spiritual mind has something of the nature of the sensitive plant. "I shall smart if I touch this or that." There is a holy shrinking away from evil.—Cecil's Remains.

No grace is more necessary to the Christian worker than fidelity; the humble grace that marches on in sunshine and storm, when no banners are waving, and there is no music to cheer the weary feet.—N. J. Nicholls.

The love of Christ is like the blue sky, into which you may see clearly, but the real vastness of which you cannot measure. It is like the sea, into whose bosom you can look a little way, but its depths are unfathomable.—McCheyne

The best thing to give to your enemy is forgiveness; to any opponent, tolerance; to a friend, your heart; to your child, a good example; to a father, deference; to your mother, conduct that will make her proud of you; to yourself, respect; to all men, charity. —Mrs. Balfour.

By shaking the magnetic needle, you may move it from its place; but it returns the moment it is left to itself. In like manner, believers may fall into sin; but no sooner do they wake to reflection, than they repent, and endeavor to mend ways, and resume a life of godliness.—Gotthold.

There are many ways in which it would be well for us all to carry our childhood with us, even on into old age, if it were possible, in its trustfulness and openheartedness, and willingness not only to love, but to show that we love, as well. Why that last alone would cure many a heart-ache of today.—May F. McKean.

Sincere Christians walk the earth with mien and bearing of Immortals, although the rays of spiritual majesty which stream forth from the burning spirit within often do but illumine the weakness of the body which encases it. Of such it is literally true that whether they live, they live unto the Lord, and whether they die, they die unto the Lord.—Canon Liddon.

WHEN you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Our Helping Fund.

We whose names are given herewith, believing that it is our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending THE RESTITUTION to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the managers of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund to be applied as the donors request, (or when left to the publisher to decide) only for those who themselves state their circumstances and need, or whose case is presented by some one known to be trust worthy.

Is Faith the Gift of God?

"For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." Eph. ii. 8, 9.

There are two explanations of these verses which have given rise to two different theories in regard to the origin of faith. One takes as its authority the English text only and makes faith to be the gift of God. The other takes as its authority the Greek text, and affirms that faith is not the gift of God.

There is apparently a great difference between these two explanations, but the difference is not so great as it seems. When accurate definitions and statements are made on both sides they will be found to harmonize in every respect.

It will be evident to every Greek scholar, by a reference to the original, that our English version does not give an accurate translation, although it may be explained so as to express the original. A full rendering of the Greek would be thus: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it (salvation) is the gift of God, etc." The word "it" is neuter, while the word "faith" is feminine. The former, therefore cannot refer to the latter.

In what sense is faith the gift of God? It is the gift of God in the sense that the Spirit shows us things of God—shows us our sinfulness and need of regeneration—shows us the willingness of God to help us, his love for us and interest in us—shows us Christ the way, and how worthy of our confidence he is; and thus we are led by the Spirit, without any violation of our free moral agency, to have faith in God. Our faith is the natural result of the previous revelation of "the things of God."

In what sense is faith not the gift of God? It is not the gift of God in the sense that he bestows upon us a new faculty. We do not receive it directly from God, as we receive "the gift of the Holy Spirit." As one has expressed it, "Faith is not injected into us."

I have faith in my fellow-man when I have proof of his honesty, integrity, etc. In the same way I have faith in God when I see how worthy of confidence he is, and how true to all his promises. As it is the Spirit of God that leads us to the exercise of faith, and as by nature we do not have faith in God, so he may be said to give us faith. This is agreed to by all. But whether faith is the gift of God or not, let no man boast, for our salvation is "not of works, lest any man should boast." It is all of free grace. It is of more importance to have faith than to know how you receive it.

Jesus' Love.

"Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother." Matt. xii. 50.

As if no solitary earthly type were enough to image forth the love of Jesus, he assembles into one verse a group of the tenderest relationships. And who are those who can claim the blessedness spoken of under this imagery? On whom does he lavish this unutterable affection? No outward profession will purchase it. No church, no priest, no ordinances, no denominational distinctions. It is on those who are possessed of a holy character: "he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." He who reflects the mind of Jesus, imbibes his Spirit, takes his word as the regulator of his daily walk, and makes his glory the great end of his being; he who lives to God and with God and for God; the humble, lowly, Christ-like, heaven-seeking Christian—he it is who can claim as his own this wondrous heritage of love.

Though we are often ashamed to call Jesus "brother", "He is not ashamed to call us brethren." He looks down on poor worms, and says, "The same is my mother, and sister, and brother." "I will write upon them," he says in another place, "my new name." Just as we write our name on a book to tell that it belongs to us, so Jesus would write his own name on us, the wonderful volumes of his grace, that they may be read and pondered by principalities and powers.

Have we "known and believed this love of God?" Ah, how poor has been the requital! Who cannot subscribe to the words of one whose name was in all the churches: "Thy love has been as a shower;" the return but a dew-drop, and that dew-drop stained with sin.—Words of Jesus.

For entire program of meeting with full instructions, etc., address G. P. Allard, Corresponding Secretary, Box 86, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.
EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will convene at St. Paul Oct. 25-29 inclusive. Meetings will be held in the Court House Hall. Invitation to participate is extended to all. A reception committee will be appointed to meet visitors and find accommodations.

FANNIE D. WELSH, Sec'y.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a Tabernacle located on the premises of John Lehman one and one-half miles south of Kessler Station.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio.

Let every one who can possibly do so lay aside worldly cares for awhile and meet with us, to work for the blessed Master. Come, let us have our spiritual strength renewed and help to save others.

A cook has been arranged for and all will be boarded for the small sum of 35cts per day. Sleeping arrangements have also been arranged on the grounds. Come prepared to remain through the meeting. Come by the Big Four R. R. to Kessler Station where all will be met. All trains have not been stopping, but will stop during the meeting. Trains going west due at 8:39 a m and 9:18 a m. Going east one train due 5:47 p m.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

P. NEILL, Pres.
J. C. THOMPSON, Sec'y.

To the Brethren of the Kansas and Missouri Conference:

I have moved to the state of Oregon, so all letters in the interest of the conference work will be sent to J. P. Bitner, Severance, Kansas.

Imported Japanese Fans.

A set of four very attractive Japanese fans issued by the Chicago & North Western Railway sent to any address securely packed on receipt of 10 cents to pay postage. Address A. H. Waggener, Trav. Agt., 215 Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.—Sept 5

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "THE RESTITUTION," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. An order is cheaper and safer, but if you cannot get an order and must register, then put the money in, and it will be as safe as the stamps could possibly be.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

Notice.

I expect to be in Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas this summer, and any wishing pastoral work in reach of my path, please notify me at Attica, Kan.

Will All Men be Saved?

I have written and published, and now offer for sale at ten cents per copy, a book of 60 pages, which is intended to be, as indicated in the sub-title, "A Consideration of the Doctrine of Universal Salvation." Some of the divisions are, An Introductory section, A section treating the historic origin of the doctrine, Tendencies and effects, God's methods of dealing with men, The Savior of all men, Who will have all men to be saved, The paid debt, the sovereignty of God.

Send Money Orders or stamps to the author, A. H. Zilmer, Plymouth, Ind.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

Pine Woods Bible Class in Book Form.

I have several times been solicited to have the past lessons of the Class put in Book form.

I have decided to do this, if I can secure enough subscribers to the book to warrant the expense of publishing it.

The book if printed will contain over four hundred pages. How many copies will you take at $1.25 each?

Mind, our pledges out no money until I can see if sufficient is subscribed for to warrant the expense.

Send your pledges right away, so that the book can be put to press as soon as possible. Address W. H. Wilson, 420 N. Willow Ave., Austin Station Chicago, Ill.

A four-page tract in the German language, by Brother M. Joblin of Cleveland, O. Subject, "What Must I do to be Saved?" IMPORTANT NOTICES.

All persons addressing us should [give] name, full [post] office, county and [State]. All letters for THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Marshall Co., Ind.

Remittance should be sent by bank draft, postoffice money orders, or express orders. Money sent in either of the above ways is at our risk, money sent loose in letters is at the risk of the sender. It is folly to think that you can fold bills in a letter so that no one can tell it, for one who handles much mail matter can almost invariably tell a letter with money in it. Take warning and send safely.

All remittances should be made payable to the order of "THE RESTITUTION."

Faithful.

I know my hand shall never reap its sowing,
And yet some other may:
And I may never see it growing,
So short life's little day.
Still must I sow. Although I go forth weeping,
I cannot, dare not stay.
God grant the harvest, though I may be sleeping
Under the shadows grey.

Hieremias (or "Jeremiah").

CHAPTER 44.

1. And Sedekias, son of Joosias, became king in the place of Jooakeim whom Nabouchodonosor made king to rule over Jouda.

2. And he and his courtiers and the city of the land did not hearken to the words of the Lord which he talked at the hand of Hieremias.

3. And the king Sedekias sent Jooakal, son of Selemias, and Sophonns, son of Massaias, the priest unto Hieremias saying, Offer votive prayer for us forsooth unto the Lord.

4. And Hieremias went and passed through the city, and they did not give him up to the guard-house.

5. And Pharaoo's host had come out of Alguptos and the Chaldaioi had heard the report of them, and they came up against Hierousaleem.

6. And a word of the Lord occurred unto Hieremias saying,

7. In this wise hath the Lord said, In this wise shalt thou say unto Jouda's king who sent unto thee to enquire of me, Lo Pharaoo's host that came out unto you for responsive-help will return into a land of Alguptos,

8. And the Chaldaioi themselves will come back against this city, and they will take it and will burn it with fire;

9. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, Do not undertake in your souls, saying the Chaldaioi will run away and depart from us, because they will not depart.

10. And if ye smite all the host of the Chaldaioi who are warring against you and there be left some pierced through, each one in his place these will arise and burn this city with fire.

11. And it came to pass when the host of the Chaldaioi went away from Hierousaleem from before the face of the host of Pharaoo,

12. That Hieremias went out of Hierousaleem to go his way into a land of Beniamin, and there a man with whom Saroula, son of Selemias, son of Ananias was staying, also seized Hieremias, saying thou art fleeing unto the Chaldaioi;

14. And he said it is a lie, I am not fleeing unto the Chaldaioi; and he did not hearken to him, and Saroula seized Hieremias and led him unto the rulers.

15. And the rulers became embittered against Hiermias and smote him, and sent him into the house of Joonathan, the scribe, because they had made this a prison-house.

16. And Hieremias went into the house, into the cellar and to the gravel bottom of it, and sat there for many days.

17. And Sedekias sent and summoned him and the king asked him to tell him secretly whether there was a word from the Lord. And he said there was, that he would be delivered into the hands of Babuloon's king.

18. And Hieremias said to the king, In what respect have I wronged thee and thy courtiers and this laity, that thou hast given me into a prison-house?

19. And where are your prophets who prophesied to you saying, that Babuloon's king would not come against this land?

20. And now my lord, O king, Let mercy for me fall before thy face; and why art thou turning me back into the house of Joonathan the scribe, and shall I not die there?

21. And the king gave directions and cast him into the regular prison-house, and they gave him one loaf of bread a day from where they were baking until the bread failed from out the city, and Hieremias sat in the court-yard of the prison.

COMMENT.

This 44th chapter is given in the versions as the 37th. In the first verse who is "Coniah" read into the text but not in it.

Compare the names in the 3rd verse and see if you recognize them.

In the 4th verse "went and passed through the city" instead of "went in and came out" [illegible]. In the 5th verse "passed through the city into the land of Beniamin as we learn later in this chapter.

In the 5th verse "the Chaldaioi came up against Hierousaleem" instead of "brake up from Hierousaleem," that is they came back; for we already learned that they had gone away temporarily, which fact had strengthened the king and his false prophets in their disobedience and apostasy.

In the 10th verse there is no "in his tent" nor "wounded" in the text.

In the 12th verse "to receive his portion there in the midst of the people" not in the text.

In the 13th verse how "Iryah" was ever got out of "Saroula" as a name is passing strange. The changes in the other two names in this verse can be accounted for etymologically and by the vicious vowel-pointing.

Compare the 16th verse with the same in the R. V. and tell me where the translators got "dungeon-house" or "cells" in the text.

The rest of the chapter well enough perhaps though not accurately so.

CHAPTER 45.

1. And Saphanias, son of Nathan and Godolias, son of Paschoor, and Jooachal, son of Selemias, heard the words which Hieremias was talking to the laity, saying,

2. In this wise hath the Lord said, The one who continueth to dwell in this city will die with sword and with famine, and the one who goeth his way out unto the Chaldaioi will live, and his soul will be a thing found and he will live.

3. Because in this wise hath the Lord said, This city will have been delivered up into the hands of a host of Babuloon's king and he will take it.

4. And they said unto the king, Let that man be taken away forsooth, because he is relaxing the hards of the men still left in the city who are warring and the hands of all the laity in talking to them according to these words, because this man doth not divine peace for his laity, but rather wicked things.

5. And the king said, Lo, he is in your hands; because the king was not able to withstand them.

6. And they cast him into a cellar of Melchio's, son of the king, which was in the court yard of the prison, and they let him down into the cellar, and in the cellar there was no water, but mire and he was in the mire.

7. And Abdemelech the Aithioops (the Aitheopean) heard, and he was also in the household of the king, that they had given Hieremias into the cellar; and the king was in the gate-way of Beniamin.

8. And he came out unto him and talked with the king and said.

9. Thou hast done wickedly in what thou hast done in being about to kill this man before the face of the famine, because there is no bread in the city.

10. And the king commanded Abdemelech, saying, Take in thy hands from here thirty men and lead him out of the cellar, that he may not die.

11. And Abdemelech took the men and entered into the house of the king, into the lower story and took from there old rags and old ropes and cast them unto Hieremias into the cellar,

12. And said, Put these underneath the ropes and Hieremias did in this wise.

13. And they drew him up with the ropes, and led him out of the cellar; and Hieremias seated himself in the court-yard of the prison.

14. And the king sent and summoned him to himself into the house of Aseleised in the house of the Lord. And the king said unto him, I will ask thee a word and do thou not hide from me an oragular-word.

15. And Hieremias said to the king, If I should tell thee, wouldst thou not put me to death? And if I give thee fellow-counsel thou wilt not hearken to me wilt thou?

16. And the king gave him his oath, saying, As the Lord liveth, who created this soul for us, I will not kill thee for it, and I will not give thee into the hands of these men.

17. And Hieremias said unto him, In this wise hath the Lord said, If thou shalt go forth unto the leaders of Babuloon's king thy soul will live, and this city shall not be burned with fire, and thou and thy household will live.

18. And if thou dost not go out of this city will have been delivered up into the hands of the Chaldaioi and they will burn it with fire, and thou shalt not be saved.

19. And the king said unto Hieremias, I have word from the Joudaians who have fled unto the Chaldaioi not to give myself into their hands, and that they will mock at me.

20. And Hieremias said, They shall not give thee up; Hear the Word of the Lord, which I am speaking unto thee, and it will be better for thee and thy soul will live.

21. And if thou be not willing to go out this is the word which the Lord hath shown me.

22. And lo, all the women who have been left behind in the house of the king of Jouda have been led out unto the rulers of Babuloon's king, and they have said that they have deceived thee, and that thy men of peace will be able for thee, and will loose thy foot with destructive intrigues and that they have turned away from thee.

23. And thy wives and thy children will they lead out unto the Chaldeans, and thou shalt not be saved, because with the hand of Babuloon's king wilt thou be taken, and this city will have been burned down.

24. And the king said unto him, Let no man know of these words and thou shalt not die.

25. And if the rulers hear that I have talked to thee, and they come to thee and say to thee, Tell us what the king said to thee wilt thou not? Do not hide from us and we will not destroy thee, and what did the king say to thee?

26. Thou shalt also say unto them, I am casting my sense of mercy before the eyes of the king that he turn me not back into the house of Joonathan to die there.

27. And all the rulers did come unto Hieremias and they asked him; and he told them according to all these words which the king had commanded him; and they went away in silence, because the Word of the Lord was not heard.

28. Hieremias sat in the courtyard of the prison until the time when Hierousaleem was taken.

COMMENT.

This 45th chapter is given in the versions as the 38th chapter and the narrative is substantially the same. "The dungeon" of the versions though into which the prophet was let down and taken up with ropes was not properly a dungeon as was the cellar of the king's house with no light nor ventilation and with a miry bottom.

Compare all the names; for they are all unrecognizable in the versions and they were real people, and no people on this earth ever had such unearthly names as some of these are made to read. Surely they are not worthy of any civilization or sense of euphonic sound. Our American Indians even had a euphonic nomenclature and one that could be intelligently translated and interpreted.

Watch and Pray.

The requirement, so often repeated by the Master to his disciples, has special reference to the closing up of this age, being found directly connected with the many signs hung out by the Master as waymarks by which his waiting people may know that sweet home is very near at hand. We are to watch for those things that mark his coming near, and those who have a theory that nullifies any necessity for his coming have no interest in the subject and of course will not watch.

We are also to watch and pray lest we be led into temptation. We are now right in the midst of dangerous temptations, that threaten and imperil our eternal welfare. We are tempted to neglect our duty and to conform and mix in with the world. Our Master overcame and so must we. This big world, with all its deceptive allurements, was offered our Master on condition of obedience to the usurper, but he spurned the offer, and said, "Get behind me Satan!" His followers must do likewise if they would overcome and sit down with him in his throne.

We must watch and pray, for we know not what hour our Lord will come, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping, slothful, negligent and inactive. We must watch and pray lest our hearts, minds or affections be overloaded with eating and drinking and the cares of this life, and so that day come upon us unawares. This was the sad condition of the world. The Master says, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in or contracting marriage, and knew not until the day came and took them all away. So shall it be in the end of the world. They might have known as the warning was sounded in their ears by a preacher of righteousness for a long time, but they were a world of skeptics, and because of this they justly perished in their own corruption. Just so now; the world is being warned, not by the wise of this world, but by those who are watching and waiting the Lord's good time.

But as it was then, so we find the great bulk of humanity now, lashed in skepticism, their minds filled with the cares of this life, fun and festival, with no time to think and talk about the coming of our long absent Lord, and to wait, watch and pray for the return of him who said, "I will come again!" As sure as an unbelieving world perished in their sins, while Noah and his family, who believed God, were saved in the ark according to God's order, just so the great day hastens on when the final separation of good and bad will overtake this unbelieving and fun loving world. When God's people who are in Christ, the antitypical ark, will be safely landed on the other shore, while the millions of unbelieving men and women who would not have Christ rule them, but preferred the pleasures of sin for a season, must cry for the rocks and mountains to fall on and hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath; for the great day of his wrath is come and who shall be able to stand? A solemn question and a solemn time.

Ye Must be Born Again.

Why? Because such is one's natural state that you cannot repair it; you cannot build upon it; you cannot put the new wine into the old bottles. There must be a total remaking. Wholly new foundations must be put in. The old is so bad that you cannot count it good, and make it better, and finish it up as best—meet for the Master's use. Look at the natural man through the clear glasses of God's Word and see how dreadful he is in all his parts; his "whole head is sick;" his "eyes are full of adultery," and cannot cease from sin; his "mouth is full of cursing and bitterness;" the poison of asps is under" his "lips;" his tongue uses deceit; his throat is an open sepulchre; his "heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked;" his "hands are full of blood;" and his "feet are swift to shed blood." How graphic is Isaiah's description of one or many such people! "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint; from the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores; they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment."

Apply this to his body if you will, but is he any better within? How is the mind? "It is enmity against God." This is its nature, not his relation, as though he might be hostile toward him; his mind is hostility itself. His understanding is "darkened," being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in him. His "thoughts are thoughts of iniquity;" his heart deviseth wicked imaginations; his conscience is "seared as with a hot iron;" both mind and conscience are defiled. What a condition! Such men made "better?" Impossible! In them "dwelleth no good thing." Indeed,

"How sad our state by nature is;
Our sin, how deep it stains;
And Satan binds our captive souls
Fast in his slavish chains."

Well then did Jesus say, "Ye must be born again." But a new birth is a new creation, and only he who created at first can create again. But for this cause came Christ into the world and now stands with outstretched arms inviting to himself. And shall we not at once arise and say,

"With this cold, stony heart of mine,
Jesus, to thee I flee;
And to thy grace my soul resign,
To be renewed by thee?"

Thousands have so come and found their darkness turned into day—with them old things have passed away, and behold, all things have become new. Try what others have tried and be like them, gloriously saved.

One Less.

"One cross the less remains for me to bear,
Already born is that of yesterday;
That of today shall we tomorrow share,
Tomorrow's with itself, shall pass away."

Yes, this conflict cannot always last. The wonderful warfare in which we are engaged must sooner or later end. Each trial through which we pass makes the number one less for the time to come. Each temptation we endure or overcome lessens the number of those with which we can possibly be assailed. In this earthly state our afflictions are truly varied and numberless. But each one as it goes by and is numbered with the past, ever diminishes the sum still allotted to us. The difficulties of the way once overcome make the whole along life's journey so much less to come. The possible shadows that enshroud us diminish us so much the more, as we approach the light of the heavenly world. Many disappointments we have had will be shared by us no more forever. Life's great book are long will be written.

Yet with the good man the greater trials that come in life's wondrous drama, the greater triumphs are shared. The darker the shadows that sometimes darken our way the more glorious the light that will dispel them; all and cheer us on to glory and to God. The fiercer the deadly conflict the more wondrous and signal the victory! When we have patiently and prayerfully repelled temptations we shall come gold tried in a furnace. So one by one our crosses and our trials show always the number less. As our days and years glide away our sorrows and sighings must go with them. The number, beloved, is wondrously diminishing! Soon will come the end, when death itself shall be swallowed up of life, and this mortal put on immortality. Sweet by and by that will plant our feet within the confines of an eternal spring! Hail fair day that will bring us to our Father's house!

"The storm that yesterday ploughed the sea
Is buried now beneath its level blue;
One storm the fewer remains for me,
Ere sky and earth are made forever new."

If we keep our souls in patience, if we hold fast to our faith and hope and love, the soft streams of healing power will flow into us and through us. We shall receive and give out infinite good.—Charles G. Ames.

The Restitution.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the gospel, repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, pre-requisites of the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

The Joys of Prayer.

Even in those parts of prayer that might seem painful, there is a pleasure that would be ill exchanged for this world's most boasted bliss. In bitterness of repentant sorrow for sin, there is a sweetness; in the agony of fervent supplication for pardon, there is a joy, as much superior to the best the world can boast, as the heavens are higher than the earth—

"The broadest smile unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than virtue's softest tears."

O! what a happy, heaven-foretasting life the children of God might enjoy on earth if they would live a life of prayer! How calm they might be in the midst of the wildest storms! How joyful in the midst of deepest tribulations! How composed and cheerful, while all around was agitation and alarm—the smile of heaven sparkling around their path, the peace of heaven dwelling within their hearts. It is said that travelers in Alpine regions are encompassed with a clear atmosphere, and cloudless sunshine, whilst traversing the summit of those lofty mountains, at the very time that the world below them is wrapt in mists and darkness, and thunder-clouds are bursting at their feet. Even thus does prayer lift the believer to a loftier and serener region, far, far above the clouds and storms that darken and distract the world below. In that region of purity and peace, the atmosphere is clear and calm; and the light of God's countenance shines brightly on the believer's soul, while he sees the thunder-clouds of earthly care and sorrow rolling beneath his feet; thus realizing the beautiful illustration of the poet:

"As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its base the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on his head!"

Bible Times.

The Bible presents times and seasons, times of judgment and times of blessing. The seven times of Israel's punishment reach over all the years of a nation's desolations, and the land of promise keeps her Sabbaths. Next we have the times of the Gentiles, which are measured by the metallic man, commencing with the head of gold and continuing until the stone rolls from the mountain without hands. Next we have the time, times and a half, which embrace the last half of the great week of Israel's captivity and the Gentile supremacy. During these times we have the times of ignorance and the partial blindness of Israel, then, at the close we have the time of the end, which reaches over the transition period, standing between the ages of peace. After this comes the times of restoration, times of refreshing and the dispensation of the fulness of time, styled by Paul the times of Messiah. Then the mystic table will be supplied with white-robed guests, the mystic body will be replete with members, and the symbolic tree shall be full of branches and the fulness of the Gentiles will come in. Bible times will succeed the times of war and death, and times of blessing will fill the world.—H. V. Reed.

In the Exceedingliest.

"I love to live way up in the exceedingliest," was the substance of the testimony of a saint.

Blessed privilege! Divine provision! There, all weights are dropped, all burdens laid on Jesus. There, is victory and the constant keeping, abiding presence of Omnipotence.

There, is pure spiritual air, and fine views of the cities, valleys, plains, and mountains of the glorious Canaan land, in whose borders only this glorious experience is found.

Wanted!—Whole colonies of saints, who are still camping near Jordan and Jericho, to migrate "into the exceedingliest."—M. W. Knapp.

The elements of happiness in this present life no man can command, but over the blessedness of his own spirit circumstances need have no control.—F. Thom.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, AUG. 16, 1906.

RUSSIA has another uprising to deal with this week. The terrorists struck a blow at the government by attacking the police and destroying property in many sections. Bloody fights resulted, and the accounts read like reports of a battle. Many were killed and many more wounded.

THE committee to whom was entrusted the arrangement of a programme for the Indiana State Conference, and fixing a date and place, has selected Argos as the place, and the time will likely be over the second Sunday in September. A definite announcement will be made in our next issue.

WORD has reached us telling that the beautiful home of Brother and Sister J. G. Haupt, of Crowley, La., was entirely destroyed by fire early in the morning of Aug. 8. The loss includes the extensive and valuable library of Brother Haupt, with his collection of papers, which has taken a life time to gather. Having suffered a somewhat similar loss some years ago, we can realize our brother's feelings, and assure him of our hearty sympathy.

JUST as we are ready to go to press word is received of the death of our aged Brother Jared Benjamin, at Rensselaer, Indiana. He was brother-in-law of Brother D. T. Halstead. He has been a guest at our house in years gone by, and we have been entertained at his home, and we had learned of him as brother and friend, and so esteemed him highly. The family are assured of our sympathy in this hour, but Jesus will not much longer delay his coming, and then will come the glad reunion. With longing hearts we cry, Come Lord. The funeral will be held on Sunday, and Brother A. H. Zilmer will preach the sermon.

The New Creation. No. 2.

DELIVERED BEFORE THE BREAKING OF BREAD AT OHIO CONFERENCE, 1905.

When all things are made new there will be no trace of the old creation; and the new will be adapted in all its elements to the new population prepared during the previous seven thousand years to inhabit it. We have found the proof that Jesus Anointed is the Creator of this new creation; himself being the first element of it that has been created without human intervention. Jesus had no human father, but was created by the Spirit as independently of the will of the flesh as was the Adam, the beginning of the animal or fleshly race of man. It is clearly revealed that the eternal Spirit will produce from the dust, and establish upon the earth a population every individual of which will be like Jesus is now, glorious, incorruptible of body and deathless. God will be bodily manifested in each one of them, for it says Rev. xxi. 3, 4, "And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God. And God shall from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne, said, "Behold, I will make all things new." And he said unto me, Write, for these words are faithful and true. Now, imagine a lapse of time, and he said unto me,—It is done. I am Alpha, and Omega, the Beginning and the end." Beginning of what? Just what he announced at the Beginning of his message! The beginning of the creation of God, the new creation, and having now made all things new, he is the ending of it. And such a constitution or order of things will obtain in relation to them as will be suitable to pure and immortal beings,—to a world of Gods or Elohim. This order will consist of a new government, and a new people. It may seem strange to those who have not particularly studied the matter to speak thus of the kosmos beyond the 1000 years when ALL without exception are immortal and free from all the evil of the present state. But be it remembered, all are not of equal rank, and so that government would seem to be designed for the purpose of affording scope for a diversity of honors, so that he who has distinguished himself more than others in the cause of God, and Christ, and truth, and righteousness, during mortal existence, may be a more distinguished and brilliant star in the firmament beyond the millennial ages. This principle was in force in God's kingdom of Israel. All were Israelites, and a separated people before God, but were not of equal rank. And we know that after its restoration, Jesus and his saints will rule nations as kings and priests for 1000 years, then the priesthood will be abolished, but not the royalty; I think this will continue forever. The millennial order of things is to be abolished as well as the priesthood. Not the globe or planet called earth, but the world of nations consisting of mortal men over which Jesus and his reign during the 1000 years. Jehovah says, however, "Though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee, O Israel." Jer. xxx. 11. All non Israelitish nations are to be abolished. That is, there will be no national diversities in the post-millennial ages. All will be deathless citizens of Israel's commonwealth which continue eternally under a new constitution. The millennial earth will then be purged of all sinful elements, and the rest transformed, so that essentially a new earth or population subordinate to Jesus and the saints, who will be the luminaries of the new heaven, as they will have been of the heaven recently become old, and called by John, the former heaven in which they shone. They now enter a state where there is fixity. They are the sun and fixed stars both of the ages of the ages and beyond. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." Dan. xii. 3. Here is a marked difference,—the great mass of the saved being as the brightness of the firmament but those who have distinguished themselves in the service of the truth, stand out from the diffused as brilliant particular stars. But just as one star differeth from another star in glory in the celestial arch above us, so it will be in the new heavens and beyond. There are places on the right hand and in the left in the glory for whom it is prepared; and there is a place for the Sun of righteousness, and of the twelve apostles on the thrones of Israel. Yet our Lord has shown that the least in the

WIPE AWAY ALL TEARS

GLORIFIED BRETHREN

KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

is greater than the greatest of all the prophets were when unglorified; so that while there is greatness for all, there will exist the least among the great, but glory for all—I would remind you that John was by the Spirit shown that the white-robed company had come out of great tribulation, and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." I have long thought there would be eternally a marked difference between those who under adverse circumstances embrace the truth, and live lives of faith although it involves great tribulation; yes, I have long thought, that those who attain to life and immortality during the thousand years reign of Christ and his saints, and missed the great tribulation, would never rank with those who had to fight all along the rough, narrow way. James says of himself and his brethren, "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a first-fruits of his creatures." And is it not lawful to infer from this, that all begotten by the same means would all be reckoned as first-fruits? The kingdom having come, the announcement of its promised coming can certainly be no longer the subject matter of faith and hope; there is the thing itself before their eyes. And the conditions how vastly easier, less temptation, less opposition, iniquity so abounding. And inasmuch as the 144,000 seen with the Lamb on Mount Zion are also called first-fruits unto God, and the Lamb, they are evidently of the same class with James and his brethren,—they live, do these first-fruits and reign with Christ, to secure the great harvest or ingathering, or resulting from the reign of righteousness and peace for one thousand years. I am persuaded that the sorely tried ones who overcome will for ever reign and that that being so, their authority will be exercised over the unimmortalized

SECOND FRUITS

SECOND FRUITS.

The first-fruits from Jews and Gentiles alike as Abraham's seed and heirs according to the covenanted blessings; and this helps us understand how the elements of the kingdom of God may exist eternally although God be all in all. I think, too, that all who thoroughly investigate this subject of the new creation will begin to see a great mistake to refer to Col. i. 16 and Heb. i. 2 and other like Scriptures connect Jesus Anointed with the creation described by Moses. By careful examination the context, the subject in hand, will show no reference whatever to that creation. He was not the first-born of every creature to that creation—myriads were, as children of Adam, born before him, and only three verses further it explains the matter by saying "Who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead,' that settles the matter or ought to. And we are assured by the 18th verse that as the First-born, he is the Head and pre-eminent among all born from the dead. How could it be otherwise when he is "resurrection and the life of all the rest?

Birth suggests the commencement of life, infancy, youth, manhood, old age, and these various stages are presented to us as applicable to those who have entered Christ put on Christ. For instance: "As new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word;" "I write unto you little children;" "I write unto you young men," "I write unto you fathers." From the premises it is evident that just as natural birth introduces one to life in the flesh, so those in Christ commence their probationary career by newness of life. The first introduces to a state of sin and

ALIENATION FROM GOD.

The second transfers one to a state of reconciliation, favor and freedom. The incorruptible seed has germinated, they are delivered from the dominion of darkness and changed—not organically or physically but intellectually and morally—changed for the kingdom of the Son of God's love. This is the beginning of spiritual life. Peter declares that God, according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. It may be asked what connection has Christ with the birth from above, of water and the Spirit? May it not be [illegible] ing sometimes of the birth of water and of Spirit? I mean, is it strictly correct to refer the birth of water to the baptismal font exclusively, and that of the Spirit to the birth into life at the resurrection? Christ having died, it was necessary that the power of the Spirit be exerted before he could live again. This is referred to by Peter thus: "He was put to death in the flesh, but quickened (made alive) by the Spirit. Hence it is that the same operations are symbolically performed when one is born of water and the Spirit. Having been buried with him by baptism into death, (Rom. vi. 4) when we were dead in sins, God hath quickened us (i. e. made us alive) together with Christ (Eph. ii. 5) whereupon we rise to newness of life." It looks from this standpoint, that all in Christ are in a sense, born of God, who is spirit. John iv. 24. And we find Paul upbraiding the Galatians thus: "Are ye so foolish, having begun in the Spirit, are ye made perfect by the flesh? And then speaking of the general experience during the probation of those in Christ, he declares that "as he was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now." Gal. iv. 29. This helps us to understand Paul when he says, "For when we were in the flesh." Rom. vii. 5. And in chapter viii. 9, "But ye are but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you;" and "ye which are spiritual." Gal. v. 1. To this objection is made on the basis of Christ's statement: "That that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." The expression "is spirit" is substantially the same as that already quoted, "in the Spirit," and of another in 1 Cor. vi. 17, "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit." And bearing on the same point are the words: "The Spirit breatheth where it listeth, and thou hearest the voice thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." The result of the Spirit's breathing is seen, but not the process. We see only that a great change has been wrought—sinful men having become holy, and enmity to God having given place to reconciliation and fellowship. This we do know, that we enter the baptismal waters related only to the flesh, and we rise from them in union with the Spirit. It is then, that God raised us up together and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus..... created in Christ Jesus unto good works. Eph. ii. 6, 10. Hence the force of the exhortation: "If ye were then raised with Christ, seek those things which are above," to the end, that when Christ who is our life shall appear, we may also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 1-3.

NOT IN THE FLESH

This new creation, amazing in conception, and wonderful in its development and consummation, I must leave in an unfinished state for you to follow up. The Table of the Lord before us reminds us that the Lord who bought us went away to a far country to be invested with the insignia of royalty, receive the kingdom so long promised him, and return and receive us to himself. But before his departure he institutes a simple memorial service to remind us of his great love and sacrifice in the past, and to point forward to the time when he will come and fulfil all put on record for us. Blessed Jesus, how we should thank and praise him for this kind and considerate provision for us. He know what was in man, and knew by experience what we would have to suffer from fleshly impulses within, and the mighty torrent of adverse influences all about us,—and nothing would safeguard us like a profound sense of the love that first constrained us—drew us toward him, and give ourselves to him who gave himself for us. O, is it not humiliating to us, to know that after all he had done for us, and would continue to do for us, we need such a touching reminder as this! But alas, we do need it. Let us visit that upper room on the night of the betrayal and listen till we hear those calm and solemn words, "Take, eat, this is my body which is broken for you;" and "this cup is the new covenant in my blood,—this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me." I trust it is the language of all hearts before me, yes; dear Lord, we want to remember thee; we will remember thee. We praise and magnify thee not only for this hallowed privilege of now gathering at thy table; but also for thy gracious promise to be with us [illegible] we do so, we want to draw up very close to thee today, so that every soul of us may at least touch the hem of thy garment so that thou mayest perceive that virtue is going out of thee.

But dear ones it would be a great mistake to think it necessary only to remember him in the closing scenes of his life of sacrifice. We should think of him and remember him as he moved among men and manifested Jehovah's beneficent purpose in creation and redemption,—and his reaching out his loving arms after men who had no claims upon his favor, and in flesh of our flesh set before us an example which if followed to the end of life's journey will make us fit to partake of divine nature. And I pray the little glimpse we may catch of the life of Jesus today may lessen the distance between our lives and service and those of the primitive Christians. It must be evident to every faithful student of the life of Christ that one of its most obvious features was his purposefulness. He was wholly bent upon doing

THE FATHER'S WILL.

This was the ground tone of all his sayings and doings which have been recorded for our benefit. Tens of thousand of our fellows seem to aim at nothing in particular, and drift along under the varying moods, instincts or currents of society and accomplish nothing. Jesus had a definite object in view all the time; this absorbed his thoughts, and drew out his energies. Closely connected with this was his amazing confidence,—and to see him and hear him to advantage we must remember he was made of a woman, that like us, he was capable of being influenced by motives, and that it was partly for the joy set before him that he endured the cross and despised the shame. What was set before him was so set before him by promises and they called for unswerving confidence. This prevented his becoming a creature of circumstances. No habits, customs, tastes, traditions, prejudices or opinions of a school, or not, were allowed to mould him. The leading trait of his character was love to God and he fully realized that the supreme honor and attainment of man was to be at-one-with God in thought and purpose now, and divine nature of existence at last. The love of Christ for man was also a distinguishing trait of his character,—and we should love to remember him as he plods over the hills and valleys of Judea and Galilee preaching the and often at the same time exhibiting the powers of the world to come, by healing the sick, cleansing lepers, giving sight to the blind, and restoring life to the dead, in all of which God was stooping down to us, and manifesting himself to us in the flesh of Jesus. Yes; we ought to dwell upon his every day life, his exhausting toils, his weary walks, his hunger and thirst, and the stolid indifference of the masses, the idle curiosity of others, and the scoffs and insults of still others. We ought to remember him moving away to the Mount of Olives, and spending the whole night in prayer after the exhausting work about the temple and all the contradictions of sinners. O, that all-night prayer, stamps our blessed Lord as the Supplicant,—Savior,—and we should dwell upon it till we are intimately acquainted with, and thoroughly appreciate our Intercessor above.

I love to remember him as he was approaching Jerusalem when the people seemed at last to guess somewhat of his mission, and tore down branches, and rent the welkin with the shout, "Hosannah to the Son of David." But why this slackened gait, this quivering lip, this tearful eye? Jerusalem is in full sight and so near that the stones in the temple could be counted. But he on the colt saw the crowd would very soon shout away with him—his blood be upon us and our children." He saw also across the gulf of 40 years their fearful prayer answered. He saw in advance the Roman eagles swoop down, and almost heart-broken, he wept over it, and said, "If thou hadst known, even thou, in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace, but now they are hid from thy eyes." There's a solemn lesson for us here; some may share a Savior's tears who may never share his great salvation.

"CRUCIFY HIM,—CRUCIFY HIM,"

Gethsemane and its scenes ought to be remembered by us. It was at the foot of Olivet. And every man went to his own place at even, but Jesus had no place of his own to go—and so went to the Mount of Olives. He had no place to lay his head, but Gethsemane was his closet,—and his agonizing prayers there you are all acquainted with,—and should never be forgotten. And when we come to the spot where redeeming love concentrates—Calvary,—after suffering every indignity at his mock trial, and he is nailed to the accursed tree, we find him he prays for his murderers, although denied a drop of water to cool his parched lips and tongue. And when forsaken of his Father in the agonies of death,—it did not swerve him from his perfect loyalty. He was faithful unto death. Blessed Jesus! The grave could hold him but three days. He conquered death on his own territory. He lives again nevermore to die. Blessed Jesus. Is it not glorious to think that he is coming again,—and dear ones time is on the wing. Event succeeds event so fast that we should be warned to set our houses in order for the grand inspection. We should use great diligence to be thoroughly acquainted with the conduct Christ requires of us. It is a tremendous thought that the commandments of Jesus will judge us in the last day. We are only his friends when we keep his commandments. We often seem in a hurry to have him come soon; but brothers and sisters, we have none too much time to get ready! The night is far spent,—the day is at hand. If faithful to the end we shall see the same Jesus,—yes, the same blessed Jesus. If ready, what a meeting that will be

THE SAME BLESSED JESUS

OH WHAT GREETINGS.

Jesus and his redeemed people,—Jesus and his bride, Jesus in all the glory of his Father, attended by a retinue of angels! Jesus arrayed in his loveliest charms; Jesus the heavenly Bridegroom, Jesus the once crucified, now clad in royal vestments, Jesus shining in uncreated light. O think of it just a moment, Jesus and his saints changed gloriously—fashioned like to his own glorious body,—arrayed in the garments of righteousness without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. With beams of love and a countenance radiant with heavenly benignity, he will see in them the travail of his soul and be satisfied. God grant that we may all be in that glad company, Amen.

Youth's Column.

Love One Another.

A little girl, with a happy look,
Sat slowly reading a beautiful book,
All bound with velvet, and edged with gold,
And its weight was more than the child could hold.
Yet dearly she loved to ponder it o'er,
And every day she prized it more;
It said—as she said to her good grandmother,
It said—"Little children, love one another."

She thought it was beautiful in the book,
And the lesson home to her heart she took;
She walked on her way with a trusting grace,
And a dove-like look in her meek young face,
Which said, just as plain as words could say,
"The Holy Bible I must obey;
So now I'll be kind to my darling brother;
For "Little children must love one another."

"I'm sorry he's naughty, and will not play;
But I'll love him still, for I think the way
To make him gentle and kind to me,
Will be better shown if I let him see
I strive to do what I think is right;
And thus, when we kneel in prayer to-night,
I will clasp my arms about my brother,
And say—"Little children, love one another."

The little girl did as her Bible taught,
And pleasant indeed, the change it wrought—
For the boy looked up, in glad surprise,
And met the light of her loving eyes;
His heart was still—and he could not speak—
But he pressed a kiss on his sister's cheek;
And God looked down on the happy mother,
Whose little children loved one another."

The Bird's Visit.

A noted German writer relates a beautiful incident which occurred in his neighborhood, in which a poor man, who owed a debt he was unable to pay, was delivered out of his distress by a song-bird.

He was sitting early in the morning at the house door, expecting an officer to come and distrain him for a small debt; and while sitting thus, with his heavy heart, a little bird flew through the street, fluttering up and down, as if in distress, until, at length quick as an arrow, it flew over the man's head into his cottage, and perched itself within an empty cupboard.

The man closed the door, caught the bird, placed it in a cage, where it immediately began to sing very sweetly. Suddenly some one knocked at the door.

"Ah, it is the officer," thought the man. But no; it was a servant of a respectable lady, who said that the neighbors had seen a bird fly into his house, and she wished to know if he caught it.

"Oh, yes; here it is!" And the bird was carried away.

A few moments after, and the servant came again.

"You have done my mistress a great service," she said; "she values the bird highly. She is obliged to you, and requests you to accept this trifle with her thanks."

It proved to be the exact sum he owed; and when the officer came, he said, "Here is your money, now leave in peace, for God has sent it me."

Touch of the Savior's Hand.

Let me ask you, poor backslider, did you ever feel the touch of Jesus' hand? If so, you will know it again, for there is love in it. There is a story told in connection with our war of a mother who received a dispatch that her boy was mortally wounded. She immediately went down to the front, for she knew that the soldiers told off to watch the sick and wounded could not watch her boy as she could. So she went to the doctor and said: "Would you let me take care of my boy?"

The doctor said: "He has just gone to sleep, and if you go to him the surprise will be so great it may be dangerous to him. He is in a very critical state. I will break the news to him gradually."

"But," said the mother, "he may never wake up, I should so dearly like to see him." Of how she longed to see him.

Finally the doctor said: "Well, you can see him, but if you wake him up, and he dies, it will be your own fault."

"I will not wake him up," she said, "if I may only go by his dying cot and see him."

She went to the side of the cot. Her eyes had longed to see him, and as she gazed upon him she could not keep her hand off that pallid forehead, and she laid it gently there. There was love and sympathy in her touch, and the moment the slumbering boy felt it he said: "O mother, have you come?"

He knew there was sympathy and affection in the touch of that hand. And if you, O sinner, will but let Jesus reach out his hand, and touch your heart, you too will find there a sympathy and love in the Savior's touch.

Waiting.

I am waiting for his coming, and life's greatest charm for me,
Is the hope that he has blest me by allowing me to be
Of those who in his earthly form shall his appearing hail,
When the banners of his glory makes the sun in heaven grow pale,
When the stars shall shout together and the hallelujahs ring,
And the earth, renewed, lie smiling in the presence of the King.

I wonder if he is not even nearer than we think!
Sometimes I feel as we were just upon the brink,
Of something great and glorious, mysteriously grand,
That the Spirit comprehendeth but flesh cannot understand.
And I think the hosts of heaven must be marshaling to tread—
With step and trumpet's clangor—to waken up the dead.

Are our lamps all trimmed and burning? Are we ready for that hour,
When our "bud of expectation" shall break out in glorious flower?
Have we healed all our dissensions, and our brothers all forgiven,
Even tho' their sins against us are as seventy times seven?
Are we ready for his coming?—Oh he may be very nigh!
Are our houses swept and garnished, that he may not pass us by?

Are we ready, oh beloved, in those songs of welcoming,
Our parts to take, rejoicing, at the coming of our King?
Are we living all unspotted from the great alluring world?
Are we 'mid its revelries, our spotless banner furled,
Forgetful of that Master who has bidden us watch and wait?
Oh let us now be faithful, he is surely at the gate!

God Will Sprinkle Sunshine.

If you should see a fellow-man with trouble's flag unfurled,
An' lookin' like he didn't have a friend in all the world,
Go up and slap him on the back and holler, "How d' you do?"
And grasp his hand so warm he'll know he has a friend in you.

Then ax him what's a-hurtin' him, an' laugh his cares away,
And tell him that the darkest night is just before the day,
Don't talk in graveyard palaver, but say it right out loud,
That God will sprinkle sunshine in the trail of every cloud.

This world at best is but a hash of pleasure and of pain;
Some days are bright and sunny, and some all sloshed with rain.
And that's just how it ough to be, for when the clouds roll by,
We'll know just how to 'preciate the bright and smiling sky.

So learn to take it as it comes, and don't sweat at the pores
Because the Lord's opinion don't coincide with yours;
But ever keep rememberin', when nature's your path enshroud,
That God has lots of sunshine to spill behind the cloud.

A Letter and a Reply.

Well, sister, in regard to your idea of soul sleeping will only say I cannot see how any one with a fair knowledge of the meaning of words could ever doubt the immortality of the soul. Listen to Webster (edition of 1899, page 1056) soul, spiritual, rational, and immortal substance in man. The immortality of the soul is a fundamental article of the Christian's system. This from Webster, the greatest lexicographer of the English language. Now listen to Dr. Robinson Bible Dictionary, edition 1859, page 484, The immortality of the soul is a fundamental doctrine of revealed religion. Both of those are based on the Scriptural fact that Adam was made living (immortal) soul. 1 Cor. xv. 45, 46. Natural bodies perish because they are mortal spiritual bodies never because they are immortal or fundamental. But could we take the immortality away from the soul, we would thus destroy the Scripturalness and spiritual foundation of the Christian religion. Respectfully submitted. Your Brother,

G. W. Walden.

My dear brother:

And so you could not see how any one with a fair knowledge of words could even doubt the "immortality of the soul." Well, I am not a scholar of any great renown. I only take the Bible as my guide, it is the rule given to us by the great Teacher who spake as never man spake and he has told us that it shall judge us at the last day. And we find in Rev. xxii. 18-19, that a very great punishment awaits those who add to or take from its words, so we should be very, very careful how we handle the teachings of this wonderful book. First I will say that the term "immortal soul" is not found in this book from beginning to end, it is an added phrase, therefore not a Bible theme at all. As you will find in Gen. iii. 4, Satan, the father of liars originated this falsehood and preached his first sermon on the "immortality of the soul" to our first parents there in the garden of Eden, and what was the result? Why, God drove them out "lest he put forth his hand and partake of the tree of life and eat and live forever." Death was pronounced upon them and the curse has followed down through the ages and is present today. If they were immortal then as you claim, why guard the tree of life? They would not need the tree of life if they already possessed this immortal principle. Now we must conclude that God is all-wise and if he had created an immortal soul, or as you claim a man possessing an immortal soul, do you think he would have thought to prevent him from eating to live forever, certainly not. Such an idea would be preposterous for mortal man himself.

Webster's definition for immortal is never dying. Then if Adam had been created never-dying, could he have eaten to live forever? Of course not. Yet so many people think so and even sing of a "never-dying soul to save"—how unreasonable—trying to save something already saved. Now Gen. ii. 7 does not say that man became an immortal soul, nor does it say he ever came into possession of the same, but we find in Psalms cxlvi. 4, that man returns to earth and his thoughts perish, where is the immortal principle there? I have surely proved to your satisfaction that the form—body and soul are the same, if I have not here are some references, and there are plenty more. Gen. ii. 7; Judges x. 16; Psa. lxxiv. 19; Prov. xi. 25; Mark xiv. 34.

Now let us prove that the soul or body is mortal. Job iv. 17. Shall mortal man be more just than God? Job xxxiii. 22, his soul draweth near to the grave. Psalm xxxiii. 19, To deliver their souls from death and to keep them alive in famine, we see thus that souls need to be kept alive in famine, no immortality there. Then where is this immortal principle? We find in Col. iii. 34, that it is hid with Christ in God. Here is where our immortal life is and the Word tells us in Christ's own language, "Behold I come quickly and my reward is with me." Rev. xxii. 21. Now what is the reward to be? Paul in 1 Cor. ix. 25, says it is an incorruptible crown. Tim. iv. 8 says it is a crown of righteousness. Rev. ii. 10 says it is a crown of life; and Rom. ii. 7 says it is glory, honor, immortality, eternal life; and 1 Cor. xv. 52-54, tells us where we are to get our reward, our immortality. And now I would ask you one more question, if as you claim, we have present immortality, why do we mourn for those who die? You know and who does not, that death is the great enemy of the human race, he snatches our loved ones to his embrace, we are powerless, we can do nothing but follow our loved ones to their last rest and turn away with sad hearts, life looks cheerless, O we miss them so! In vain we try to check the tear, to calm the troubled soul, but if our loved ones had not died; had only exchanged this present life for one more heavenly, how we could rejoice. We would not watch by the sick bed and do all we could to prolong the life of those we love.

I hope I have proved this satisfactorily and also hope I have exposed the unscripturalness of present immortality. The Bible teaches that God is a God of love, a just God and it would be an awful thought to think that he had created a race of immortal sinners. The Bible says that "only God hath immortality," those who claim present immortality place themselves on an equal with God, have you ever thought of that? 1 Cor. xv. is a favorite chapter of mine and a real "soul sleeping" chapter you might say, but you got scared before you got far enough, verse 46 teaches us that, "that was not first which is spiritual," but that which is natural and afterward that which is spiritual. I believe and earnestly contend that Adam the first man was made a living soul, a natural man and was of the earth, lived and died earthy. That the Lord, the second Adam was a quickening spirit, was spiritual; heavenly, and as we have borne the image of the earthy, so we shall (future) bear the image of the heavenly. And the rest of the chapter pictures in our mind the grand consummation of the Christian warfare, our mortality being changed to immortality. You know the Word says "prove all things." I would like to see some proof of this immortal soul theory, but I will say there is no proof, although it has been taught from his Satanic Majesty's first sermon down to Plato and other pagans down to the pope—and coming down to our day, it is hurled from gilded pulpits by fat salaried Rev. D. D.s to a sleeping audience who never stop to inquire of the Word of God to see if it is true or false, and it makes more infidels than all the teachings of Voltaire or Ingersoll ever did. No, dear brother, you and I (if the Lord delays his coming a few more years) will both have to pass through the silent, midnight gloom of the tomb, ere we can claim immortality for our own. But at the last day, at the sounding of the trumpet, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, if we have been found worthy, we will receive our reward, our crown of life, our immortality. If we have our reward now or if we get it at death, we need not expect any when Christ comes. It would be no resurrection to us for we had never died. God grant we may be worthy. May we get our reward and may we enter into the joys of our Lord. Submitted in love,

Your Sister.

Confirming the Word.

Isaiah speaks of Jehovah as the one "that frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish; that confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers," chap. xliv. 24-26; and the confirmation which the historical as well as the prophetical words of the Bible are receiving in these days of flippant infidelity and learned looseness is very remarkable. The following from the Sunday School Times is to the point:—

"How we all used to laugh over the story of the credulous old woman who doubted some of the more truthful stories of her returned sailor boy, but who was prompt to believe him when he told of the raising of a wheel of Pharaoh's chariot with his ship's anchor out of the Red Sea! It was such an obvious impossibility that one of those chariot wheels could have been preserved, even below the bottom of the sea, during thirty centuries and more, that the silliest man could join in the sneer of the accomplished scientist over the weak-minded woman's credulity. Yet here stands the wide world in admiring interest, while the the very bodies of the father and the grandfather of that Pharaoh whose host pursued Moses and the Hebrew multitude down into the bared bed of the Red Sea, are unrolled from the garments of the grave; and as men look into those faces, which struck terror to the hearts of the ancestors of Moses and Aaron, none question the identity of the recovered bodies without subjecting themselves to such sneers as were given to that old woman's reverent credulity. No sooner had the unrolled mummy of Rameses II., the chief oppressor of the Hebrews, been put on exhibition in the museum at Boolaq, than the mummy of his father, Seteo I., was also exposed to view there—as reported to our readers. Seteo I. was probably the father of the princess who rescued the infant Moses from the Nile. He was a mighty conqueror in his day. He was also a predecessor of M. de Lesseps in opening the Suez Canal between the Red Sea and the Mediterranean; and he began again the building of the Great Wall in front of that canal, which had fallen into ruins during the sway of the Shepherd Kings. No chariot wheels are found buried with these kings; but delicate linen cloths which wrapped their bodies are well preserved; and with some of the mummies of an approximate date there are even found intact the funeral garlands—the 'flowers of the field' which are proverbially so frail and perishable. After all, was the old woman's belief so far inferior to that of the scientists? There are strange discoveries now making in the Bible lands; and every discovery is only an added confirmation of the historical accuracy of the Book of books.—Messiah's Herald.

Treasures of the Bible.

The philosophy of the Bible stands immeasurably above all that the mind of man has been able to conceive. We admire the wealth of thought and the keen sagacity of Aristotle, Plato, Socrates, Newton, Locke, Hegel, Bacon and others, but their creations pale before the splendor of Biblical wisdom. Sir Isaac Newton said, "I consider the Word of God the most exalted philosophy;" and Coleridge, "The Bible conducts me to a much greater depth of my Ego than any other book—that is, that the Bible explained most clearly to him his own existence. Rousseau, who was certainly no hero of belief, once wrote: "When we read the works of our philosophers, in spite of all their pomp of style, how poor, how despicable they are in comparison with Holy Writ."

Another defender of Biblical philosophy is Carlyle. He treasured the Bible as the most valuable book, and was wont to exclaim, "Oh, we worldly men and women more to your liking than the fellowship of the people of God? If so, there is something wrong with "your religion" and the sooner you get rid of it and get right with God, the better it will be for yourself and those whom you are influencing.

The fact that you are seeking for pleasure apart from Christ rather than in him shows that you are not where you ought to be.

My brother, my sister, this is a matter that concerns you, and you cannot afford to turn from it indifferently. Take it to the Lord in prayer, and you may become a lover of God more than a lover of pleasure, and mighty for him in both word and deed.—S. P. Ladd.

Christian Activity.

One can make Christlike living not a mere accident of earth, but the greatest concern of life. This needs to be done, not with fear and trembling, nor with an air of apology, but with the knowledge that one is gaining for self, and really accomplishing in a productive way, as truly as if he were creating products by hand. What can be more truly productive, more profitable, than a soul saved from death and unto life eternal? As Christ went about in the years of his public ministry, he made it his work to "do the will of him that sent me." So today, showing kindness, patience, truth, teaching and preaching love, may be made a serious business—not solemn and morbid, but as serious as anything else; not to be any more neglected, lest there be irrevocable loss to the soul, not to be thought of as more of a burden, nor any more a matter of gratuity or choosing to be generous, than earning a living in the ordinary sense of the term. This is not ideal but practical. With all the zest put into worldly business, all the love of activity that keeps men happy in business, those that neglect Christ instinctively turn away from thoughts of the end, because there worldly profits count for nothing. When the life business includes Christian activity, the outlook has no end—one may rejoice in knowing that his efforts will bring eternal profits.

Don't Flatter Self.

Lady Mary Worthley Montagu, the witty traveler, observed once that in the course of her long and extensive travels, she had found but two sorts of people—men and women. Human nature is about the same everywhere, and each of us is remarkably like his or her neighbors. Young people are often tempted to believe that they are different from other people, that no one understands them, and that the ordinary rules of conduct do not apply in their cases. No more fatal bit of self deception can exist than this. It fosters pride, folly, and prejudice, and often leads straight to ruin. "I am not as other men are" is an assertion against which we have a Bible warning.

Look Up.

Murmuring, complaining, dwelling on one's troubles, shows too much of self-centered thought; also it is a sign of measuring things with unspiritual vision. God's world is not one of chance, but of design. To cry out against circumstances beyond one's control is to cry out against what God has appointed and in which he has laid opportunity for growth into a new power and for expansion under a new light. To murmur and mourn and not look up is as if a seed planted in the ground should complain of the dark, when its duty is to begin to grow in the dark and then stretch up into the light, even though it is still rooted in the earth. Instead of chafing under suffering, the Christian is to look up to God for light and soul-nourishment. The sun of divine love will then be more than a match for the darkest surroundings. Often if the same effort which is wasted in worrying and mourning over trials were spent in trying to see the bright side of them, one might learn how to come off splendidly victorious over them and find himself larger, capable of richer fruition, than he ever could have been without the trial.

The Ever-Watching Eye.

A young man of upright character, in the service of a great corporation, found himself—as was every other of the employees—shadowed by a detective, after a robbery from the office of the company. Wherever he went he was watched, although quietly, and at a distance. He would hurry along the crowded street in the hope of getting out from under that eye; but when he looked back or across the way, he would find he had not escaped it. When he looked out from the window of his darkened room before retiring, he would catch a glimpse, by the street lamp, of the man who never deserted him.

The consciousness of this unfailing companionship became a torture. He went to the superintendent of the company, and told him that while he was innocent of any wrong-doing, and was willing to be put to any fair test, he could not stand being always watched in this way. It was more than human nature could bear.

No one of us is ever alone. There is an eye always on us. See Psalm cxxxix. 7-12. Is it the eye of an enemy, or of a friend? Are we under the constant watch of one whom we love and trust, or of one whom we have offended, and from whose presence we have reason to shrink?

Beautiful Reply.

"Who when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had and bought it." Matt. xiii. 46.

A young mother was showing her brother, who had recently returned from college, the presents received by her baby, which he was admiring, when, turning to the mother, he joyously said to his sister, "I declare, I'd be born again, if I could get such a lot of fine presents."

The sister replied: "If you should, you would get the 'Pearl of great price.'"

Lovers of Pleasure.

This is the term used by Paul to describe the great mass of professing Christians who would live in the last days, and the fact of their presence all about us is a proof that we are now in the last days.

What a number there are in our churches who are unable (?) to attend a prayer-meeting on a clear night, but who find little or no difficulty in attending a social, concert or entertainment on a stormy night. They are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. They neglect the things of God, and select the things of the world.

Are you one of these? Remember that your life answers the question. Do you enjoy yourself best in the house of prayer or the house of play? Are you more interested in pleasing yourself than in pleasing God? Do you prefer the good (?) opinions of, and popularity with men, rather than the blessing of God? Is the society of Living for Others.

Life is the gift of God, and how much better for us if we would regard it so! This world is a vast field of usefulness. We can either labor for our own happiness or to promote the happiness of others. How much grander it is to live for others than for ourselves. We are only happy when we see happiness playing around us. The mind is never at rest. It is ever grasping after what it scarcely ever attains.

When you buy a money order see that it is made out for the amount you wish to send—that it is in favor of "The Restitution," and that the right State is named. When an order is drawn on Plymouth, Pa. or Ill. we cannot cash it, but have to send it back. Be careful and see that your post master gets it "Indiana." Don't send a lot of stamps; they get stuck together, and we cannot use them. Sometimes a person buys stamps and then has the letter registered. Announcement.

Northern Kansas and Missouri Conference will convene in Morrill, Brown County, Kansas, Sept. 22, at 8 o'clock P. M., holding over the 30th Sept. inclusive. Morrill is situated on the Grand Island R. R. 54 miles west of St. Joseph, Mo. Preaching brethren: W. L. Crowe and S. C. Oliver, and others if they can be secured. Arrangements will be made to take care of visiting brethren before meeting commences.

PROGRAMME.

First subject, The purpose of God in creation. Perhaps several discourses on the same subject. Next, Why I believe the Bible. Again, Divine government vs. civil government. Again, Conversion. Again, In the church not in the kingdom. Again, The kingdom, What is it. Again, The object of Christ's second coming. Again, What must I do to be saved? Next the congregation will be given the privilege to name subjects. Saturday morning the Conference board will settle the finance affair and officers will be elected for the coming year and Evangelist hired. Now brethren, let us make the meeting a success. How? By coming and helping, your presence will be profitable, yourself will be rewarded. It always has and always will cost something to be a Christian.

We have arranged the meeting for the most leisure time among the farmers. A throng time cannot be excused. We are exhorted to not forget the assembling of ourselves together, and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

By order of the Conference board. Trains due at Morrill from the east, 12:10 M. evening train; 10:10 P. M. From the west, morning 4:45 A. M., afternoon 2:28 P. M.

The twelfth Annual Meeting of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Madison County, Mo., six miles west of Fredericktown, at the new church, on Piney Creek, at Blush. To begin August 25th and continue to Sept. 2, 1906. Every body that can come is invited to attend this meeting. You need not bring any straw ticks, for bedding and board will not cost you one cent while at that meeting. This meeting is 104 miles south of St. Louis, Fredericktown on the Belmont branch of Iron Mountain R. R. six miles west Frederick town, at Blush church, on Piny Creek. Any one that contemplates coming will write to P. J. Graham, and he will see that there are teams at Fredericktown, to convey you to the meeting. Stop at Fredericktown, either way, coming from the north or from the south. A special invitation is given to all the brethren south of St. Louis, the Morse Mill and Vales Mines, and all the scattered ones. Every body come east, west, north and south. Come let us make this one of the best meetings that was ever held west of the Mississippi River. Brethren, if all is well I expect to be at that meeting. By order of the Church at Blush.

JOHN FOUTE.

The 19th Annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus in Iowa will be held at the beautiful Campground at Waterloo, Iowa, August 18th to 26th, inclusive. Rates of one and one-third fare from all points in Iowa have been granted by all railroads; going tickets to be purchased any time from August 17th to 23rd, inclusive, and holders of Certificates for tickets bought during that time will be entitled to return ticket for one-third fare if bought before August 30th. We expect to have the following preaching brethren with us: A. J. Eychaner, S. J. Lindsay, L. E. Conner, Almus Adams, H. M. Lucas, G. Eldred Marsh, John Garton, and others.

For entire program of meeting with full instructions, etc., address G. P. Allard, Corresponding Secretary, Box 86, Fort Dodge, Iowa.

The next annual Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, will convene at Oregon, Ill., Wednesday, Aug. 15, and continue over the following Sunday.

In other years many good meetings have been held here by those of our beloved faith, and to some of us, the place is full of the most sacred memories; but if this year, all will come with hearts full of love and fellowship, and a determination to do their own duty in all helpful ways, it will be truly said by all at the close, that it was good to be there.

An excellent programme is promised and will be published as soon as arranged.

The annual summer Bible School will open on Monday, Aug. 6th, and continue till Conference on the 15th. The good to be obtained at this Bible School in the line of practical Bible study cannot be estimated. This year an especially interesting season is in store for all who can be present, whether old or young or middle-aged. Come and bring a stranger with you.

JAS. W. WILSON, Pres.
EMMA L. SMITH, Sec.

The next annual gathering of the Ohio State Conference, will convene August 23, to 26, in the vicinity of Brush Creek Church. As the church building is small the meetings will be held in a Tabernacle located on the premises of John Lehman one and one-half miles south of Kessler Station.

The Brush Creek Church is located about seven miles from Troy, Ohio.

Let every one who can possibly do so lay aside worldly cares for awhile and meet with us, to work for the blessed Master. Come, let us have our spiritual strength renewed and help to save others.

A cook has been arranged for and all will be boarded for the small sum of 35cts per day. Sleeping arrangements have also been arranged on the grounds. Come prepared to remain through the meeting. Come by the Big Four R. R. to Kessler Station where all will be met. All trains have not been stopping, but will stop during the meeting. Trains going west due at 8:39 a m and 9:18 a m. Going east one train due 5:47 p m.

The brethren at Brush Creek are enthusiastic over the conference and expect to have large meetings. They have their plans well laid and there is no reason why the conference should not be a grand success. Commence at once to arrange to attend.

Syriac New Testament.

A new edition of Murdock's Translation of the Syriac New Testament has just been issued by a Boston publishing house, and we have arranged to supply our readers with the work. The regular price is $2.50, and every Bible student should own this book. It is bound in half leather, and lies open in the hand when being used. The printing is clear and plain, and the paper excellent. We have so arranged with the publishers that we can supply this book for a limited time only at a reduced price, which will enable all who wish this valuable aid to the study of God's Word to possess it. We can offer it now at $1.95 post paid. All who wish to avail themselves of this low rate should do so at once.

The Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will convene at St. Paul Oct. 25 29 inclusive. Meetings will be held in the Court House Hall. Invitation to participate is extended to all. A reception committee will be appointed to meet trains and find accommodations.

FANNIE D. WELSH, Sec'y.

Notice.

I expect to be in Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas this summer, and any wishing pastoral work in reach of my path, please notify me at Attica, Kan.

Notice.

The discussion between myself and Elder John A. Cargile, one of the ablest Adventist preachers in the south, on the restoration of Israel, is now ready for distribution. It is a pamphlet of over one hundred pages, and contains the photo of each writer. The question discussed is, "The Scriptures teach, that the same Israel that has been scattered and dispersed among all nations will be restored to their own land." Dr. T. J. Daniel affirms, Elder John A. Cargile denies.

A few years since we were struggling to build a house of worship in this town. We had no brethren here and myself and wife, with a little outside help built the house. She donated eighty odd dollars out of her own private purse towards this building. She took boarders at a very reasonable rate to raise the money. As an appreciation of her untiring efforts along this line I have made her a present of all the profits from the sale of this book. Every lover of truth ought to have this book to read and loan to his neighbor as it teaches, and defends, the truth upon this subject. I therefore hope every reader will order one and thereby help to some degree a poor woman who has done so much for the cause we love. The house is the nicest house of worship in this town and belongs to the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith. The price of this book is only 15 cents. Address Mrs. Dr. Daniel, Magazine, Ark. Your loving brother.

T. J. DANIEL.
